Ex-Manager A.E. Ragg's Version

Says That Geen Said "By Jove, I Believe I've Been Poisoned."

Likewise States That Geen Took Prussic Acid for Heart Trouble—Believes That the Burglary Was a Genuine One, and Puts a Different Face on Matter.

Toronto, July 31.—Many people in this city cannot understand why Mr. J. M. Spencer's predecessor as manager of Evans & Sons' warehouse, which is shrouded in the mystery in the death of George Whalley, is apparently averse to appearing at the coroner's inquest.

Both the detective department and the Crown Attorney concluded before the first day of the inquest that Mr. Ragg might possibly throw some light on the case, and up till Tuesday every effort was made to locate him with a subpoena, but without success.

Tuesday afternoon Crown Attorney Dewart wired Mr. Ragg at Belle Ewart, where he was said to be summering, and, no notification coming from the telegraph company that the message had not been delivered, it was believed that it had been received by Mr. Ragg. Up till yesterday morning there had been no word in reply but in the morning's mail a letter from Mr. Ragg from the Tifft House, Buffalo, to Crown Attorney Dewart, said there was no need of him attending the inquest. He could throw no light on the mystery, and it would entail considerable financial loss to him if he were to take the time to come to Toronto.' He would see a detective and interview him, giving him everything that he was able to, if the department would send one over to the Tifft House.

Mr. Dewart Insists.

When the Crown Attorney read the letter he immediately conferred with Inspector Stark, and, as a result, it was decided not to send a man over to interview Mr. Ragg, as he suggested, but to despatch a telegram which would tell him how he stood with the Crown Attorney and the Detective Department. The telegram was forthwith sent by Mr. Dewart, practically insisting on his attendance at the adjourned session of the inquest, and stating that, in view of the facts in his possession, his apparent disinclination to appear was, in the mind of the Crown Attorney, deliberate.

To this Mr. Ragg replied by wire this morning, saying that, although he would probably lose the position which he was to have taken with a Chicago firm on Friday, despite that fact, he would be at the inquest with his evidence.

The Inspector's Story.

"I advised the Crown Attorney that there would be nothing gained by sending a man to interview Mr. Ragg at Buffalo, for it was just a question whether he would give the detective any information anyway," said the Inspector. "I saw the letter Mr. Dewart received from Mr. Ragg, and while he says that his coming to Toronto will mean considerable financial loss to him, he doesn't explain why he has kept his address in the dark, eluding any possibility of subpoenaing him in Belle Ewart, until he turns up at the Tifft House in Buffalo, out of the reach of a Canadian subpoena. He says he is expected to take a position in Chicago on Friday. Why, then, does he go to Buffalo en route from Belle Ewart?"

Something Coming.

The work of the detective department is beginning to bear fruit in the case. The discovery of a heavy shortage in alcohol at the warehouse was known to the department many days ago, and where some of it went to is also known. There is a strong probability that something will drop before long.

What Mr. Ragg Says

Toronto, Aug. 1.—A. E. Ragg, former manager of the Evans & Sons branch in Toronto, is in the city to-day. He will remain here until night. Mr. Ragg is supposed to throw considerable light on the mystery surrounding the warehouse sensation. He came to the city last night as a result of some rather animated correspondence between himself and the Crown Attorney Dewart and the head of the local detective force. Mr. Ragg expects to be permitted to give his testimony to-day and be in a position to leave for Chicago on the evening train, where he is engaged in business.

Coroner Young says that Mr. Ragg might be permitted to give his testimony to-day if the situation was urgent enough. In that event, the evidence would probably be taken in the office of the Crown Attorney, and that as far as he knew, it would be public. That would, however, be determined wholly by the representative of the Crown. A coroner's investigation was supposed to be public, but, if in the estimation of the Crown, it was in the interest of justice to withhold any phase of the evidence, it would undoubtedly be proper.

The Crown Attorney refused to be interviewed on the case, and refused to admit that he knew Mr. Ragg was in Toronto last night and would remain here during Friday.

What His Evidence Will Be

In the course of a long interview last night, ex-manager Ragg said:

Geen took a drop per day of prussic acid for heart disease.

A short time before he was found, and while he was apparently well, Geen said: "By Jove! I'm afraid I've been poisoned." This Geen said to Arnott White.

I think there were three men engaged in the burglary.

In addition to our own employes, the watchman and certain employes of Northrop & Lyman had access to the basement.

There was no document in the safe which could be an incentive to burglary.

The key to the Geen mystery will be the key to the Whalley mystery. Geen's body should be exhumed.

I think that Geen and Whalley were poisoned, because one of the burglars suspected that they knew his secret.

The burglary was a genuine attempt because $3 worth of postage stamps were missing, and partition had been demolished to give free play to axe.

For anything that was known there might have been $5,000 worth of money in safe.

Arnot White's Statement.

Arnott White was seen last night. He seemed much surprised when the matter of Geen's statement that he was poisoned was brought to his attention.

"Yes, I did tell Foreman Scott that Geen said: 'By George! I believe I'm poisoned.'"

"Why did you not mention the fact on the witness stand?"

"Because I was not asked. I did not think it so important."

"When did Geen make this remark to you?"

"Oh, about 9 o'clock the morning he died."

"Under what circumstances?"

"Well, I was talking with him about having been sick. I knew he had been feeling rather bad for some time, and he said in rather a joking way: 'I believe I've been poisoned.' He laughed and so did I, and we went on about our business. I never thought of it again until Monday morning, when I found he was dead, then I said to Scott that it was singular that Geen had remarked that he believed he had been poisoned, and then die a few hours later. I don't believe he meant that he thought he had been poisoned that morning, but that he had been poisoned some time before, and that he was sick as a result of it, but really I did not think he meant anything by the remark at the time."

Inquest Adjourned Till Aug. 5.

Coroner Young said last night that the inquest had been formally adjourned until Aug. 5. He could not therefore convene the jury to-day, even to take Mr. Ragg's testimony. It could be taken specially and then read to the jury. As far as he was concerned, if Mr. Ragg's evidence was given to-day the press would be permitted to be present and hear. Still, that matter was in the discretion of the Crown attorney, and he would be governed wholly by his advice.

Thinks It Is Murder.

Mr. Ragg asserts that he has been placed in a false light largely by accident. He says one important telegram from Crown Attorney Dewart failed to reach him, and that he would have come to Toronto immediately had he received that message. He declares emphatically that he knows nothing that will cast light on the mystery of the Front street warehouse, and for that reason could not anticipate the interest the authorities took in his testimony.

At the same time Mr. Ragg expresses the opinion that murder has been done, and that the robbery at least, if not the graver crimes, have been committed by persons thoroughly familiar with the interior of Evans & Sons' warehouse and stock.

HOPE OF LORD KITCHENER

That Sword Will Not Again Be Drawn in South Africa.

Cape Town Sends Sword of Honor For Lord Kitchener to London and It Was Presented to Him Thursday Night —Eulogized Sir Alfred Milner—Sees the Making of a New America in the Southern Hemisphere.

London, Aug. 1.—Amid tremendous enthusiasm, Lord Kitchener was last night presented with a sword of honor, the gift of Cape Town. Sir Joseph Dinsdale, Lord Mayor of London, made the presentation in the course of a South African dinner, which was attended by many notable persons.

When the enthusiasm had sufficiently subsided for Lord Kitchener to make himself heard, he modestly returned thanks for the gift, and expressed the confident hope that, in South Africa, at any rate, the sword would not again be drawn from its scabbard.

Lord Kitchener eulogized Lord Milner, British High Commissioner in South Africa, and made an appeal, based upon his intimate and personal friendship with and knowledge of, the South African administrator, that he be given the confidence and support of the British nation.

Referring to the mineral and agricultural wealth of the new territory, Lord Kitchener said: "You may assure yourselves that you have nothing less than the makings of a new America in the Southern Hemisphere."

He said the question who would supply the energy, brains and money to carry out this great development was one more for his hearers than for himself, but when, as in South Africa, patriotism was joined with self-interest, he was not afraid they would fail to sow the seed and reap the harvest, for which he hoped that those who had recently been in South Africa had prepared.

JOHN A. AULD MAY RESIGN.

M.P.P. For South Essex Said to Be Willing to Quit.

Windsor, Aug. 1.—A rumor is abroad in Windsor that John A. Auld, M.P.P., for South Essex, has signified his willingness to resign and accept a Government position. This is accounted for by some by the fact that the Government party wants William McKee, ex-M.P.P., to act as party whip. Mr. McKee acted in this capacity during his last term, and, should Auld resign, it is said, an effort would be made to put McKee in his place. Others say that Mr. Auld's willingness to resign is due to his foreseeing a near disintegration of the Liberal party in South Essex. A family quarrel, it is said, has broken out in the Government ranks, and Auld is discouraged. Mr. Sutherland, M. P., says he considers the report unfounded.

THE NEW G. O. C.

Lord Dundonald can be congratulated on coming to command the Canadian militia with much in his favor It only seems like last week since the country was ringing with the name of the dashing cavalry officer whose gallant band was the first through the Boer cordon around Ladysmith. He shared with "Poor old Buller" the glories of the Natal campaign, and there were no disagreeable afterevents to dim his brilliant exploits. The new G. O. C. is a dashing soldier, and the descendant of a line of brilliant soldiers. He has led Canadian soldiers in the field and established with them the best of relations. He likes them and they like him. The new Commander is no mere academic officer. He is full to overflowing with ideas. His energy and enthusiasm are boundless.

One would expect great success from such a man, coming to a country in which there is military ardor and a strong desire to do well whatever is necessary to provide for the defence of the country. Unfortunately much depends upon the maintenance by Lord Dundonald of a proper attitude of subordination to his political chiefs. General Hutton was practically expelled from the Dominion for insubordination. At least that was the charge that Dr. Borden, the Minister of Militia, made against him, though it is fair to the Minister to say that the expulsion of General Hutton had previously been threatened by the organ of Mr. Tarte. Dr. Borden's complaint included among other things the statement that General Hutton made some militia promotions which the Minister had not authorized. The Tarte complaint was that General Hutton publicly stated that Canada would, if necessary, send ten thousand men to Africa, whereas Mr. Tarte had stated that the offence of sending the First Contingent would not be repeated.

If Lord Dundonald takes care not to make appointments or promotions of officers until their political qualifications have been passed upon by the machine, if he will not interfere in any way with any matter of equipment and outfit which involves patronage, if he takes care not to say too much in favor of the Empire to which he belongs, he may get along well with his masters. But this is liable to limit his usefulness as a commander.

There are, it will be noticed, a good many "ifs" in the case. Let us hope, for the sake of both Lord Dundonald and the men whom he will command, that they will not prove stumbling blocks in his path. He has proved that he can fairly meet and conquer an open enemy in the field; let us hope he can as successfully steer clear of the pitfalls which in the past caused the downfalls of his many successors.

He has a difficult task before him, considering the narrow gauge political lines upon which the department has been run for the past ten years. It is to be hoped, in the interest of the force, that he may succeed. We shall see.

QUESTION ANSWERED.

Yes, August Flower still has the largest sale of any medicine in the civilized world. Your mothers and grandmothers never thought of using anything else for Indigestion or Biliousness, Doctors were scarce, and they seldom heard of Appendicitis, Nervous Prostration or Heart Failure, etc. They used August Flower to clean out the system and stop fermentation of undigested food, regulate the action of the liver, stimulate the nervous and organic action of the system, and that is all they took when feeling dull and bad with headaches and other aches. You only need a few doses of Green's August Flower, in liquid form, to make you satisfied there is nothing serious the matter with you. You can get this reliable remedy at R. Templeton & Co.'s.

ONLY ONE MAN KILLED.

Troops, 1,200 in Number, However, Overawe Strikers in the Town of Shenandoah—Foreigners Are Blamed.

Shenandoah, Pa., Aug. 1.—Twelve hundred state troops were camped last night on a hill overlooking Shenandoah, Down in the town, where raiders and policemen fought the bloody battle Wednesday night, all is quiet, and the indications are that so long as the militia remains, the peace of the community will not again be broken. Ten thousands of idle men and boys in this vicinity who had been gathering in large numbers and marching from place to place, did not repeat their demonstrations yesterday, and the authorities consequently had little or nothing to do.

The major portion of the population here is made up of foreigners, and, as a rule, they kept close to their homes during the day. It is claimed by the citizens of the town, that the foreign element were solely responsible for the trouble. Contrary to popular belief Shanandoah is not under martial law.

The mine workers are greatly incensed over the calling out of the troops. They assert that the action was entirely unwarranted and is an unjustifiable expense on the state.

Of the twenty or thirty persons who were beaten with clubs or struck by bullets during Wednesday night's rioting, one man, Joseph Beddall, died last night at 10 o'clock. Most of the wounded strikers claim that they were merely onlookers.

The district attorney and the sheriff are prosecuting an investigation, with a view of placing under arrest all those who participated in the riot.

MISS AMY WILSON.

Has Not Yet Been Found—Local Constable Asks Provincial Assistance.

Hamilton, Aug. 1.—High Constable Twiss has asked the Attorney-General's Department to send a provincial detective here to work on the case of Miss Amy Wilson, the 19-year-old girl who mysteriously disappeared from here. The girl disappeared while her mother was on a visit to a neighbor less than 100 yards away. In her room was found a rather strange document, to the effect that she expected to be kidnapped, and which was published at the time.

Frank Collins and John Davis of Dundas state that they saw her in Dundas between 5.30 and 6 o'clock of Tuesday of last week. One asked the other who the little girl was with Amy Wilson. Both persons knew Miss Wilson well.

It has been learned that Miss Wilson has been ambitious to become a manager of some large poultry farm in the United States, and she went so far as to ask her mother if they would allow her to go away if she secured a good position. In the last issue of The Breeders' Advocate, a poultry and dog paper, there is an article on poultry and eggs, signed by Miss Wilson. In the same paper was Miss Wilson's advertisement, in which she offered her fancy stock at cut prices, yet her father says she had only re-entered the chicken business in May. This advertisement might go to show that Miss Wilson contemplated leaving these parts.

A number of doctors think she became insane and went to the woods.

SPARKS FLEW 440 YARDS.

Fire at Newstadt Made a Wide Sweep on Thursday Morning.

Newstadt, Aug. 1.—At 11 o'clock yesterday morning fire broke out at Binkley Bros.' foundry. A strong wind was blowing at the time and the fire soon reached the adjoining buildings. A sawmill, shingle-mill, foundry and dwelling house belonging to Binkley Bros. were completely destroyed. About 1 o'clock p.m. flying embers set fire to a stable and a dwelling house of Paul Miller about a quarter of a mile from the first fire, destroying both, two hogs being burned to death. Binkley Bros.' loss will be $8,000, insured for $1,600. Mr. Miller's loss is about $800, with insurance. The firemen from Mildmay brought over their fire engine, and did good work in protecting surrounding buildings.

AUSTRALIA MINE DISASTER.

149 Miners Rescued, 100 Still Entombed, 27 Bodies Recovered.

Sydney, N.S.W., Aug. 1.—An explosion, resulting in heavy loss of life, has occurred at the Mt. Kimbla colliery at Wollongong, a port forty miles from here. Twenty-seven bodies have been recovered. The buildings at the mouth of the pit were wrecked. One hundred and forty-nine miners were rescued, but a hundred are still entombed. It is feared their release is hopeless. A portion of the colliery is on fire.

Woman Suffrage in Australia.

London, Aug. 1.—Edmund Barton, Premier of Australia, replying to a deputation of woman suffragists, headed by Lady Henry Somerset, said the outlook for woman suffrage was excellent throughout the Australian Commonwealth. The success the movement had already met with in four out of the six States presaged the ultimate adoption of the system throughout the whole Federation, he said.

Three Were Drowned.

Fearmington, Me., Aug 1. — News reached here yesterday that three persons were drowned in Kennebago Stream, near Mooselookmeguntic Lake, some time Wednesday night. THROUGH THE VALLEY.

Lord Rosebery Says Liberal Party Has Seen Shadow of Death For Lack of Concentration.

London, Aug. 1.—Lord Rosebery presided at a largely attended dinner of the Liberal League last night, at which Herbert H. Asquith, Sir Edward Grey, Sir Henry H. Fowler, Richard B. Haldane and other prominent Liberals were present.

Lord Rosebery, in the course of a lengthy speech, dilated upon the recent bye-election for member for the House of Commons to represent North Leeds, which resulted in the elections of Howland Barren, Liberal. Mr. Barran sat at Lord Rosebery's right.

The speaker characterized the North Leeds verdict as having greater significance than any single election since the late Mr. Gladstone was first returned from Midlothian, and as almost a vital blow to the prestige of the Government. Yet Lord Rosebery warned his hearers fifty such elections as that of North Leeds might not turn out the party now in power. It showed, however, that the nation was beginning to look dispassionately at the Government's record in domestic legislation, and to judge with cooler temper than it could during the South African war.

The Liberal party had suffered a long period of sterility, said the speaker; it had been going through the valley of the shadow of death from want of concentration, and it had been allowing itself to become dissociated from the Imperial aspirations of the nation. The party had suffered, continued the speaker, by its unfortunate attitude in regard to the Irish question, and until the Imperialist-Liberal principles prevailed within it there will be necessity for the continued existence of the Liberal League, which Lord Rosebery said did not threaten international union, but formed a rallying point for others sharing the principles of its promoters.

Goes Over to the Liberals.

London, Aug. 1.—Announcement is made that Earl Beauchamp has joined the Liberal League. This formal defection from the Conservative ranks, coming at a moment when excitement is rife over the Liberal victory in the North Leeds bye-election, occasions considerable interest in political circles. It is recalled that Earl Beauchamp, at the request of Colonial Secretary Chamberlain, accepted the Governorship of New South Wales in 1899.

AID FOR STORM SUFFERERS.

Ontario Government Sends Mr. A. W. Campbell to Investigate the Havoc.

Toronto, Aug. 1.—The Cabinet met yesterday with Hon. Mr. Harcourt, acting Premier, presiding. It was decided to send A. W. Campbell to Stormont and Dundas to enquire into the extent of the damage done there by the recent storms, in anticipation of an application for relief. Several letters were read, intimating an application would be sent in due course. If assistance is granted in this case, it will be a precedent as far as relieving the needs of people rendered destitute by storms, although the Government have many cases where aid was granted to fire sufferers. Principal among the cases were the grant of $25,000 to the sufferers in the Hull-Ottawa fire, to Prescott and Russell Counties of $5,000, to Westminster, B.C., St. John, Nfld., and other places.

The main question before the meeting was relating to water powers at Niagara Falls. After discussion it was agreed that a decision would be given in the matter not later than Tuesday morning.

The Export of Hemlock.

It was learned at the Department of Forestry yesterday that the chief object in putting an export duty on hemlock was to prevent its exportation, especially in view of the fact that the value of this particular wood has increased lately in the markets on the other side of the line. It is taking the place to a large extent of the common class of pine in the construction of fences and barns and other coarse work. Of course, another object is to compel any manufacturing with Canadian hemlock to be done in this country.

Hon. Mr. Harcourt, acting Premier, has sent Mr. Burke, one of the factory inspectors, to conduct an investigation into the particulars concerning the accident resulting in the death of the late Mr. Horsey, M.P., at Owen Sound.

Free Grants For Veterans.

It is expected that 2,000 deeds will be issued in the Department of Crown Lands in a few days of land grants to old and modern veterans. This number is now ready for signature. Altogether about 18,000 claims have been received from the veterans, and a staff of officials are busy ascertaining those entitled to grants. Only the veterans of the Fenian raid who saw active service will be given grants.

A petition was received at the office of the Attorney-General yesterday applying for the freedom of M. Viallaincourt, who is incarcerated at Sault Ste. Marie for assaulting a man in an intoxicated condition. It is likely the application will be sent to the Minister of Justice at Ottawa, as it is beyond the jurisdiction of the department here.

Chief of Mafia Convicted.

Bologna, Italy, Aug. 1.—The trial before the Assize Court here, which had been going on for some time, of Trapani, Fontana and Palizzolo, the last named, formerly Deputy from Palermo, on charges of murder, was concluded at 7 o'clock last night. The jury returned a verdict of guilty against Trapani and Palizzolo for the murder of Signor Miceli and against Fontana and Palizzolo for the murder of Signor Notarbartolo. Sentences of thirty years' imprisonment each were imposed upon the three guilty men, who are members of the Mafia. Palizzolo was accused of having, as the head of the Mafia, procured the murders of Signor Miceli and Signor Notarbartolo.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

Montreal, July 31.—There were about 1000 head of butchers' cattle, 500 calves and 1200 sheep and lambs brought to the city for sale since yesterday morning. A good many of these animals were sold yesterday, but the larger proportion of them were offered for sale to-day at the East End Abattoir. The warm weather, together with the large supplies, had a depressing effect on the market, and the prices of cattle were about ¼c per lb. below those paid on Monday's market. There were very few prime cattle, and they were sold at from 5¼c to 6c per lb. Medium stock sold at from 3¾c to 5c and the common animals from 2¼c to 3½c per lb. Canners paid from 1½c to 2¼c for the leaner beef animals. There were a lot of good calves on the market to-day, and they sold at from $7 to $11 each. Common veals brought from $2 to $6 each. Sheep sold at from 2¾c to 3¼c per lb. Lambs sold at from $2.25 to $3.75 each. Fat hogs sold at from 7c to 7¼c per lb., weighed off the cars.

SHE GOT A SEAT.

But Not Through the Instrumentality She Had Invoked.

Humor does not abound in the vigorous atmosphere of the London twopenny tube between 7 and 8 p. m.; therefore the passengers jammed up near the fat, irate woman one evening last week greatly enjoyed the following:

"Thomas (this very loudly while jogging a mild little husband as they both swayed, clutching the leather loops overhead), get a seat for me, I tell yer."

Then: "Nonsense! Yer could find me a seat easy enough if yer wanted to."

More agonized whispers from the husband and more loud demands from the wife. There was great local relief when an irreproachably dressed young man politely gave up his seat. As the woman dropped heavily into it she beamed on him with "Any one can see you're not my 'usband, sir."

The Boethick Indians.

The Boethick Indians of Newfoundland, at one time the aboriginal inhabitants of the island, can now only be counted by one or two skeletons and a few skulls, so completely have they been swept away. The French employed the Mic Mac Indians of Nova Scotia to fight against and exterminate them. The Boethicks were a peaceable and quiet race, given to hunting and fishing. They used canoes made of birch rind and of skins of deer, like the Eskimo cayak. They had no pottery and used utensils of birch rind sewed together, but they employed soapstone dishes as lamps, their form being similar to those among the Eskimos at the present day.

They carved deer and walrus horns and the bones of the seal into ornaments, which they wore on their dresses, and ornamented their heads with combs. The carvings are in triangular patterns, and out of the large collections in the museum at St. John there are no two ornaments having the same pattern. Their stone implements were more rudely constructed than those of the western Indians.

Pat and the Jockey.

Pat went to a race course the other day and fell in with a number of sporting friends who were betting on the races. He was urged to bet, but steadfastly refused until he saw two of his friends win a large sum on one of the races. Finally, after much urging, he put half a crown on a horse, from which moment he became deeply interested.

As the horses came past the judge's box Pat's fingers clutched the back of the seat and his eyes were wide with excitement. The horse on which he had bet finished sixth. Without a word, but with a look of deep disgust, he got up and hurried down to the paddock where the jockeys were. Calling the youngster who had ridden that particular horse aside, Pat inquired in deeply injured tones:

A "Lot" of Land.

A Hartford lawyer is of the opinion that the term "lot" as applied to a parcel of land is an American product, not derived from any other uses of the word. He says: "I have been reading up some of the old histories of my state, of Long Island and other colonial sections recently, and I find that the term 'a lot of land' was originated in the colonies; that it is today considered an Americanism and stands apart from other uses of the word. It originated from the custom of dividing grants for townships, etc., into parcels of land and then numbering each parcel, putting the numbers into a hat or whatever was used and then having them drawn out by those who were to occupy the land. Each man took the parcel corresponding to his number, so his land came by lot literally, and hence the use of the term. This, I presume, is ancient history, but perhaps ancient enough to have been forgotten by most real estate dealers and other people who deal in land and not language."

Lightning and Watches.

"An electrical storm seems to have a peculiar effect on some timepieces," remarked the junior partner of a big downtown jewelry firm. "Every time lightning and thunder get active in this vicinity one of the results is that our watch repairing department is overworked for several days thereafter. The damage wrought chiefly consists of broken mainsprings.

"When business gets dull with us," added the jeweler jokingly, "we require all our employees to pray for a thunderstorm. Failure to comply with this order is considered sufficient cause for discharge. I am unable to make clear the whys and wherefores, but it is an established fact that after the lightning has frolicked awhile in come the watches with mainsprings wrecked."

Wanted Rainwater.

"Boy, bring me a large pitcher of rainwater and a small pitcher of well water," said the woman from the country who just had been assigned to a room in one of the fashionable uptown hotels. "Yes'm," said the boy, with an air of "Now, what kind of a drink's that? It's a new one on me."

At the bar they turned him down. "It's no mineral waters she wants. Just draw two pitchers of Croton from the faucets and pass 'em up to her. Rainwater! I ain't heard of it since I was a boy and lived in the country," said the bartender. "You couldn't use it if you could find it in New York."

GREWSOME INDIAN CHARM.

Its Loss Led the Cheyenne Braves to Leave the Warpath.

Of all the grewsome things in the National museum the necklace presented several years ago by Captain John G. Burke of the United States army stands unequaled as a monument to Indian cruelty and superstition. This necklace consists first of all of a long buckskin cord made by rolling up a large strip of skin and sewing it along the border so that throughout its entire length it will measure something over an inch in circumference, or about a third of an inch in diameter. This cylinder of buckskin is covered with beadwork so that no part of the skin is exposed. The beads are sewed on in rather tasteful patterns, the colors of which are white and blue. A thin buckskin string is attached to either end of this thick, bead incrusted cord, by means of which the cylinder is tied about the neck of the wearer.

Hanging from the underside of this necklace and running throughout its entire length are twelve human fingers and several small flint arrowheads of peculiar shape and workmanship attached by buckskin strings. In the middle of the necklace depend three small medicine bags made of the tanned hide or skin of human beings. These bags contain charm stones and other paraphernalia of the medicine man.

The human fingers, forming the most conspicuous feature of the necklace, are complete, having been cut off between the middle joint and the knuckle. They have been dried in such manner as to preserve their natural color, finger nails, etc., and look as fresh as though they had been removed only a few hours.

During General Crook's campaign against the Sioux and Cheyennes in 1876 the Fourth cavalry and a detachment of Indian scouts under Colonel R. C. Mackenzie surprised and stormed the chief town and principal stronghold of the Cheyennes. During or, rather, after this engagement one of the Indian scouts, Baptiste Pouvier, better known as Big Bat, entered the lodge of the chief medicine man of the deserted village, and among other things that the medicine man had overlooked in his hurried flight from the town the scout found this curious necklace. Big Bat gave the necklace to Colonel Burke, who later turned it over to a student of Indian religions and superstitions, and he in turn presented it to the National museum.

Subsequently something of the history of this necklace was learned. The fingers were those of famous enemies noted for their superior courage and bravery whom the Cheyennes had killed in battle during their various wars, while the human skin of which the medicine bags were made was also taken from the bodies of enemies slain in battle. The necklace is very old and was looked upon by the Cheyennes as a thing endowed with miraculous powers. Prior to its capture by Big Bat it had belonged to a famous medicine man of that tribe, who had never allowed any white man to lay eyes on it, and its loss put a very sudden and abrupt end to the Cheyenne war. The Cheyennes tried hard to get it back, offering a large sum of money and a great many horses for its return, but this was refused, and since then the Cheyennes have remained at peace with the whites.

His Calvinized Hat.

"A generation or two ago," said a Boston clergyman, "old Dr. Ellis was a well known figure in Boston, being one of our famous Unitarian ministers, a friend of many of the transcendentalists. He used always to wear a white panama hat in summer. The same hat did him season after season, yet it never seemed to lose any of its fresh whiteness.

"One day a minister of the old persuasion and very pronounced in his orthodoxy asked Dr. Ellis how he kept his hat so white.

"'That is easy,' said the doctor, 'for it has been Calvinized.'

"'What?' said the other minister. 'How do you galvanize a hat?'

"'I said Calvinized,' replied the Unitarian.

"'But what do you mean by that?'

"'Dipped in brimstone,' said Dr. Ellis."

Mackerel or Bonita?

"Not one person in ten who order Spanish mackerel at the average restaurant ever gets it," said a Washington market fish dealer. "Spanish mackerel are a good deal like Mocha coffee or canvasback duck, because it's very difficult to get the genuine article and so easy to fool customers.

"Some of the fashionable restaurants are not above serving a bonita now and then when an order comes for Spanish mackerel, and I know that in the cheaper restaurants striped bass, bonitas, weakfish and sometimes even the common mackerel are served for this delicious dish."

The Boston Boy.

"Lookin' fer a bird's nest, sonny?" asked the good natured westerner of a seven-year-old boy whom he met in Boston common.

"No, sir," replied the intellectual prodigy as he continued to gaze up into the tree. "I am merely endeavoring to correctly classify this tree as a botanical product."

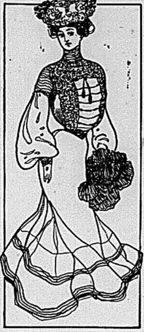
TAFFETA COSTUMES.

All White Dresses of This Silk Very Smart.

There is a craze for taffeta petticoats of every description. They have almost entirely taken the place of the white cambric and muslin underskirts. The evening petticoats are most elaborate, some being made of peau de soie trimmed with lace and insertions, while the cut is quite as important as that of the outer skirt. When all is said, the taffeta skirt is not so much of a luxury as one would imagine, especially for the evening, when pale shades can be worn many times without their getting soiled. They save the hem of one's frock as well as the laundress' bill, for a lawn petticoat can seldom be worn twice without a visit to the washtub, which is likely to prove expensive, as the skirt of the hour is compounded of a multitude of frills and tucks.



WHITE VEILING DRESS.

In the picture there is a smart white veiling gown. The waist has a tucked collar and short yoke; the rest of the fullness is laid in horizontal tucks and trimmed with three wide bands of lace applique. The sleeves are very full and reach to the wrists. The skirt clings about the hips and has two gored ruffles around the bottom.

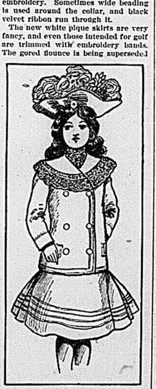
DETAILS OF DRESS.

Children's Pique Coats—Yachting Costumes.

Silk gloves are the proper thing to wear now that warm weather has set in.

Pique coats are very fashionable for children, and these little garments are trimmed with bands of embroidery. The wide collars are made also of the embroidery. Sometimes wide beading is used around the collar, and black velvet ribbon run through it.

The new white pique skirts are very fancy, and even those intended for golf are trimmed with embroidery bands. The gored flounce is being superseded by the skirt, which is laid in wide tucks stitched down flat, but allowed to flare around the ankles.



CHILD'S COSTUME.

Yachting costumes of white pique and white mohair trimmed with bands of taffeta will be as much worn as ever this summer. Even the shoes and stockings will be white to match.

A little girl's summer costume is here depicted. The jacket is of white pique with a wide collar of embroidery in a double breasted effect. The gown worn under it is of tucked white organdie. The leghorn hat is trimmed with three huge rosettes of soft blue ribbon and a wreath of green leaves and berries.

THEY DROVE PIMPLES AWAY.—A face covered with pimples is unsightly. It tells of internal irregularities which should long since have been corrected. The liver and the kidneys are not performing their functions in the healthy way they should, and these pimples are to let you know that the blood protests. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will drive them all away, and will leave the skin clear and clean. Try them, and there will be another witness to their excellence.

There are 38 letters in the Russian alphabet.

HAD LA GRIPPE.—Mr. A. Nickesson, farmer, Dutton, writes: "Last winter I had La Grippe and it left me with a severe pain in the small of my back and hip that used to catch me whenever I tried to climb a fence. This lasted for about two months, when I bought a bottle of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil and used it both internally and externally, morning and evening, for three days, at the expiration of which time I was completely cured."

Their gentle action and good effect on the system really make them a perfect little pill. They please those who use them. Carter's Little Liver Pills may well be termed 'Perfection.'

AT DEATH'S DOOR.—DYSPEPSIA CONQUERED.—A GREAT MEDICAL TRIUMPH.—Gentlemen,—My medical adviser and others told me I could not possibly live when I commenced to use Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery for Dyspepsia. My case was one of the worst of its kind. For three years I could not eat meat and my weight decreased from 219 to 119 lbs. All the food I took for thirteen months previous to taking the Vegetable Discovery consisted of milk. I am now entirely cured and have regained my usual weight, can eat anything with a keen relish and feel like a new man. I have sold over thirty dozen Vegetable Discovery since it cured me, as I am well-known and people in this section know how low I was, and thought I could not possibly be cured. They are eager to try this grand medicine. It certainly saved my life as I never expected to recover when first I commenced using it. I am not exaggerating anything, but feel glad to be able to contribute this testimonial and trust it may be the means of convincing others of its merit as a certain cure for Dyspepsia.

Signed, JEAN VALCOURT,
Wotton, P.Q. General Merchant

It is better to have a light purse than a heavy heart, but more comfortable to have neither.

Very many persons die annually from cholera and kindred summer complaints, who might have been saved if proper remedies had been used. If attacked do not delay in getting a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial, the medicine that never fails to effect a cure. Those who have used it say it acts promptly, and thoroughly subdues the pain and disease.

FOR INFLAMMATION OF THE EYES.—Among the many good qualities which Parmelee's Vegetable Pills possess, besides regulating the digestive organs, is their efficacy in reducing inflammation of the eyes. It has called forth many letters of recommendation from those who were afflicted with this complaint and found a cure in the pills. They affect the nerve centres and the blood in a surprisingly active way, and the result is almost immediately seen.

If you have a cough or cold do not neglect it; many without a trace of that hereditary disease have drifted into a consumptive's grave by neglecting what was only a slight cold. Had they used Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup before it was too late, their lives would have been saved. Mr. A. W. Levy, Mitchell, writes: "I think Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup the best preparation on the market for coughs and severe colds. About six years ago I caught a severe cold which settled on my lungs, and for three months I had a cough. I had a physician attending me, but gradually grew worse until I was on the verge of Consumption, and had given up hopes of being cured, when I was induced to try Bickle's Syrup. Before I had taken one bottle I found myself greatly relieved, and by the time I had finished the second bottle I was completely cured. I always recommend it for severe colds and consumption."

Excuse these tears, which are shed for that nondescript and universally despised individual, the Irish professional politician. There are rocks ahead for him, and here is the reason—that evergreen country, Erin the beautiful, was never so prosperous as she is to-day. For this we have the word of Mr. John D. Crimmins, of New York, a prominent contractor, formerly Park Commissioner of New York, a Democratic Presidential elector and a member of the New York State Constitutional Convention, who went back to the home of his fathers this spring and spent considerable time looking about, chiefly in the rural districts. He attended fairs, races and horse shows and talked with men whenever he could. The people of Ireland, Mr. Crimmins says, are a fairly prosperous people now and will be much more so soon. There is plenty of money in the banks, 7,700,000 acres of land are used in raising grass and 1,700,000 acres are under cultivation.

Mr. Crimmins quotes Mr. McCann, M.P., as to yearly income of the Irish people. Mr. McCann gives it as $200,000,000, and of this not less than $160,000,000 comes from agriculture. Irish farmers can get good prices for their cattle and pigs, for one thing, and Irish butter is steadily gaining in popularity in the English market.

The great question in Parliament is the question of ownership and rental of the land in Ireland. Sixty-three thousand farmers have solved the question for themselves by purchasing their farms, and new purchasers by tenants are being reported daily. Farm laborers get four shillings and sixpence a day, or fifteen to twenty pounds a year, with board and lodgings. Moreover, Ireland resembles Manitoba in this respect—that the farmers cannot find enough men to work during the busy season.

Taking the above circumstances into consideration, who can help shedding tears for the Irish professional politician, who, like Othello, will soon find his occupation gone!

It is deeply to be regretted that even one of the 2nd Canadian Contingent should have been guilty of an act which brings discredit upon the force. It is stated that one of the officers was caught cheating while playing cards, he having swindled his fellow officers by the means of "marked cards." The report is that the "General in command at Pretoria has sent a communication on the subject to Ottawa, stating that in the meantime the officer's medal and gratuity are withheld." It is also stated that "the officer referred to is an Ontario man, who, on his appointment to the force did not hold a commission in connection with the militia." It will be interesting to know why such a man was appointed, while there were hundreds ready to serve who held commissions and had strong claims. Some political heeler, no doubt.

It is said Sir Oliver wants another term as Governor of Ontario. It is natural that he should wish to die in harness. Sir Oliver was elected to Parliament in 1857, became Minister of the Crown in 1858, went on the judicial bench in 1864, resigned his seat on the bench, and became Attorney General of Ontario; 1896, left the local House, was appointed Senator and Minister of Justice, and in 1897 became Lieut.-Governor of Ontario, and now wants another five years as Governor, which is not likely, from what has transpired, will be granted. There are too many looking for positions to allow his honor any further favors, thinking that over 40 years feeding at the public crib is quite sufficient.

DISGRACES HIS COUNTRY

MILITARY SCANDAL IN PRETORIA OVER AN OFFICER FROM ONTARIO.

Ottawa, July 31.—A serious scandal has arisen affecting one of the officers of the 2nd Canadian Mounted Rifles. The matter has been discussed privately in military circles for some time, but it has reached such a stage now that official action will have to be taken. The officer referred to is an Ontario man, who, on his appointment to the force, did not hold a commission in connection with the militia. It seems that he is a great poker player and won hundreds of dollars from his brother officers. His extraordinary run of luck simply amazed those whom he played with, but the secret is out, when it is discovered that the cards which were used, the property of the officer in question, were marked. The General in command at Pretoria has sent a communication on the subject to Ottawa, stating that in the meantime the officer's medal and gratuity are withheld.

BAY OF QUINTE FISHERMEN WANT STOP PUT TO PRACTICE.

Kingston, Ont., July 31.--The Canadian fishermen about the Brothers, Four-mile Point, Salmon and Snake Islands, at the junction of the Bay of Quinte and Lake Ontario, are up in arms against New Yorkers, who, in elegant steam yachts, without leave or license, despoil the waters. The Canadians are demanding that the authorities protect their rights, and compel the New Yorkers to comply with the law, procure licenses, and also to make Customs entry at the nearest port in Canadian waters. This is not done, as the yachts come up the river, and without authority, fish and return to the islands with their catch.

DEATH OF A VETERAN

HE WAS A BRAVE SOLDIER AND SAW MUCH SERVICE — HIS CAREER IN THE ARMY.

The following, from the Kingston News, refers to an old veteran who was known to people in this city. It will be read with interest by all who honor brave men:

Last night at 6.50, James Wooton, a veteran of the Crimean War, laid down his colors and answered the last roll call. The deceased's stalwart figure was among the land marks of the city during the past decade. The strong active soldier who carried himself with manly bearing, was popular, especially in military circles. Many a thrilling tale of hard fought battles against the Russians could he tell. During the past ten or twelve years the venerable soldier's locks became more hoary, but he did not bend with age like the most of mankind.

The late Color-Sergeant Wooten represented the type of a British soldier whose courage was never known to fail, whose duty to his Queen and country was undying. He was born at Macclesfield, England, on the 16th of November, 1828. On the 13th of April he enlisted in the 63rd Regiment or the Manchesters. They were stationed at Newcastle when he joined. The year 1854 was a stirring one for the young soldier. On the 14th of November he landed in the Crimea and during a frightful struggle with the Russians he fought the battles of Alma, Inkerman, Balaclava and Sebastapol. At the battle of Inkerman he was wounded in the thigh by a bullet. While lying on the ground he was struck in the back with a fragment of a shell and was pierced in the chest with the bayonet of a Russian. When he regained consciousness he was in the ward of an hospital ship and was nursed by the celebrated Miss Florence Nightingale. Records state that the killed and wounded at the battle of Inkerman were 15,000 Russians and 5,000 of the allied forces. T. Morris, an officer of the Horse Guards in his account of the battle in his little volume, "The Three Sergeants," says the color party encountered the Russians heavily entrenched. Ensign Twisden was shot down. Color-Sergeants F. Overy and J. Wooton, both powerful men, who fought gallantly throughout the early part of the battle, were shot down. The late veteran wore the Crimean and Turkish medals. On the first named medals were clasps for the battles of Alma, Inkerman, Balaclava and Sebastapol. He also wore another badge for distinguished conduct. His name was inscribed on the honor roll of the sergeants' mess of his regiment, and strange to say that some of the sergeants of the Manchesters who were in the war in South Africa told the members of the R.C.F.A. about seeing the name in their mess room. Color-Sergeant Wooton suffered from three attacks of fever. The fact that he survived the repeated ravages of disease marked him as a man with a splendid constitution. The hardest experience that he had during the campaign was one night when he lay down in the trench with water in the bottom. When he awakened in the morning one side of his face was so badly frozen that a number of his teeth fell out. After the close of the Russian war the deceased came to Canada, landing at Halifax, June 2nd, 1857. The 52nd and 53rd Regiments were amalgamated and returned to the Old Country. Many of the soldiers remained behind and joined the Royal Canadian Rifles, Mr. Wooton was one of those who joined the new regiment and came to this city with it. Some border trouble was brewing at the time and the deceased acted as sergeant of a lookout party at Wolfe Island. He served in the Fenian Raid and had a medal for that action. After taking out his discharge Sergeant Wooton did police duty at the outer Grand Trunk station. He joined the police force in 1880 and served about ten years. In the year 1860 the deceased was married to Sarah Tracey, of Halifax. He leaves a wife, four sons, John and James, of this city; William Henry, of Syracuse, N.Y., and George of Foxboro, and one daughter, Mrs. Snyder, Syracuse, N.Y.

REVOLUTION IN NEWFOUNDLAND.

Since the introduction into Newfoundland of the new Inhaler Remedy, "Catarrhozone," the treatment of catarrhal diseases has been entirely revolutionized. The old-time snuff and internal medicine has been cast aside and everyone is inhaling Catarrhozone; it clears the head and throat in two minutes, and is very agreeable and pleasant to use. Catarrhozone is a wonderful cure for Coughs, Colds, Catarrh, Asthma, Bronchitis, Lung Troubles and Deafness. It relieves quickly and cures permanently. We advise our readers to try Catarrhozone. Price $1.00, trial size 25c. Druggists, or Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

MIXED THE NOTICES.

A clergyman upon introducing some new hymn books, requested the clerk to give out the notice just before the collection. The clerk forgot, and instead read out; "All those who have children that they wish christened will kindly let me know after the service." The clergyman was very deaf, and added blandly: "And I should like to add, for the benefit of those who have none, that they may be obtained in the vestry any day between three and four o'clock, the ordinary little ones at twenty, and the special ones with red backs at thirty-five cents.

Satisfactory Results

When asked regarding the result of their great July clearing sale, Mr. Gorman, of Gorman's Shoe House, said:

"The sale has been a great success, we have turned a large amount of goods into cash; this was accomplished by fulfilling our promises of liberal reductions."

"The public fully realize," continued Mr. Gorman, "that when the Corner Shoe House puts on a sale, it does so in earnest and that the reductions made are exactly as advertised."

In conclusion, Mr. Gorman said:

"During the month of August we purpose clearing out all the odd sizes left over from the July sale; this sale will be called an 'Odd Size Shoe Sale,' and we purpose making it just as successful as was the July clearing sale.'"

Literary Notes

WILSHIRE'S FOR AUGUST.

Both in the quantity and quality of its contents Wilshire's Magazine for August surpasses any previous issue of that eccentric publication. Sir Charles Dilke, Gladstone's Under-Secretary of Foreign Affairs, has a chatty personal letter to the editor on the effect of the American Trust in England and gives his views on the question of the nationalization of public utilities. In addition to the contributed articles, there is a splendid assortment of miscellaneous matter that greatly adds to the interest of the number and makes it one of the greatest magazines of the month.

Providing For a Wayward Son.

Lord Chesterfield gave advice to his son in sundry letters, which might or might not be followed, but in his will he took good care that "my godson, Philip Stanhope," should have strong inducement to follow his advice on at least one point. All the bequests are subject to the condition that if Philip should keep race horses or hounds or stay one night at Newmarket, "that infamous seminary of iniquity and ill manners," during the course of the races there, or should lose on any one day by betting or gaming as much as £500, then in such case he shall forfeit £5,000 to the dean and chapter of Westminster for every such offense.—All the Year Round.

Know Your Own Capacity.

If the people about you are carrying on their business or their benevolence at a pace which draws the life out of you, resolutely take a slower pace; be called a laggard, make less money, accomplish less work than they, but be what you are meant to be and can be. You have your natural limit of power as much as an engine—ten horsepower or twenty or a hundred. You are fit to do certain kinds of work, and you need a certain kind and amount of feel and a certain kind of handling.

WONDER OF URANIUM.

Its Invisible Radiance, Discovered by Becquerel, Made Use of in Recent Extended Photographic Experiments.

Prof. George F. Parker, of the University of Pennsylvania, has been experimenting with uranium, whose invisible radiance was discovered by Becquerel and with the new radioactive metals polonium and radium, found in pitch-blende by Madame Currie.

He recently exhibited a series of photographic plates on which impressions had been produced by these substances. His procedure has been as follows, says Scientific American:

A photographic plate was enclosed in black paper and then covered with yellow paper. After one whole day's exposure to the sunlight no effect was produced. This precaution proved the thoroughness of the protection. Then the various metals and salts were placed outside the covering of the plate and they produced dark stains.

In order to take photographs of objects such as a hand or foot these objects would be placed between the metal and the plate and the result would be similar to those obtained by the "x" rays. Such substances as bone show clearly through the flesh and surrounding tissue. A photograph can be taken by means of radium in half a minute.

The property of a new metal is apparently of great practical value. The results of the "x" rays, now so useful in surgical diagnosis, can be duplicated by a method much cheaper. Radium seems to suffer no diminution of energy or loss of weight during the process. In addition to producing an impression on the photographic plate, radium produces phosphorescence and discharges electrified bodies. Thus it will be seen that it possesses all the qualities of the Roentgen rays.

Radium apparently violates one of the fundamental laws of physics, namely, that of the conservation of energy. It does not appear to derive its photographic power from the sunlight nor lose it by expenditure.

Danger in Celluloid.

In 1898 The Lancet, of London, appointed a commission to investigate the subject of the accidental catching fire of celluloid ornaments, which showed, by placing a celluloid comb in a wig at various distances from a glowing fire, the probability of accidents to wearers of such an article. It was further found that a curling iron heated to the temperature necessary for curling readily started the evolution of dense and highly-inflammable fumes. The danger of exposing celluloid toys in shop windows near electric lamps was shown. The following illustrate the accidents from celluloid: A man while smoking a cigar was playing an American organ with celluloid keys. Some red-hot ash dropped on the keys, and they burst into flames, which were extinguished with difficulty. A boy was wearing a celluloid collar tied with a string. To remove the collar he burned the string. The collar ignited and lighted drops of the composition fell on his clothing. His throat and face were badly burned. A woman seated before a fire which was not unusually strong found her hair enveloped in smoke and flames from ignition of her comb. Before the flames could be extinguished an area of scalp 4 x 1½ inches was destroyed. The burn was to the skull and the hair of the injured area was permanently destroyed. It is urged that the Government should interfere and compel the manufacturers of celluloid to render it less inflammable.

Cleaning Jewels.

With the exception of pearls jewels may be washed with warm water and pure soap. They should then be put in boxwood sawdust to dry. If this is done, polishing will be unnecessary. As boxwood sawdust is very fine, it will not scratch, and as it absorbs moisture rapidly it helps to give jewels a high polish. It can be procured from any dealer in jeweler's supplies or ordered through a jeweler.

AVOIDED THE LUMBERMAN'S HOSPITAL AND CURED THEMSELVES BY USING

Lumbermen prove their confidence in Dr. Chase by buying his remedies and using them instead of the hospital treatment supplied them without cost. An interesting letter.

Mr. John L. Hickey, now caretaker of the Public and High Schools, Trenton, Ont., stated;—"I have used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and found them the greatest medicine I ever tried. I used them when in the lumber camps and believe by keeping the kidneys and bowels regular and the general health good that they protect a person from catching contagious diseases which are so common in the camps.

"I have seen hundreds of men using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills in the lumber camps. They buy them by the dozen when going in, and to show how much faith they have in them they buy them when they could get their medicine for nothing by going to the hospital camp. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills keep my liver, kidneys and bowels regular and my health good. I would not think of being without them."

THE RAINBOW.

Lasting Superstitions That Hang About the Arch of Promise.

"Rainbow gold" used to be the warp and woof of many a childish dream. The pot of treasure buried "where the end of the bow touches the ground" has been searched for by trusting children again and again. The present generation of childhood is so blase, however, that such gentle fantasies are apt to be received with scorn.

There are many lasting superstitions connected with the arch of promise, however. In many countries the rainbow is spoken of as being a great bent pump or siphon tube, drawing water from the sea by mechanical means.

In parts of Russia, in the Don country and also in Moscow and vicinity, the rainbow is known by a word which is equivalent to "the bent water pipe." In nearly all Slavonic dialects it is known by terms signifying "the cloud siphon," and in Hungary it is "the pump," "Noah's pump" or "God's pump."

In the province of Charkov, Russia, the rainbow is said to drain the wells, and to prevent this many are provided with heavy, tight fitting stone platforms. In the province of Saratov the bow is said to be under the control of three angels, one of whom pumps the water, the second "feeds" the clouds, and the third sends the rain.

The Malayan natives call it by the same name that they do the banded water cobra, only that they add "boba," meaning double headed, the equivalent in English being "the double headed water snake."

The Turkish children are told that if they can touch the rainbow they will at once have silver heads, eyes of ruby and teeth of gold. In Greece they say that the person so unfortunate as to stumble over the end of the rainbow will have his or her sex changed instantly.

The One Man Right.

Copernicus was at one time alone in his belief that the earth and planets revolved round the sun. Galilei was right when he asserted that the moon revolves round the earth, and so was Columbus when he asserted the possibility of sailing round the world. But in all these cases it is possible that others, unknown to fame, may have shared their beliefs.

There are two instances in which one man was absolutely right and, so far as we know, all the rest of mankind wrong. One was that of Newton, the discoverer of the principle of universal gravitation, and the other was that of John Harvey, who was absolutely alone in his conviction that the blood circulates through the veins and arteries of living animals. In this instance so universal was the disbelief that his fellow doctors nicknamed him "the quack," or "circulator," and the word survives to this day as the name of one who makes a profession of medical knowledge which he does not possess.

Justice Greater Than Charity.

The one divine work, the one ordered sacrifice, is to do justice, and it is the last we are ever inclined to do. Anything rather than that. As much charity as you choose, but no justice. "Nay," you will say, "charity is greater than justice." Yes, it is greater; it is the summit of justice; it is the temple of which justice is the foundation. But you can't have the top without the bottom; you cannot build upon charity. You must build upon justice for this main reason, that you have not at first charity to build with. It is the last reward of good work. Do justice to your brother (you can do that whether you love him or not) and you will come to love him. It is all very fine to think you can build upon charity to begin with, but you will find all you have to begin with begins at home and is essentially love of yourself.

The Word "Awful."

In Mrs. Oliphant's "Life of Principal Tulloch" of St. Andrews we find Dr. Tulloch speaking of some one as "an awful Tory." Mrs. Oliphant says in a footnote:

"Lest the principal should be accused of slang, I may say that the adjective is strictly Scotch and had been employed for generations by a people fond of strong speaking before it crossed the border and gave to the youth of England a freshly energetic if inelegant word."

Freckles.

Some people are born freckled, and others have freckles thrust upon them. The former class might as well accept their freckles as a dispensation of Providence, for nothing can be done for them. The latter can always get rid of their affliction by using a couple of drams of sal ammoniac with an ounce of German cologne, the solution mixed with a pint of distilled water. Applied two or three times a day it will cure the worst case of acquired freckles on record.

Horrible Thought.

Towne—I suppose you've heard about Kudley, that awful cynic, losing his mind?

Browne—No? My, that's terrible!

Towne—Oh, I don't know. I haven't any sympathy—

Her Way of Putting It.

"It was real cheap, hubby, dear. Only a dollar something a yard."

"How much is 'something?' What was the price?"

"It was $1.98."

Quit quarreling with your neighbors, and the judges and lawyers will soon cease to run everything, as at present.—Atchison Globe.

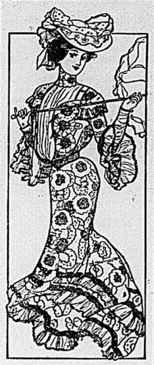
MUSLIN GOWNS.

Creations Both For Dressy and Ordinary Occasions.

The fine summer weather will permit of the wearing of much muslin. The frivolous gown of muslin is a mass of dainty frills and lace, with the goods cut out from underneath in order to show a dainty slip of taffeta or lawn in some pale color. The useful type of muslin is of a more solid substance, the muslin not transparent and corded in a stripe or check design strewn with floral sprays of colored blossoms.

Organdie muslin has lost none of its charms and is now so silky in texture and so charming in coloring that it is used for fete and garden party gowns. The finer swiss muslins, with pompadour groups and bouquets of flowers, are as transparent and closely resemble mousseline de soie.

When tucks appear on the skirt, a cluster of them makes a nice finish for the back, or tucks in grouped lines can be arranged around the skirt, letting one group form the center line of back and front. The muslin gown, however, fits as tightly around the hips as the skirt of silk or wool.



ORGANDIE GOWN.

A handsome organdie gown is the subject of the sketch. The waist is made with a soft front of white chiffon. The fullness opens over this blouse fashion. There are a frilled collar and elbow sleeves with many frills. The skirt fits very closely about the hips and has three frills around the bottom. The dress is trimmed with narrow black insertion and medallion trimmings of ecru guipure.

JUDIC CHOLLET.

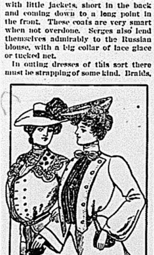
LINEN GOWNS.

They Play a Large Part Among the Outing Costumes.

Linens of every hue are being a great deal worn. They are made into tailor made suits and also little tucked dresses trimmed with medallions of lace and touches of black velvet.

Blue serge is being revived, and handsome outing costumes are made of it with little jackets, short in the back and coming down to a long point in the front. These coats are very smart when not overdone. Serges also lend themselves admirably to the Russian blouse, with a big collar of lace glace or tucked net.

In outing dresses of this sort there must be strapping of some kind. Braids, too, are excellent when they are simple, but somehow glace taffeta seems more adequately to meet the demand for trimming, as it is not injured by dust.



LINEN COATS.

Two pretty models for linen coats are here shown. One has a plain blouse, double breasted, with a collar of dotted silk and lace. The other has a box plaited front and back, the front box plait being fastened down with tiny buttons.

The hat worn with the first coat is of white felt trimmed with a red scarf. The second is of rough straw trimmed with a blue and white foulard.

"JUST MAKING BELIEVE."

There is many a failure on the part of "grown ups" to comprehend the mental processes of their imaginative superiors—the children. Some clumsy person calls the most charming device of fancy "another of those naughty fibs." By that condemnation he sets up a well nigh impassable barrier between himself and the childish dreamer.

Not long ago a grown up was accosted on the street by a dainty maiden of four, who nodded a bright good morning and then said, "Isn't there going to be a wedding down there?" pointing across the square.

"I think not," said the obtuse adult. "I haven't heard of any wedding."

"Are you sure? I think there's going to be one," persisted the little maiden.

"I don't see any flowers or carriages, and I guess you are mistaken," replied the champion of dull fact.

Then the tiny pleader drew nearer, and with an entreating touch of her hand and a voice lowered out of hearing of the fairies she breathed:

"Please say there's going to be a wedding. I'm just making believe."

Could the power of imagination go further? Could there be a simpler device for turning this dull world into a garden of flowers and sweet music than this same gentle "making believe?"

Imagination often proves to be the door that opens into a high philosophy of life. We all remember Dickens' brave little marchioness. "Did you ever taste orange peel and water?" she demanded of the gay Dick Swiveller. He replied that he never had tasted that ardent beverage.

"If you make believe very much, it's very nice," said the small servant, "but if you don't, you know, it seems as if it would bear a little more seasoning certainly."

As long as life has its ups and downs it is by no means impossible that to us all, old as well as young, there may come a time when we shall be glad to have acquired the accomplishment of making believe very much.

LAZY AND COLD BLOODED.

An Incident That Nearly Cost Sir Hugh Rose His Peerage.

Lord Strathnairn was the most indolent, lackadaisical, languid person who ever dawdled along Piccadilly. When he was devastating central India and winning the splendid victories that immortalized his name, he was so lazy that he could not be got to dictate the dispatches recording his own triumphs. Months elapsed before these documents could be extracted from him, and then they were brief and meager to the last degree. One day when Sir Hugh Rose he was entertaining a gallant company at dinner during the crisis of the mutiny.

With the utmost sang froid he was delighting those near him with one of his best anecdotes. In the middle of it his orderly entered and after saluting exclaimed, "We have captured 200 rebels, sir." To him the general turned and, with that elegant courtesy of manner on which he prided himself, serenely replied, "Thank you, sergeant." But the man still remained. Again interrupting his chief, he said, "But what are we to do with them, sir?"

In a little while Sir Hugh was again interrupted in the middle of another story by the sergeant, who came in and said, "Please, sir, we've hung the lot, sir." The general turned, bowed slightly and in the sweetest manner lisped, "Thanks, sergeant—very many thanks," and then went on with his anecdote as if nothing had happened.

This story came to the ears of Queen Victoria, and she was so angry that it nearly cost Sir Hugh his peerage.

David's Line.

When David Belasco and H. C. De Mille wrote "The Charity Ball," there was a speech in it that did not please Herbert Kelcey, leading man of the company. The words Kelcey objected to were quoted from one of David's psalms.

Ignorant of its origin, Kelcey said to Mr. De Mille:

"I don't like that line. It's bombastic and old fashioned."

"The line is not mine, but David's," replied De Mille, referring of course to the psalmist.

A Gentleman.

One of our readers sends a nice story about the question, "What is a gentleman?" Hearing a house carpenter spoken of as a gentleman by a furniture remover, he sought delicately for explanations. "Lor' bless yer, sir," answered the furniture remover, "we calls every man a gentleman as pays 20 shillings in the pound."—London Globe.

Hubby's Little Game.

Wife—What's the matter?

Husband—Some one has been robbing the firm, and I'm afraid I'll be suspected.

Wife—Impossible!

Husband—Well, it's best to be on the safe side. Better not buy that new dress you've been worrying me about.

She Knew Him.

"If you refuse me, it will kill me," he declared.

"How many lives have you?" she asked pitilessly, for she knew something of his previous "affairs" and naturally reasoned that this form of death was no novelty to him.—Chicago Post.

CHAPTER I.

"My dear boy, we must have money! If we argued the question twenty and twice twenty times over," says Lady Glynne, fanning herself with languid grace, "it would come to the same thing in the end. Stern reality, Dallas, stern reality!"

Lady Nora Glynne — otherwise "Lady Nora" to her hundred and one bosom friends — was baptized "Honoria" about forty-seven years ago; but she does not look thirty, except on the morning after a ball, or when her creditors grow unmanageable, or when some promising admirer goes away to fresh woods and pastures new.

For Lady Nora is a pretty little widow, and has been a pretty little widow for fifteen years, in spite of the most brilliant and daring speculations in the marriage market. Some small dividends her speculations certainly do return to her — jewelry, bric-a-brac, flowers, gloves, fans, opera and theatre boxes, and a few invitations for yachting parties, for autumn and Christmas parties, when there are going to be tableaux and theatricals. Lady Nora "makes up" exquisitely, and is the pertest and prettiest of chambermaids.

But what is a feast of pralines, fondants, and Chinois glaces when one is hungering for satisfying meat and drink? Rahatla-Koum is a wretched substitute for roast beef. One generous lover indeed gave Lady Nora an etrenne one New Year's morning of a dozen pairs of gloves, with a ten-pound note slipped deftly between each exquisite little pearl-gray and tan Suede pair.

Lady Nora is not proud. She sighs when she remembers that etrenne, which has never had a successor of equal worth, though she has tried the same methods of extortion — to wit, half a dozen bright stars glistening on her dark eyelashes, three or four heart-rending sighs, and a brief, fragmentary, artless confidence, from a full heart, to the "dearest, kindest, friend in the world," respecting some "horrid tradesman" and their "quite too abominably extortionate" charges.

But the giver of that charming box of gloves is the owner of twelve thousand a year. So, after all, the ten-pound notes were little more than a few pralines and fondants in place of the banquet which Lady Nora expected, and thought herself fully justified in expecting.

No; Lady Nora is not a proud woman by any means. She does many things at which a proud woman would blush—at which her son Dallas Glynne can not help blushing, as he has the instincts and sensitiveness of a gentleman, though, brought up in the school in which he has been, his code of honor is elastic and his shield of morality none of the brightest.

It is a cruel trial to maternal affection and lady-like amiability when a pretty woman who might very well pass for twenty-five, has suddenly to acknowledge a big broad-shouldered, moustached son in the Guards. Still the fact is a stern reality, as she has just said to Dallas about money, or rather the dire want of it from which they are suffering. And Lady Nora, being really a fond mother, and loving her big son best of anything on earth, has resolved, at forty-seven, gracefully to accept the inevitable, and recognize the fact of her stalwart son being twenty-six, and be proud of him, and dote on him even more than she does on diamonds, admiration, or a partie carree after the Opera.

And so she resolves to be a very good mother according to her lights—that is to say, she means to move heaven and earth, metaphorically, to scheme, plot, plan, cajole, condescend—do anything and everything for her son's advancement in life.

And there is only one way in which this is to be achieved—the easiest, quickest, most natural and reasonable way in which a handsome, well-bred, well-born young man can step from impecuniosity into prosperity—Dallas must marry money. There is no other hope for him or for her in this world, Lady Nora decides, and utters her decision.

She has worked hard—desperately hard—in every other direction, and failed—worked for the chances of a wealthy establishment for herself, worked for the chances of the favor of his uncle, the Earl of Pentreath; and now she is forty-seven and Dallas is twenty-six, and she has signally failed in her efforts.

The Earl allows her son the same yearly sum that he allowed that son's father, the Honorable Percival Glynne—five hundred a year—no more, no less; and he refuses absolutely to pay any debts for mother or for son, or to afford his brother's widow any further advantage from her relationship to him.

"And I know whom I have to thank for that," Lady Glynne says, setting her teeth hard—"that mean hypocrite, his son Lyulph Glynne, the man I detest most in the whole world!"

"He is a pale-faced smooth-voiced prig of a fellow," assents Dallas carelessly. "But I shouldn't worry myself by hating him so actively, if I were you, mother; you'll certainly upset your digestion—and that will be no joke after that underdone chouflear au gratin at dinner!"

But Lady Nora beats her pretty foot restlessly on the carpet, whilst her breath comes fast; she has her own reasons for her vengeful impotent hatred of her nephew by marriage—Viscount Glynne, whom good old ladies call "a most excellent young man." And yet she is in the main, a very good-natured, good-tempered, charming little woman, whom even her worst traducers cannot dislike.

So there is silence for a few minutes in the little salon, whilst Dallas smokes and stares sleepily at the carpet and the green plush-covered furniture, and the short, snowy-white, crisp window curtains, and the glaring gilded frames of the oblong and oval mirrors, all in meretricious style of the worst French taste.

And then Lady Glynne answers him, as if her thoughts had dwelt all the time on the badly-cooked chou-fleur—

"Yes, horrid, wasn't it? And so was the soup, and so was the duck. But what can one expect at a place like this? Things are desperate with us, or we would not have come here, of course!" "Uneatable plats are amongst the commonest miseries of poverty," Lady Nora goes on, her pleasant bird-like voise growing sharper and more peevish. "But here we are and here we must stay—at least, I must," Lady Nora says, beating her foot again on the carpet. She pauses for a moment, and then continues. "Glynne has taken that absurd wife of his to Trouville; and she knew I wanted to go horribly! It would just have suited me, for several reasons; but Lyulph Glynne would go out of his way to injure or disappoint me!" Lady Nora declares, setting her teeth very hard.

"I really dare not encounter those dreadful tradespeople again until I can give them something to stop them from devouring me alive!" her ladyship says presently, with tears of vexation in her eyes. "I sha'n't soon forget that horrid Rundle's insolence about my last order. Actually took back the goods when the cook did not pay him! They have become so disagreeable since the 'Stores' came into existence! Rundle said, 'Her ladyship can pay ready money at the 'Stores' for her groceries—let her pay me ready money for mine;' and the truth of it was, I hadn't five pounds in the world until I got fifty pounds from my dividends from Salter—and he would not give me a penny more! I am so weary of it all, Dallas!" Lady Nora concludes, with pretty pathos, sinking down on the carpet at her son's feet and curving her fair round throat backwards as she lays her head on his knee—a pretty pose, a charming and touching picture—the still young graceful mother and her stalwart son.

Lady Nora has practised the pose a great many times in public as well as in private, and Dallas is just a little tired of it.

"One of my lady's 'little ways'" he says to himself contemptuously.

"So weary of it all, dear," she repeats pathetically, "for you more than for myself!"

There is a pause.

"We must do something, Dallas!" Lady Nora says, with some impatience in her voice, as her son offers no suggestion. "The idea of your spending your leave in this fifth-rate place, with its fifth-rate cookery and tenth-rate people."

"To follow up your decision that something must be done, I suppose," Dallas answers with a yawn and a sigh, as he lights another cigarette. "Give me your clever design, madre mia, and I will cast my practical eye over it, and tell you if it is feasible."

"Of course it is feasible," Lady Nora rejoins sharply, getting irritated. "As you know, and have always known, Dallas, you must marry a girl with money."

"Yes, I know it and I always have known it," he agrees quietly, with a stifled sigh. "And the only girl I ever cared for, hasn't a crooked sixpence."

"Who was that, Dallas?" Lady Nora asks coolly. "Your old playmate, Joyce Murray? Yes, poor Joyce is a very nice girl and a very pretty girl," she admits, shrugging her shoulders, "but, as you say, she hasn't a farthing. You might as well buy a broom and learn to sweep a crossing the day you thought of marrying her."

"And after the trouble of learning, I don't suppose Joyce Murray would care to marry a crossing-sweeper," adds Dallas.

"Of course she wouldn't," Lady Nora says, with a little laugh. "Joyce will marry well, I have no doubt. Her sisters all married well, and so will she. Of course she knows that, is due to herself and to her position. Joyce is a little aristocrat to her finger-tips."

"Poor little Joyce!" ejaculates Dallas, with a slight break in his voice. "She used to be very fond of me when I was at Sandhurst and she was in the schoolroom. I believe she would share the crossing-sweeping with me if I were fool or knave enough to ask her."

FOUR DAY'S EARTHQUAKES

Over 70 Distinct Shocks Inspire Terror in California.

Strip of Country Fifteen Miles Long by Four Wide Twisted Out of Shape—Villagers Flee For Their Lives—Los Alamos Deserted—Not One Brick Left Standing One Upon Another—Shocks Now Almost Continuous.

San Luis, Obispo, Cal., Aug. 1.—A strip of country, 15 miles long by 4 miles wide, rent with gaping fissures and dotted with hills and knolls that sprung up during the night, as if by magic, a village in ruins and hundreds of people fleeing for their lives are the results of Thursday night's seismic disturbance in the valley of Los Alamos,, in the northern part of Santa Barbara County. During the last four days that section of the country has been shaken by a series of earthquakes that is without precedent in the history or tradition of the Pacific Coast, and the continuance of the disturbances and the increasing severity of the shocks have so terrorized the inhabitants that they are leaving for other parts as rapidly as possible, and, even now, the village is almost entirely deserted.

Shocks Began Sunday.

The disturbances began on Sunday evening with a shock which caused several thousand dollars' worth of damage to property in the village and the surrounding country. This shock was followed by a number of disturbances less severe and less disastrous, continuing throughout the remainder of Sunday night and Monday. On Tuesday night, beginning at 12.10 o'clock, there was another series of seven shocks, all of which were light. The most severe shock of the entire series occurred at 1.30 o'clock yesterday morning. Hills were shaken and twisted to their foundations and the valley trembled and rolled. Great fissures were run deep in the earth, hills and knolls appearing in level valleys, springs of water appeared in places that had been dry and the general topography of the valley was greatly changed in many respects.

Terror Seized People.

With the first warning of the sound of the approaching disaster the terror-stricken people rushed into the streets and sought places of safety in vacant lots and roads, while many fled towards the neighboring hills. The first vibrations were similar to the preceding disturbance in direction and effect, but they were immediately followed by the most terrific shock ever experienced in this section of the state. The earth trembled and rolled and twisted until it was impossible for people to stand erect and the inhabitants crouched together fearful that the earth might open and swallow them. The terror inspired by the rumbling of the earth was increased by a sound of falling buildings, which gave some idea of the destruction that was being wrought.

Village Was Deserted.

When the most serious shocks had passed and the rumbling sounds had died away the people gathered about the ruins of their places of business and when they saw the extent of the damage many of them, fearful of a repetition of this experience, immediately started on foot or by any conveyance that could be had for places where the previous shocks had been less severe. With the dawn of day, the stricken village had the appearance of the ruins of a city long deserted.

Since the first disturbances on Sunday night there have been more than 70 distinct shocks and those who have been keeping the records have now given up as the disturbances have become almost continuous.

THE KING WALKS EASILY.

Entire Length of the Pavilion Deck Without Assistance.

"His Majesty has made rapid progress since Monday last. His general condition continues all that could be desired. The wound is closing satisfactorily.

"The King is able to walk the entire length of the pavilion deck easily, without assistance. (Signed) Treves, Laking, Barlow."

Favored by perfect weather, the royal yacht Victoria and Albert cruised westward yesterday afternoon. The King sat in the shade of an awning aft, with the Queen by his side. There was no salute, but at Osborne the guardship Australia manned sides as the King's yacht passed.

The Prince and Princess of Wales will take leave of the King to-day and will not return to the Solent until after the coronation.

CHAMBERLAIN INVITES BOERS.

Will Discuss With Them the Conditions of Peace.

London, Aug. 1.—The Paris correspondent of The Times says a pro-Boer telegraphic agency which often receives authoritative information from Boer sources, states that Botha, Dewet, Delarey, and Lucas Meyer are coming to Europe at the express and direct invitation of Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, Colonial Secretary. It is stated that Mr. Chamberlain wishes to consult with the Boer generals on the construction of the conditions of peace in South Africa and the general situation there.

Electricity For Steam.

New York, Aug. 1.—Mayor Low has issued a statement in which he says he has been authorized by the New York Central Railway to say that if the city will approve the changes which the company wishes to make at the Grand Central depot, it will undertake to substitute electricity for steam, not only for its suburban, but also for its through traffic.

THE QUESTION OF CEMENT

A VEXED ONE AT PRESENT—ALDERMEN FIND IT HARD WHICH KIND TO BUY.

A special meeting of the Public Works Committee was held yesterday afternoon, for the purpose of considering the matter of purchasing cement for the construction of the granolithic walks. As there appears to be a difference of opinion as to what brand should be purchased and the price to be paid, no action was taken, but a special meeting of the City Council has been called for this evening to settle the matter.

STICKY WEATHER.

"Sticky weather" aptly describes these hot days, when comfort is out of the question. The nearest thing to comfort these days is one of Oak Hall's light coats. Prices $1 to $3. Then those nice skeleton coats and pants to sell at $4 are "gems of luxury" for this season of the year.

GREAT ALTERATION SALE

For the last year we have been inconvenienced considerably for want of space to show our goods, that our business has grown no one will doubt, and in order to keep pace with its rapid growth we must have more room.

To-day the carpenters will remove our rear store and begin work in earnest. The plumbers are with us busy at their part of the job. We have had to remove all our goods in the rear of the cellar and the front part of our store is also to receive special up-to-date touches. What we ask is that the people of Belleville and vicinity will aid us in getting rid of our crowded stock, and for this end we will hold two weeks sale, goods will be sold so cheap that it will startle the whole community.

Come early. Goods sold out will not be replaced during alterations.

McINTOSH BROS.

HEARTY SEND-OFF AND GODSPEED

Tendered by the Congregation of Trinity Church, Brockville, to Their Retiring Rector, Rev. Mr. Beamish, and His Wife, Who Arrive Here To-day

(Brockville Times.)

It was a very large but sad gathering which assembled in the Parish Hall of Trinity church to say "Au Revoir" to the Rev. George Ross Beamish as rector and priest of that parish. During his cure of four and a half years of the parish of Trinity church, he has certainly endeared himself to the membership of that parish, and if last night's gathering is any criterion he and Mrs. Beamish have won many dear and lasting friends for life. The meeting was a very representative one, and all present felt very deeply their loss to the parish.

In the different organizations Mrs. Beamish was a great power, and her work has been very much felt in every move that has been undertaken to raise funds for the many objects of the church's need. Some delay in calling the meeting to order was made so as to enable the Rev. Mr. Woodcock, the incoming rector, to be present. He was expected on the nine o'clock train on a business trip, and was surprised to be informed on his arrival here that his presence was desired at the church, and at the farewell to Mr. and Mrs. Beamish.

As soon as Mr. Woodcock arrived, he was introduced by Churchwarden DeCarle and Rev. Mr. Beamish to the assembled congregation.

Chas. DeCarle, rector's warden, then took the chair, and called upon the Rev. Mr. Beamish to take his place on the platform, when the following address was read:

Reverend George Ross Beamish, M.A.,
Rector Trinity Church, Brockville:

Rev. and Dear Sir,—On behalf of the congregation of this parish we address you for the last time as rector of Trinity church.

His Lordship the Bishop requires you to tend another flock, and in obedience to his lawful authority we are compelled to part with you, and another must take your place.

In parting with you we are a unit in expressing our gratitude and thankfulness that we have been permitted to enjoy your presence amongst us for the last four and a half years. The time passed so serenely that the thought of parting with you was a hard blow to us all. We have always enjoyed your rendering and leading of our worship, and the considerate way in which you have brought the solace of the church of Christ to our homes in the joys and mournings which so short a term imposes on us, has endeared you to our hearts, and that words really seem an empty mode of expressing our gratitude.

It is our earnest hope and prayer that your labors in your new sphere may be blessed of God, and that wherever your lot may be cast His richest blessings may be bestowed upon you and your dear wife and family.

In token of the love and appreciation of your congregation, we ask you to accept the accompanying bag, containing one hundred and twenty dollars in gold, and we trust you may long be spared to labor in the Master's vineyard.

CHAS. W. DeCARLE,
Rector's Warden.
ALFRED DODD,
People's Warden.

Brockville, July 30, 1902.

Mr. Beamish was deeply affected and made a short reply. In the course of his remarks he said:

My Warden, Mr. DeCarle, people's warden, and my dear people. This is the last time I will have the right to address you as such. I can assure you I am at a loss what to say in the form of words to thank you. I go to another field, and may be at some future time elsewhere, but wherever God leads I must go. I have tried to think more of God's leading and His work first rather than any individual interests. I am not a clergyman from my own choice. During the four and a half years' work here I have striven to have you all church men and church women through and through first. We have not to die to-day, as the martyrs did of old, for our church. Let us be true to God and His church. We are pledged to be true church men and church women, and may God bless you all. I am proud to say, that I have not lost one soul belonging to this parish, but on the contrary, have more than doubled the membership of the parish during my rectorship. God first and your work and co-operation secondly has been the successful means which has accomplished this result. You cannot fail to be successful in the future of you retain the services of two such wardens as you now have, and with a rector such as you have coming to you, a man whom I have known for years, you will succeed and forge ahead in the future as you have done in the past. I also thank you all on behalf of Mrs. Beamish and my little daughter, for this last kindness to us, and at any time if any of you should go to Belleville to call on us. We are all one family in Christ, and I want to know you always. Again thanking you, I say, good-bye.

George Quirmbach then came forward, and accompanied by Miss Rowlands, asked Mrs. Beamish to step upon the platform, where she was presented with a beautiful bon-bon dish and the following address:

Dear Mrs. Beamish:

It is with deep regret that the members of the Y.P.U. have learned of your approaching departure. Your ready co-operation and kind sympathy in all our work has endeared you to us all. Will you accept the accompanying gift as a slight token of our love and esteem for you. With the prayer that God's blessing may always rest upon you.

CITY COUNCIL IN SPECIAL SESSION

Decides to Buy Cement From the Rathbun Company at $2.20 per Barrel

Offer of Owen Sound Company, of $2.10 per Barrel, Was Turned Down

List of Granolithic Side-walks Which Will Probably be Constructed This Year

A special meeting of the City Council was held last evening for the purpose of considering the matter of purchasing cement for the construction of granolithic walks. The question appeared to be a vexed one and caused a lengthy discussion.

All the Aldermen were present, and in the absence of the Mayor Ald. Chown was voted to the chair.

Ald. Panter gave a verbal report of the special Committee which was appointed to consider the matter of purchasing cement. The Rathbun Company's offer was $2.20 and the Owen Sound Company $2.10 per barrel. He considered that he (the speaker) had virtually closed the deal with Mr. Schuster on behalf of the Rathbun Company, although no agreement was drawn up. He had tried his best to get a lower price from the Rathbun company, but he could not do so.

Ald. Wills asked if the special Committee had brought in a report.

Ald. Chown said there was only the verbal report as made by Ald. Panter

Ald. Sinclair asked if the weight per barrel was the same.

The Street Surveyor — "All weigh alike."

Ald. Pope said he understood that the offer of the Rathbun Company had verbally been accepted by Ald. Panter. Since then an offer had been made from the Owen Sound Company to sell cement at $2.10 per barrel. In purchasing the cement from the Rathbun company we could procure it in lots to suit our convenience. The Rathbun company were also large taxpayers of the city, which should be considered. The cement could also be secured from the Rathbun company at short notice.

Ald. Cooper said he agreed with Ald. Pope's remarks. The cement manufactured by the Rathbun company is of the best quality.

Ald. Wills said an important matter to be decided was what walks were going to be built. The walks proposed to be built would require 854 barrels. If this much cement was used it would mean that we pay $85.40 more to the Rathbun company for it than we would to the Owen Sound Company. He thought that some portions of the walks could be cut out. By a little repairing some of these walks could be made to answer for another year at least.

Ald. Galbraith said the Council had sent the Chairman of Public Works and the Street Surveyor up west to see about the matter of building cheap walks, etc., and they had reported that a tar macadam walk of a good nature could be constructed cheaply. Some of the new walks might be so constructed, which would be cheaper. If it was intended to procure 700 or 800 barrels of cement he could not support the purchasing of it from the Rathbun company. The wise course, he thought, for the Council was to build as little as possible granolithic walks.

Ald. Panter said the proposed walks, with the exception of Cedar street, had been advertised and the necessary by-laws had been passed. Could a tar macadam walk be put down when a granolithic walk had been specified. Another important question to be considered was as to the quantity of cement to be delivered there at one time. From the letter received from the Owen Sound company, he understood that they would sell not less than 500 or 600 barrels, shipped in 100 barrel lots.

Ald. Price said that 100 barrels could be procured from the company, or 500 or 600, as we may need.

Ald. McFee asked the Surveyor if he had a proper place to store the cement.

The Surveyor said it could be stored in the shed in the city yard, but it was not a good place to store it, especially if the weather was damp.

Ald. McFee said he did not see why the Rathbun Company should ask 10c per barrel more than the Owen Sound Company. He would rather like to favor buying from the Rathbun Company, but did not like the idea of giving them 10c per barrel more than the other company. The purchasing of 600 or 700 barrels would mean quite an item. We should deal with this matter in a business-like manner. The Rathbun Company, he understood, had in the first place agreed to furnish cement at $2.00 per barrel and then raised it to $2.20. They had violated their agreement first. He would, however, be willing to give that company $2.15 per barrel.

It was decided that the first thing to do was to determine what sidewalks were to be built and the quantity of cement which would be required to build the walks.

Considerable discussion ensued as to the building of walks, but the majority of the members voted for the construction of the following walks:

It was estimated that it would require between 400 and 500 barrels to construct these walks.

Ald. Sinclair moved, seconded by Ald. McFee, that the necessary amount of cement be procured from the Rathbun Company if they will accept $2.10 per barrel, and if the Company will not accept that rate that it be procured from the Owen Sound Company at that figure.

Ald. Panter moved in amendment, seconded by Ald. Sulman, that the cement be purchased from the Rathbun Company at $2.20 per barrel of 350 lbs. of cement, of the Star make, to be delivered in such quantities as may be required.

After some further discussion as to the price to be paid, the amendment of Ald. Panter prevailed.

The yeas and nays on the amendment were called for and resulted as follows:

Ald. Panter presented a communication in reference to a drain in front of Mr. H. Carby's premises on Front street which was choked up.

Ald. Pope said that it was desirable to have another light on the roadway leading to the park. It would cost $5 per year more.

Acting Mayor Chown said that as the meeting had been called for a special purpose it would be as well to allow other matters to wait over until the next meeting of the Committees.

The Council then adjourned.

WHITE DUCK TROUSERS.

We have just received at the Oak Hall another shipment of Sanford's white duck trousers to sell at $1.00 per pair. This is special value for these goods. Inferior ones are being offered in the city for only $1.25. A white duck trouser with a blue coat looks pretty nice these hot days.

Pleasantly Entertained

The members of the Fifteenth Drum and Bugle Band were pleasantly entertained last night by one of their members, Mr. Chas. Symons, at the residence of Mr. Joseph Woodley, Sinclair St. The evening was spent with games, music, etc., refreshments being served. The members of the Band voted it one of the most agreeable evenings in their experience.

WILLING TO TRY IT.

Stewart Quinn was in a sickly condition, and, at the urgent request of his sister, went into the neighboring village to consult a doctor.

The man of medicine examined his patient, and declared there was really nothing wrong.

"You are out of sorts, man, that's all."

"Well, dochter, what am Oi to do at all, at all?"

"Och, get into lively company. Many a time I'm that way myself, but a little rest and my wife's caresses cure me."

"Do yez think she wud be at home now, sorr?"

SOLDIER AND INVENTOR

LORD DUNDONALD, THE NEW COMMANDER OF CANADIAN FORCES, OF A PRACTICAL TURN OF MIND.

A writer in an English magazine says:—

Lord Dundonald, that brilliant leader of cavalry with General Buller's army is the twelfth earl of his line, and joined the 2nd Life Guards at the early age of 18, a regiment of which he has been in command since 1895. He comes of a soldierly race; his grandfather, Admiral Cochrane, distinguished himself in the Napoleonic wars. Lord Dundonald made a reputation in the Soudan campaign for carrying dispatches by night, notably that from Gubat announcing the fall of Khartoum, for which he received his C.B. He has inherited the inventive faculty for which the Cochranes have been remarkable for several generations, and keen soldier as he is, it is quite in keeping that Lord Dundonald's inventions are connected with military matters. His gun carriage for small guns, for rapid use in the field, is being employed in the present campaign. He has also patented a fire-box, the "Instra," which is used for carrying in the hand to impart warmth to the soldiers during exposed marches. It was of great benefit to the troops in the Dargai campaign, and has since been developed and utilized for civilian purposes, such as railway travelling in winter, with the difference that the "Instra," is then used to sit on. Lord Dundonald's latest invention is a nose-bag for horses, to give them more ventilation while feeding. He is, I should say, devoted to horses, as becomes a leader of cavalry, and when quite a young man was a noted driver of the regimental team. Lord Dundonald does not, as has been frequently stated, delight in the life of a country gentleman; he is absorbed in his profession and in his inventions, and spends very little time on his estates, being chiefly with his regiment in London or at Windsor. His own mansion in Portman square, is full of antique furniture and old family portraits, and has been the scene of some brilliant functions, especially the coming-out ball of his eldest daughter last year.

Lord Dundonald's country seat is Gwyrch's Castle, near Abergele, which forms part of Lady Dundonald's extensive inheritance. She is the daughter of Rihcard Hesketh, Esq., a descendant of that ancient family, the Heskeths, of Rufford. Lady Dundonald's great-grandfather was a younger son, and married Miss Lloyd, the Welsh heiress, and from this marriage all Lady Dundonald's property is derived. She manages her property herself, and is an admirable chatelaine when at her Welsh castle, especially interesting herself in the schools of the district and in the local branch of the Primrose League. Although Lady Dundonald is in no sense a "platform woman," she takes a keen interest in the educational, social and political questions of the day and promotes the welfare of her tenantry in every possible way. Besides the Welsh estate, Lady Dundonald has landed property in Cheshire, Lancashire and Derbyshire.

She is president of the West Marylebone Soldiers' and Sailors' Families' Association, and last Christmas cheered the hearts of the women whom "Tommy" had left behind by sending a present of roast beef and plum pudding to all the wives of soldiers and sailors at the front, and to the wives of the Reservists in the West Marylebone district. Lady Dundonald is a tall, elegant woman, with a quiet, though dignified manner. She has five children, the heir being Lord Cochrane.

Hospital Treatment

FAILED TO BENEFIT MRS. JOHN POTTER, OF WELLANDPORT.

It is no uncommon occurrence for Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to restore sufferers to health after doctors, and even the best of hospital treatment, have failed to benefit them. Among those who have been benefitted in this way is Mrs. John Potter, a lady well known in Wellandport, Ont. Speaking about her illness to a reporter, Mrs. Potter said: "About three years ago I was greatly run down. My appetite was poor; I suffered from severe headaches and palpitation of the heart; I was very weak and had a constant feeling of weariness which no amount of sleep could overcome. At night I perspired freely and would wake up in the morning in a very enfeebled condition. To make matters worse my trouble became aggravated with those ailments so common to my sex. I was afflicted with ulcers, and so bad were they that although at different times I had treatment from five doctors they failed to cure me. I then went to the hospital in Hamilton, and although I received the best treatment that could be given there, I was not benefitted. I returned home very much discouraged, and it was then that I decided that I would try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I got a supply and began taking them, and to my great gratification they soon began to help me, and under their continued use my appetite returned, the headaches and violent palpitation of the heart disappeared, my weight increased, and all the troubles that had made my life so miserable vanished. It will give me great pleasure if my experience will lead some other sufferer to try these pills, as I am sure they will be benefitted."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are equally valuable to both men and women. They cure rheumatism, sciatica, kidney trouble, neuralgia, consumption, heart ailments, female weakness, and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. There are many imitations of this great medicine and the purchaser should always see that the full name, "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People," is on the wrapper around every box. Sold by all medicine dealers or sent by mail post paid at 50c a box or six boxes for $2.50, by writing direct to the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

WHAT DOCTORS RECEIVED

SIR FREDERICK TREVES' REWARD FROM THE KING.

London, July 29. — The Coronation Baronetcy conferred on Sir Frederick Treves will not be the great surgeon's only reward for his successful conveyance of the King "out of danger." For his four weeks' attendance at Sandringham and recovery of the King from typhoid fever in 1871, Sir William Gull received £10,000, as well as the dignity of Baronet. Twice this amount was paid to Sir Morell Mackenzie for his treatment of the late Emperor Frederick, and in addition he was presented with the Order of the Red Eagle. The doctors who attended Queen Victoria in her last illness received 2,000 guineas each, while Dr. Laponi's skill in removing a cyst from the Pope's side a few years ago was recompensed with £500. But the record in medical fees is held by the ancestor of the present Lord Mayor of London, Dr. Dimsdale, who received for his journey to St. Petersburg and vaccination of the Empress Catherine II., £10,000 as his fee, £5,000 for travelling expenses, and also the title of Baron, and a life pension of £500 a year.

Sir Frederick Treves has certainly earned a generous reward for his skill. At little more than a moment's notice he placed his whole time at the King's service, and for at least seven days and nights he never went to bed, snatching sleep at Buckingham Palace at odd moments. His daughter's wedding occurred during these critical days, and it was only when she drove herself to the palace, and put the case before her father that he took a hurried half hour to attend the quiet ceremony.

REVOLUTION IN NEWFOUNDLAND.

Since the introduction into Newfoundland of the new Inhaler Remedy, "Catarrhozone," the treatment of catarrhal diseases has been entirely revolutionized. The old-time snuff and internal medicine has been cast aside and everyone is inhaling Catarrhozone; it clears the head and throat in two minutes, and is very agreeable and pleasant to use. Catarrhozone is a wonderful cure for Coughs, Colds, Catarrh, Asthma, Bronchitis, Lung Troubles and Deafness. It relieves quickly and cures permanently. We advise our readers to try Catarrhozone. THE MISTAKES OF LAURIER.

It will be remembered that the Saturday Review, of London, England, indulged in some rather harsh comments on the speech made by Sir Wilfrid Laurier at the Guildhall function. Sir Wilfrid, it seems, told his audience that the Roman Empire "in the heyday of her splendid power" was "composed of slave states." The Montreal Star took the trouble to correct Sir Wilfrid, and to explain to him that the Roman Empire was not composed of slave states, but of states enjoying to a large extent their own laws, religion and institutions. The Star said:

> "The Roman Empire spread over the old world very much as the British Empire extended itself in India. It was in no sense composed of slave states. There was a Roman resident in the form of a proconsul or praetor; but the different countries were governed as much as possible by their own laws and usages; while the privileges of Roman citizenship were gradually extended from country to country, till finally they were made universal. Every one remembers the case of the Apostle Paul claiming his rights as a Roman citizen, though his birth-place was a town in a remote corner of Asia Minor. We know, too, how Pilate, the Roman Governor of Judea, consulted the usages of the Jews even to the point of passing the death sentence, when they said their laws required it. In religious matters the government of the Roman State was more than tolerant; it was hospitable. It recognized foreign gods, and allowed all its subjects to worship in their own way so long as the fundamental laws of the Empire were not subverted. This was its general policy, and the exception in the case of Christianity was founded on the belief that the practices and sentiments of the Christians were in reality dangerous to political order.

Many people in Canada have for years expressed the opinion that Sir Wilfrid was, in vulgar parlance, "a windbag," with transcendental ability to talk but with only the veriest tithe of erudition. In short, a coiner of shallow phrases and an exploiter of gilded platitudes. His latest effort, when he made himself a laughing stock for the whole English-speaking world, shows that the belief of Canadians who knew him was well founded.

We greatly fear that Sir Wilfrid's knowledge of the Roman Empire is no more accurate than his knowledge of the British Empire, which is painfully imperfect. For example, he came back from London five years ago announcing that he had made Canada a nation; and to this day he has never been able to recognize Canada's real position as an integral portion of the British Empire. He and his followers, as the Halifax Herald very properly points out, are ever speaking and writing as if Canada and the Empire were two different and distinct entities, instead of being one and indivisable.

FOUND DEAD IN BED

DEMISE OF AN OLD RESIDENT OF CANIFTON.

Mrs. Abraham Holloway, an aged woman who lived alone in the village of Canifton, was found dead yesterday afternoon. For two days previous to her death Mrs. Holloway had not been seen about, and the neighbors, suspecting something was wrong, forced an entrance into the house, when the dead body of the old lady was found in bed.

Dr. Farley, coroner, of this city, was summoned, and gave it as his opinion that the woman had been dead for some time, probably a day. The cause was attributed to senile decay.

Mrs. Holloway was about 80 years of age. She was born in England, and had lived in Canifton some 30 years. Mr. Holloway died a few years ago. The only relative of the deceased in this country is a nephew, Mr. G. H. Horne, who resides at Canifton.

Band Concert

The band concert at the park last evening attracted a large crowd who were apparently well pleased with the programme provided. The evening was all that could have been desired for outdoor recreation.

A Mysterious Telegram

Sensation Lovers in Toronto are Speculating as to the Meaning of one Received by ex-Manager Ragg.

Toronto, Aug. 2. — June 26, two weeks after Edward Geen died, under circumstances that pointed to murder in the basement of Evans & Sons' Front street warehouse, this telegram is said to have been received by Mr. A. E. Ragg, then manager for the company in Toronto:

Montreal, June 26, 1902.
A. E. Ragg,
23 Front street, Toronto, Ont.
Better let the Geen matter drop.
A. B. Evans.

The "time marks" on this telegram, which was transmitted over the Great Northwestern Telegraph Co.'s lines, show that the message was sent from Montreal at 10 o'clock, and was received in Toronto just before noon.

Mr. Ragg, when seen yesterday, would neither deny nor affirm that he had received such a telegram. He will, however, be at the inquest on Tuesday to give his evidence.

Toronto, August 2.—Though two weeks have elapsed since the last tragic event in the chain of unusual circumstances surrounding the Front street warehouse of Evans & Sons, practically nothing has been developed that will cast a ray of light on the gruesome mystery. It is no reflection upon the keen members of the city detective force, when the statement is made that, in spite of their diligence in the case, the indications are that the information they have secured really tends to deepen the mystery. It was the careful work of these officers that caused Manager Spencer to look to his stock of alcohol, and resulted in the announcement that 100 gallons of the spirits were missing. Step by step, these men have gone over the field, from the night of May 30, when the alleged burglar was disturbed in his work of breaking into the vault and firing the building. This man was seen and talked with by Watchman Johnston and C. P. R. Detective Turner. Each man gave a fairly good description of the suspect. Then the chain was followed on down the line, and the most careful search made for the envelope Whalley is known to have had prior to his death. He might have hid the envelope around the place, preparatory to dressing for the street. The detectives carefully searched every nook and corner of the basement. If this envelope was stolen from the body, it might have been torn in two and the money extracted. Upon this theory, the detectives carefully gathered together, after the most laborious work, the fragments of the envelopes received by the other employes, and which were, in most cases, immediately torn in two, and the pieces cast upon the floor. Whalley's envelope was not found, and no pieces of envelopes were found which are not accounted for. What the telegram telling Mr. Ragg to "drop" the matter may mean no one knows, but it will, no doubt, be satisfactorily explained at the inquest.

CAME FOR HIS WIFE

(Lindsay Post.)

About a year ago a man residing in Illinois, a few miles from Chicago, advertised in an American matrimonial paper. A few months ago a Haliburton woman answered the advertisement, saying that as she was a widow, she was in search of a husband. An exchange of photos followed and an engagement was arranged by mail. On Tuesday the Illinois man passed through to Haliburton to marry his widow, and take her back to Illinois.

On arriving at Haliburton he made known his mission to a couple of well-known citizens. As the woman resided a few miles from the village, he was driven by one of them to her home. On reaching the house he enquired for the would-be bride, and was informed by the woman's daughter that she was not in, but her father was. At this the American got disgusted and returned to the village. Late that evening the woman walked into the hotel and enquired of the hotelkeeper if Mr.——— was in, but was informed by the latter that he had retired. The next morning the Illinois man was surprised to find the woman waiting for him at the front door of the hotel, but before she could interview him he made his escape out of a back window, and made for the train, which was just about to start on its trip to Lindsay. He locked himself in a small compartment of the car and remained there until the train pulled out.

The Illinois man passed through yesterday on the return trip. When interviewed by our reporter he said the woman had represented things in a much different light from what he had found them. He is a painter by trade and has been in search of a wife for some time, and this is the second time he has been fooled in an endeavor to get a wife by advertising. A Kansas City woman took him in and he got into a heap of trouble with her, from which it cost him considerable money to free himself.

As the train pulled out a couple of Haliburton gentlemen, in bidding the wife-seeker good-bye, wished him better luck next time.

NO SECOND OPERATION.

Chicago, Aug. 2.—A special from London says: There is a wide difference of opinion in medical circles as to the probability of a second operation to be performed on King Edward. There is, however, no thought of a postponement of the coronation ceremonies, despite much repeated rumors.

Some well-informed experts say that, while the King's physicians entirely relieved his ailment the actual cause of the illness has never been definitely determined. There was no sign of appendicitis and the appendix was not examined. All that the doctors did was to remove a dangerous abscess. As there was no complications in immediate sight they were content to ignore the cause of the abcess.

On the other hand, The Lancet says:

"If King Edward were an ordinary hospital patient he would have been discharged several days ago with a mild caution to be careful. It must be remembered that the incision in the side is extremely deep.

"The rigid precautions of the King's medical advisers in declining to allow His Majesty to move about as soon as he might have been expected was dictated merely by a desire to give the healing process ample time to consolidate. There has been at no time the remotest sign of anything pointing to malignancy and all talk of a second operation is without the slightest foundation."

KING GAINS DAILY.

Enjoyed the Minstrel Performance of Yacht's Crew.

Cowes, Isle of Wight, Aug. 2.—The King had an excellent night, and it was expected that he would go for another cruise yesterday on the royal yacht, Victoria and Albert. He sat late on the deck Thursday evening, enjoying a minstrel performance given by the yacht's crew.

The Prince and Princess of Wales started for London yesterday morning.

The royal yacht cruised to the eastward during the afternoon.

Coronation Order.

London, Aug. 2.—Yesterday's announcement of the official order of the procession greatly stimulated interest in the coronation. No attempt is being made to decorate the streets on the lavish scale prior to the King's illness.

SETTLING BOER FARMS.

Already Good Families Have Been Reinstated on Their Lands.

Pretoria, Aug. 1.—Excellent progress is being made in re-settling the Boer farms. Already 9,000 families have been reinstated on their lands, although the work of replacing the farmers has been accompanied by many difficulties, especially in securing and feeding horses and cattle. Much complaint was caused by the military authorities auctioning off live stock, which was bought up by speculators, who re-sold at large profits at the expense of the needy farmers. The disposal of army horses has been accompanied by an epidemic of glanders, which is now raging in Cape Colony.

Return of the Soldiers.

Toronto, Aug. 2.— The men of the Third, Fourth, Fifth and Sixth Regiments of the Canadian Mounted Rifles returned to Toronto last evening. These are the troopers who reached Halifax on the transport Cestrian. About 4.30 o'clock, the first batch got in on the Grand Trunk Railway. There were no Toronto men among them, their homes being in Hamilton, Guelph, London, and other places in Western Ontario. About 8.30 o'clock the C.P.R. train pulled into the Union Depot. A large crowd had assembled to greet the home-coming troopers, although there was no attempt at a demonstration.

Col. Williams, in command of the Third Regiment, Capt. Henderson and Lieut. Holland were the Toronto officers with the contingent.

Nile Dam Finished.

New York, Aug. 2.—The Times has the following from London:—The Times announces that the last coping stone of the Nile dam at Assouan was laid on Wednesday.

The Nile reservoir, for which the great dams at Assouan and Assolut have been constructed, will enable wide tracts of land to bear two crops a year instead of one.

Young Lad Disappears.

Quebec, Aug. 2.—Another of those unaccountable disappearances of which this district has seen so many of late, occurred at Levis, this time the missing party being a lad of only 11, named Edward Coughlin, son of Mr. Coughlin, employed as engineer in the Grand Trunk Rail-

Lincoln Election Expenses.

St. Catharines, Aug. 2.—Sheriff Dawson has submitted a statement showing the expenses of the candidates in the late provincial election in Lincoln. Mr. McKinnon's expenses were $1,416.66, and Dr. Jessop's $199.50.

NEARLY A COLLISION

SPARTAN AND OCEAN ALMOST CAME TO GRIEF AT TORONTO.

Toronto, August 1.—Citizens strolling along the waterfront about 8 o'clock last evening held their breath for a few minutes as they watched the narrow escape of the propellors Ocean and Spartan from colliding. As the Spartan backed out from the Yonge street wharf, the Electric Light Company's coal pile prevented Captain McGrath from seeing that the Ocean was approaching from the east, Captain Towell, of the Ocean, being unable also, because of the coal pile, to see the movements of the Spartan. Both captains saw that only prompt action could avoid a collision. The Spartan's engineer was signaled to go ahead at full speed, while the Ocean's engineer got the bells to go "full astern." This prompt action on the part of the captains averted what might have been a collision. As it was, however, the Ocean came within an inch of the Spartan's stern.

Heavy Storm in the West.

Winnipeg, Man., Aug. 2.—A heavy thunderstorm appears to have followed the main line of the C.P.R., being reported to have raged during the night at Laggan, Swift Current, Saskatoon, Gretnas and Minnedosa. Were it not for this thunderstorm yesterday's weather report would have indicated clear weather at all points.

Took Out 67 Bodies.

Melbourne, Victoria, Aug. 2.—So far, 67 bodies have been recovered from the Mount Kembla Colliery, at Wollongong, where an explosion occurred Thursday. [illegible] rescue is much hampered by fire damp in the mine.

WHEN THE STRIKE WILL END

"Not Until the Miners Declare It Off," Says Mitchell.

The Mine President Put the Situation Very Clearly at a Picnic of 7,000 Miners at Scranton on Friday—The American People and the Miners Are Stronger Than the Coal Operators or the Coal Trust.

Scranton, Pa., July 2.—At a picnic yesterday, attended by 7,000 miners, President Mitchell said:

"I want to say the anthracite miners went on strike themselves. They themselves voted for the strike. It was not the officers of the United Mine Workers who called the strike. It will never end until you vote it ended. From the officers of the coal presidents in New York comes the declaration that the strike will be settled only in their own way of settling it. I would direct your attention to similar declarations made in the 1900 strike. The Coal Trust may be powerful and strong, but the American people, whose hearts throb in sympathy with the miners' cause, are stronger than the Coal Trust."

Increase For Machinists.

New York, Aug. 2.—The Board of Arbitration of the International Association of Machinists have settled upon an advance of seven and one-half per cent. over the old rate of wages. An advance of fifteen per cent. and a shorter workday was asked by the men.

CANADA TO SOUTH AFRICA.

Postmaster-General Has Arranged For a Freight ship service.

Toronto, Aug. 2.—Acting Secretary J. F. M. Stewart of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association yesterday afternoon received a cablegram from Sir William Mulock, Postmaster-General, to this effect: "Arranging for service this morning from Canadian ports for South Africa. Wire at once by what time you can fill first ship."

Immediately Mr. Stewart sent this reply: "Association delighted, prospective African service. Think Oct. 1 best date."

Prior to July 28 the association had received from the Leyland Company at Montreal the following telegram: "Our London principals ask us to enable them early to-morrow what are prospects of securing freight from Canada, through to South Africa, New Zealand and Australia, and state approximately quantity obtainable for monthly service, and probable rate. We have seen Mr. Menro, who referred us to you. Wire at our expense to-morrow morning any information you are able to give on the subject."

BISHOP LOST HIS TEMPER.

Rapped Coolies Over Knuckles in Corea and Was Attacked.

Victoria, B.C., Aug. 2.—The steamer Olympia brings details of the attack on Bishop Moore, the Revs. Appenzeller and Swearer and the Misses Moore and Melvin by the Japanese coolies in Corea.

The coolies who were carrying Bishop Moore's rickshaw stopped to talk with a friend. The Bishop lost his temper and rapped the coolies over the knuckles, whereupon the coolies called out, and a lot of Japanese camped in the vicinity rushed at the missionaries and stoned them, Bishop Moore being rather severely hurt.

Three of the ringleaders were arrested and sentenced to two months' imprisonment.

Discharged After a Lecture From Chief Justice Hunter.

Victoria, B. C., Aug. 2.— William MacAdams, editor of The Sandon Paystreak, who was committed to jail for nine months for an attack on the member of the Supreme Court, yesterday tendered a written apology, and was discharged after a severe lecture from Chief Justice Hunter.

IRON-OX
Tablets

"I consider IRON-OX TABLETS one of the most thoroughly satisfactory Proprietary Medicines I have become familiar with, in more than 25 years' experience.

"No pill or tablet that I have known, so well serves the purposes of an effective, yet gentle, liver pill and regulator of the bowels, while at the same time acting as a tonic to the blood and nervous system." S. E. HICK, Druggist, Goderich, Ontario.

THEY DROVE PIMPLES AWAY.—A face covered with pimples is unsightly. It tells of internal irregularities which should long since have been corrected. The liver and the kidneys are not performing their functions in the healthy way they should, and these pimples are to let you know that the blood protests. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will drive them all away, and will leave the skin clear and clean. Try them, and there will be another witness to their excellence.

There are 38 letters in the Russian alphabet.

HAD LA GRIPPE.—Mr. A. Nickenson, farmer, Dutton, writes: "Last winter I had La Grippe and it left me with a severe pain in the small of my back and hip that used to catch me whenever I tried to climb a fence. This lasted for about two months, when I bought a bottle of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil and used it both internally and externally, morning and evening, for three days, at the expiration of which time I was completely cured."

Their gentle action and good effect on the system really make them a perfect little pill. They please those who use them. Carter's Little Liver Pills may well be termed 'Perfection.'

AT DEATH'S DOOR.—DYSPEPSIA CONQUERED.—A GREAT MEDICAL TRIUMPH.—Gentlemen,—My medical adviser and others told me I could not possibly live when I commenced to use Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery for Dyspepsia. My case was one of the worst of its kind. For three years I could not eat meat and my weight decreased from 219 to 119 lbs. All the food I took for thirteen months previous to taking the Vegetable Discovery consisted of milk. I am now entirely cured and have regained my usual weight, can eat anything with a keen relish and feel like a new man. I have sold over thirty dozen Vegetable Discovery since it cured me, as I am well-known and people in this section know how low I was, and thought I could not possibly be cured. They are eager to try this grand medicine. It certainly saved my life as I never expected to recover when first I commenced using it. I am not exaggerating anything, but feel glad to be able to contribute this testimonial and trust it may be the means of convincing others of its merit as a certain cure for Dyspepsia.
Signed, JEAN VALCOURT,
Wotton, P.Q. General Merchant

It is better to have a light purse than a heavy heart, but more comfortable to have neither.

Very many persons die annually from cholera and kindred summer complaints, who might have been saved if proper remedies had been used. If attacked do not delay in getting a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial, the medicine that never fails to effect a cure. Those who have used it say it acts promptly, and thoroughly subdues the pain and disease.

Use the safe, pleasant, and effectual worm killer, Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator; nothing equals it. Procure a bottle and take it home.

When an artist's wife poses for him he makes her stand around.

Have you tried Holloway's Corn Cure? It has no equal for removing these troublesome excrescences, as many have testified who have tried it.

There are nine kilted regiments in the British army.

FOR INFLAMMATION OF THE EYES.—Among the many good qualities which Parmelee's Vegetable Pills possess, besides regulating the digestive organs, is their efficacy in reducing inflammation of the eyes. It has called forth many letters of recommendation from those who were afflicted with this complaint and found a cure in the pills. They affect the nerve centres and the blood in a surprisingly active way, and the result is almost immediately seen.

Ten per cent. of the population of India are widows.

If you have a cough or cold do not neglect it; many without a trace of that hereditary disease have drifted into a consumptive's grave by neglecting what was only a slight cold. Had they used Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup before it was too late, their lives would have been saved. Mr. A. W. Levy, Mitchell, writes: "I think Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup the best preparation on the market for coughs and severe colds. About six years ago I caught a severe cold which settled on my lungs, and for three months I had a cough. I had a physician attending me, but gradually grew worse until I was on the verge of Consumption, and had given up hopes of being cured, when I was induced to try Bickle's Syrup. Before I had taken one bottle I found myself greatly relieved, and by the time I had finished the second bottle I was completely cured. I always recommend it for severe colds and consumption."

No one knows better than those who have used Carter's Little Liver Pills what relief they have given when taken for dyspepsia, dizziness, pain in the side, constipation, and disordered stomach.

Spiders usually live for two or three years.

Do not despair of curing your sick headache when you can so easily obtain Carter's Little Liver Pills. They will effect a prompt and permanent cure. Their action is mild and natural.

THE UNIVERSAL HABIT.

And she felt
Of her belt
At the back.
Her walk was as free as a spring steel wire,
And many a rubberneck turned to admire
As she felt
Of her belt
At the back.
She wondered if all the contraptions back there
Were fastened just right—'twas an unceasing care,
So she felt
Of her belt
At the back.
I saw her at church as she entered her pew,
And she felt
Of her belt
At the back.

She had on a skirt that was rustly and new
And she didn't quite know what the fastenings might do,
So she felt
Of her belt
At the back.
She fidgeted 'round while the first prayer was said,
She fumbled about while the first hymn was read—
As she felt
Of her belt
At the back.

Jack told her one night that he loved her like mad;
And she felt
For her belt
At the back.
She didn't look sorry, she didn't look glad—
She looked like she thought, "Well, that wasn't so bad."
And she felt
For her belt
At the back.
But--Well, I don't think 'twas a great deal of harm,
For what should the maiden have found but an arm,
When she felt
For her belt
At the back.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Owing to the fact that some of our readers failed to secure a copy of yesterday's paper, in which our new story, "Fairy Gold," was commenced, we repeat the opening chapter to-day, together with another instalment. We have much pleasure in recommending this fine story to our readers. A perusal of it will be found entertaining and profitable.

A minister in Chicago struck some bedrock truths recently which deserve to be printed in such large letters that he who runs may read. Inasmuch as to-morrow is Sunday it may not be inappropriate to quote a few of them:

"There are just two kinds of people who should be privileged to preach, those independently rich and those independently poor. As soon as a preacher begins to want what is in the pockets of his hearers, the seed of weakness in his preaching is sown.

"Education never makes a bad man good. When you go to a university and become educated, what is done to you? Nothing. If you go to college, a little, mean, narrow man, you come out a little, mean, narrow, educated man. Education can not change a man's quality. But that is what the power of God can do. It gives a man a different quality of life. Christianity is not something you do; it is the way you do things.

"You cannot prove the truth of Christianity by quoting Scripture at somebody. There is a great deal of bibliolatry in the world. God never meant us to worship the Bible. The Bible is simply a vehicle for God's thought. The trouble with the world to-day is that people are trying to quote Scripture, work miracles, and deal in logic chopping when what is needed is samples of Christian living, which are scarce."

Hamilton Times: Profit to the country from the Intercolonial under Grit management will be a bitter drop in Sir Mackenzie Bowell's cup.

Without stopping to discuss the inaccuracy of the above statement, it may be pointed out that Sir Mackenzie is not likely to have his beverages spoiled in the near future. The Intercolonial, under the management of Hon. Mr. Blair, has been nothing but a sinkhole for useless expenditure, fresh instances of which are cropping up every day, at least six having been given in these columns recently. A $500,000 steamer declared to be useless, thousands of ties, bought from political friends, rotting alongside the track, and so on ad nauseam. How can the Grits talk of profit from the Intercolonial, when they know full well its managers have wasted millions of the country's money!

Mr. H. Corby, ex-M.P., has lately been remembering his friends with souvenir post cards, sent from Karlsbad. One received this morning by the publisher of The Intelligencer bears the legend: "Morning drink. All well. Kind regards. H. C." The scene depicts about 10,000 people, more or less, who appear to be smiling as though their morning drink agreed with them. Judging by the scenery, Karlsbad must be a pretty good place to live in.

HEARD AT THE BAND CONCERT.

"Will we celebrate the coronation on Saturday or Monday?" "On Sunday, I guess."

"What would you rather be in Summer time?" "A school teacher."

"What made them put Ald. Blank in the Council?" "Hard luck, I suppose."

"When are they going to begin laying the granolithic sidewalks?" "When the cool weather comes."

"Why don't they use the park flagstaff any longer?" "Because it's long enough."

The whole environment of the MAGI Caledonia Springs embraces unique conditions for the promotion of health; amusement, good company, accommodation, Waters and Baths

"What would you do if you wanted to make everybody love you?" "Run for Alderman."

"What's the nicest thing you ever heard of on a warm Sunday?" "A short sermon."

"What would we do if the Kingston sea serpent showed up in our bay?" "Send Pat Hayes out after it."

"When are the Aldermen going to take their vacation?" "Next January, most of 'em."

"What would you do to a man who rode a bicycle on the sidewalk on some of the back streets?" "Give him a medal for bravery."

"What are you going to do next winter if the coal strike continues?" "Put a padlock on my coal bin."

"What's that dismal sound we hear when the band stops playing?" "That's the harbor bar moaning because the guns are not painted yet."

"What play of Shakespeare's does the old d.s.b.g. remind you of?" "A Midsummer Night's Dream, after eating lobster salad."

AS TO TELEPHONES

BELL TELEPHONE MONOPOLY IS LIABLE TO BE BROKEN IN PICTON.

Picton Gazette: There was, seemingly, a most decided opinion manifested at the meeting of the Council on Tuesday night, to discountenance the proposition made by the Bell Telephone Co. to install a fire alarm system, in consideration of an extension of the franchise. It was thought by the citizens that the new Telephone Co., who are seeking admission to the town, should be permitted to do business in Picton, providing satisfactory arrangements could be made as to price of rental of Telephones, location of wires so as not to mar the appearance of the streets by additional poles, etc. What the people desire is a cheap system of 'phones, and a little more consideration on the part of all companies to meet the wishes of their patrons. It is thought, by many of the rate-payers that inasmuch as the present fire alarm system meets the requirements of the Board of Underwriters, the Council would scarcely be carrying out the wishes of the people by renewing the franchise for another five years to the Bell Telephone Company, but, with proper restrictions, should permit the local company an opportunity to install their system in Picton.

KUBELIK IS NOT A MALE TRILBY

AGENT SAYS HE IS NOT UNDER HYPNOTIC INFLUENCE — HIS MANAGER IS ACCUSED.

London, July 31.—Herr Gorlitz, agent for Jan Kubelik, the violinist, says that Kubelik intends to leave his home in Prague because he is disgusted with the attempts that are being made to separate him and Herr Skrivan, his manager.

Herr Gorlitz is emphatic in declaring that Herr Skrivan is a trustworthy business man. He says that all the money earned by Kubelik has been banked in the violinist's own name. In the last ten months he earned over $120,000 in America and England, and of this amount he saved 75 per cent.

Herr Skrivan accompanies Kubelik at all his concerts, and he certainly does not influence his playing in any way. He generally sits at the piano and turns music for the accompanist.

Kubelik left London two days ago. He is now in Dresden, where it is probable he will make his home in the future. He will go to Prague for a few hours to remove his belongings from there.

Jan's brother writes that the violinist is a sort of male "Trilby," he being totally under the baneful influence of "Svengali Skrivan." The brother quotes Skrivan as saying that he regards Jan as a racehorse, which must always be under his trainer's eye. He declares that Jan is kept a prisoner, is prevented from seeing his mother, family, or friends, and is being goaded to financial and physical ruin.

A telegram from Vienna declares that Jan denies absolutely his brother's charges. On the other hand, his brother and relatives who have been interviewed by Czech newspapers say that they expected an official denial of the charges owing to Skrivan's mysterious influence over the violinist.

Morbid Sensitiveness.

The surest way to conquer morbid sensitiveness is to mingle with people as freely as possible, and, while appraising your own ability and intelligence at least as impartially as you would those of a friend or acquaintance, to forget yourself. Unless you can become unconscious of self you will never either appear at your best or do the best of which you are capable, says a writer in Success. It requires will power and an unbending determination to conquer this arch enemy to success, but what has been done can be done, and many who were held down by it for years have by their own efforts outgrown it and risen to commanding positions.

Mind Action Revealed by a Watch.

"If I suspend my watch directly in front of me by holding the end of the chain with both hands, I find that the watch will swing in the direction of which I am thinking," says a psychological writer. "If I think of it swinging in a circle, it swings in a circle. If I think of it swinging from right to left and from left to right, it swings in that manner. I try to make no movements with my hands, but find it impossible to keep them from it for any length of time, if I concentrate my attention on the movement."

SYDNEY OR HALIFAX.

Must Be the Terminus of the Canadian Fast Atlantic Line.

London, Aug. 2.—Sir Christopher Furness organized a meeting of shipowners, which was held Thursday at West Hartlepool. It was resolved to protest against the payment of subsidies by the British Government for a fast Atlantic service, except for the purpose of securing an efficient mail service.

In the opinion of Canadian shippers and Canadian business men in London, generally, no freight subsidy should be given to the Canadian Pacific Railway. Many are also opposed to the enormous passenger subsidy. The British-German Line men declare that even the best Canadian line will not divert a pound of freight or a single passenger from the present routes. It is also the prevailing opinion that the terminal port of the fast Canadian line must be Sydney or Halifax. No greyhound could maintain ocean speed on the St. Lawrence River to Quebec.

DROWNED AT PARRY SOUND.

Wm. Lewis and Ed. Gardiner Find Watery Graves in the Harbor.

Parry Sound, Aug. 2.—A man named William Lewis was drowned off the dock at Parry Harbor Thursday night. Lewis had come in with a small excursion party from Depot Harbor, where he was employed. On returning to the steamer he fell off the dock and was drowned before assistance could be rendered. An inquest will be held. Lewis came from Port Perry.

Another drowning accident occurred last evening about 8 o'clock. Two lads, Ed. Gardiner and Sherrill Whalen, were in a canoe a short way out from the foot of Belvidere Hill. In some way the canoe upset. Whalen swam for the shore and was picked up by another boat. Gardiner, who could not swim, clung to the canoe, but before assistance reached him he had relaxed his hold and sank to the bottom. His body has not yet been recovered. His relatives live in Toronto.

MORE CHILDREN IN QUEBEC.

Ontario Shows a Decrease in Population of Infants.

Ottawa, Aug. 2.—The census department has issued a bulletin on ages, which shows that there are 13,021 more children under five years in Quebec than in Ontario, although the latter is one-third larger in population than Quebec.

Since 1871 there has been a remarkable decrease in the population of infants in Ontario and Prince Edward Island.

The provinces showing the largest proportion over 70 years are Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Ontario. Thirty out of every thousand in Canada are people over 70 years of age, and 23 are children up to 9 years. The largest proportion of children under 10 is in the Northwest, with Quebec and Manitoba closely following.

EARTH STILL TREMBLES.

Four Severe Shocks Felt in Los Alamos Valley Thursday.

Santa Barbara, Cal., Aug. 2.—During the forenoon yesterday, four severe shocks of earthquake were felt in Los Alamos Valley, and several buildings not already destroyed were cracked badly. One immense structure belonging to Juan Careaga, a short distance from Los Alamos, was turned partly around on its foundations. Everybody who could left Los Alamos yesterday, departing on a special train sent from San Luis, Obispo. Later advices state that the earth continues to tremble at intervals.

Obstinate Case of Itching Eczema

LEG AND FOOT A MASS OF SORES THAT DOCTORS COULD NOT HEAL —A THOROUGH AND LASTING CURE BY

Dr. Chase's Ointment

This letter from Tilsonburg, Ont., is an unsolicited testimonial to the extraordinary healing powers of Dr. Chase's Ointment. This is one more example of how this great ointment cures when all other means have failed. There is something almost magical about the way the preparation heals and cures. People who have not used it can scarcely understand how it can be so effective.

Mr. W. D. Johnson, Tilsonburg, Ont., writes; "My father has been entirely cured of long-standing and obstinate case of eczema by the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment. His leg and foot were a mass of sores, and he suffered something terrible from stinging and itching. Though he used a great many remedies and was treated by one of the best doctors here, he could get no permanent relief until he began the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment.

"This preparation was so cooling and soothing that the very first application brought relief, and it was not long until the leg and foot were perfectly healed and cured. It is a pleasure for him to recommend this ointment because of the great benefit he has derived from it, and he will gladly answer any questions from other sufferers."

Dr. Chase's Ointment is useful in a score of ways. For every irritation or eruption of the skin it affords prompt relief. It heals and soothes wounds, scalds and burns, and has never been equalled as a cure for eczema, salt rheum, tetter and scald head. Sixty cents a box at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

Take Angier's Emulsion in the Summer.

If you have weak lungs or consumption make your fight against the disease during the summer. Physicians advocate fresh air, moderate exercise, and plenty of nutritious food. A valuable adjunct to this treatment, is Angier's Petroleum Emulsion. It promotes a healthy appetite, puts the digestive organs in a condition to digest and assimilate food—thus greatly improving nutrition. It keeps the bowels in a normal condition so that pills and aperients are unnecessary. It is pleasant to take, agrees with the stomach, restores health and vitality.

Infringment of Copyright

Toronto, Aug. 2—Mr. Justice MacMahon yesterday handed out his decision in an important copyright action tried at the late sittings of the Non-Jury Assize Court. His Worship holds that Robertson & Henderson's "High School History of Greece," is an infringement of Prof. Oman's copyright, "History of Greece." An injunction has been granted to prevent further infringement, and an order made for the delivery to the professor of all such books in Robertson's & Henderson's possession, with a reference for damages for those sold.

Failed to Swim the Channel.

Dover, Aug. 2.—Holbein, the swimmer, attempted to negotiate the English Channel, but failed after covering more than the distance from coast to coast. When he was taken from the water, he had swam 30 miles, but was only 6 miles off the French coast. The tide threatened to carry him to the open sea, when the attempt was abandoned. He was bitterly disappointed, and was strong at the finish.

Spent Night in Tree Top.

Dallas, Texas, Aug 2.—No heavy rains fell in Texas Thursday and the situation was vastly improved yesterday morning. Traffic of all kinds is now being handled by Texas roads, with perfect safety. Many people spent Tuesday night in tree tops around Quinlan, and were rescued with difficulty the following morning by boats brought from Greenville and Paris for that purpose.

A STORY OF HENRY BERGH.

One of His New York Experiences In Protecting Dumb Animals.

Like a well dressed, somber ghost he went striding down the snowy street, and at University place he found the thing he had expected—a car packed inside almost to suffocation, both platforms packed outside, with men clinging like big burs to bottom steps and dashboard rails, and before it, within a cloud of steam, two ill fed, bony horses with bloodshot eyes and wide, red nostrils flaring in their effort to fill laboring lungs with air, with heaving sides and straining backs and flanks, while their madly scrambling feet struck fire from the slippery stones as they strove in vain to start again the awful weight behind them. Curses, oft jerked bell and assisting yells of passengers failed of effect. The driver's whip was raised ready for the stinging blow, when suddenly the straining effort ceased, the horses' heads drooped low, and through the thick air there loomed up before them a tall, dark form, with hand upraised commandingly. And calm and distinct two laconic words reached all ears: "Stop! Unload!"

"Who the blank are you?" furiously demanded the driver. "And where's your authority for interfering with this trip?"

He knew well enough whom he was talking to, so silently Mr. Bergh turned back the lapel of his coat to show his badge, for in those days he had to do constabulary work as well as official, then repeated, "Unload!"

But, being tired, hungry and mad, the floodgates gave way, and the passengers' wrath burst forth. Abuse, satirical comment, threats, filled the air. To a few who remonstrated decently with him he expressed regret, but with grave politeness insisted on lightening the load, telling them they could see for themselves the utter inability of the horses to get them to the end of the line and gently urged them hereafter to note the condition of crowding before taking a place on a car.

The conductor was especially ugly and became unpleasantly demonstrative. His example worked like a leaven on the rest, and a spirit of riot began to show distinctly in the crowd closing about the tall, calm, self possessed man. All faces scowled, and evil names were tossed upon the air. He had just said, "You are yourselves increasing this delay; you might have moved two minutes and a half ago," when a scurrilous great brute came close up to him and, with an unspeakable epithet, shook a dirty fist directly in his face. Without the flash of an eye or the quiver of a muscle in his quiet face Mr. Bergh caught the ruffian by the shoulder, whirled him around, grabbed the seat of his breeches and the nape of his neck, and, with a splendid "now all together" sort of a swing, he fired him straight across the street, head on into the snow bank.

A silence of utter amazement was suddenly broken by one great, swelling laugh, and then followed the always thrilling sound of three gloriously hearty American cheers. Many men shook hands with Mr. Bergh before beginning their long tramp homeward. Some admitted their error in aiding the overloading.—Clara Morris in McClure's Magazine.

JAMAICA AND ANNEXATION

The Latest Developments on Both Sides of the Water.

Chamber of Commerce in Kingston Condemns British Government For Parsimony—Financial Assistance Too Small—It Is Urged That Union With the United States Should Be Agitated—Mr. Chamberlain Hopeful of Better Results.

Kingston, Jamaica, Aug. 2.—The Chamber of Commerce Thursday condemned the British Government for its treatment of this colony, and urged that there be an energetic agitation for annexation to the United States.

A resolution, expressing alarm over the situation and disappointment over the utterly inadequate grant to assist the sugar industry was adopted.

Regrets that His Majesty's Government had failed to grasp the seriousness of the situation, as £10,000, offered as a loan, is of no apparent advantage to the colony, are heard on every side. The planters have agreed to take no notice of the offer.

Newspapers are printing articles on the annexation question. Most of the writers favor this step. A federation with Canada is also suggested.

Mr. Chamberlain Hopeful.

London, Aug. 2.—In an explanatory statement, in the House of Commons, yesterday, of the grant of £250,000 ($1,250,000), for the relief of sugar planters in the British West Indies, Colonial Secretary Chamberlain said he took a hopeful view of the future of the islands. When he assumed office, grave apprehension existed that the islands would be thrown on the hands of the Government, and it was that state of affairs which led to the appointment, in 1896, of a Royal Commission, to investigate the West Indian sugar industry.

As a result of the Brussels Convention's abolition of sugar bounties, which were ruining the West Indies, the situation had much improved, and was now much brighter, especially as a direct line of fruit steamers was developing an important trade. It was promised, also, that enormous coal deposits, which had been found in Trinidad, would materially help the islands. British Guiana, which had been largely dependent upon sugar, is now developing diamond and gold fields, which promise to have considerable commercial value. However, the period till the promised abolition of bounties, in 1903, must be bridged over, and £250,000 ($1,250,000) was the smallest sum that would suffice. The Government would see that the relief fund was so distributed that the neediest should get the largest share.

VALUABLE ACQUISITION.

Earl Beauchamp's Defection From Conservative Party So Viewed.

London, Aug. 2.—Earl Beauchamp, who has gone over to the Liberals, is regarded as one of the "strenuous" order among the younger members of the British peerage. He is only 30 years old, but already possesses the distinction of having held one of the most important colonial governorships, succeeded his father as seventh Earl in 1891, and quickly showed a desire to engage in public life.

His marriage to Lady Lettice Grosvenor, sister of the present and grand-daughter of the late Duke of Westminster, which took place in Cheshire last Saturday, brings him into family relationship with the Duke and Duchess of Teck, the Cornwallis-Wests (Mrs. George Cornwallis West being formerly Lady Randolph Churchill), and, through Lady Beauchamp's mother, to Mr. George Wyndham, the present Irish Secretary, who is the Countess Grosvenor's second husband.

MR. WHITNEY AT CARP.

Methodists at a Harvest Home Festival Honor Him.

Ottawa, Aug. 2.—Over 800 people greeted Mr. Whitney, M.P.P., at a harvest home festival held under the auspices of the Methodists of Carp, Carlton County, last night.

Mr. Whitney went out by train from Ottawa last evening accompanied by Denis Murphy, M.P.P., John Coates, president Ottawa Board of Trade, Warden Cummings and others.

Addresses were presented to Mr. Whitney by the official board of the Methodist Church and by the Conservative Association of Carleton. Mr. Whitney in his reply eschewed party politics, confining his remarks to an academic discussion of political questions of general interest.

Mr. George N. Kidd, M.P.P., presided, and other speakers were: Mr. John Coates, Mr. Denis Murphy, Rev. S. G. Bland and Rev. Norman McGillivray. The village was decorated gaily.

Peace Efforts Thwarted.

Panama, Aug. 2.—The Peace Commissioners, who left here on July 29, on the British steamer Cana, to visit the revolutionary general, Herrera, near Agua Dulce, returned to Panama yesterday. They informed the representative of the Associated Press that they were unable to fulfil their mission because a very severe engagement between Herrera's forces and the Government troops had been in progress since Tuesday, July 29, when the revolutionary forces began to attack Agua Dulce.

BABY'S OWN TABLELS

FOR WEAK AND SICKLY CHILDREN DURING THE HOT WEATHER.

Thousands of children die during the hot weather months, because summer complaints and stomach troubles come suddenly, and mothers do not have the means at hand to promptly check and cure them. In homes where Baby's Own Tablets are used these precious little ones can be saved, and no home where there are infants and young children should be without them.

Baby's Own Tablets will promptly cure all stomach and bowel troubles, and are a great relief to teething children. The Tablets are sold under a positive guarantee that they contain neither opiate nor harmful drug. Crushed to a powder they can be given with absolute safety to a new born babe. Mrs. R. Ferguson, 105 Mansfield street, Montreal, says; "I have used Baby's Own Tablets and have found them the best medicine I have ever given my children. My baby has always been small and delicate and suffered so much last summer with his teeth that I did not think he would live. Then he was attacked with dysentery, a feverish skin and cough. As the doctor's medicine did not help him, I sent for Baby's Own Tablets and they did him a wonderful amount of good, and he is now getting on splendidly. I gladly give my experience for the benefit of other mothers." If your druggist does not keep these Tablets they will be sent by mail post paid at 25 cents a box by writing direct to the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., or Schenectady, N.Y.

Shoemaker's Backache.

The constant bending over that of necessity a shoemaker must do when at work comes hard on the back and hard on the kidneys.

The kidneys get cramped and strained, are unable to filter the blood as they should—they tell of their disordered condition by making the back ache and pain.

There isn't much use rubbing on liniments or sticking on plasters when the prime cause of the ache lies in the kidneys.

The remedy that is most effectual for "shoemaker's backache," as for all kinds of backache and kidney trouble, is Dr. Pitcher's Backache Kidney Tablets.

INTENSE PAIN.

John Saunders, shoemaker, Whitby, Ont., gives the following evidence:—"I procured a bottle of Dr. Pitcher's Backache Kidney Tablets at the drug store, and can say that they gave me great relief immediately. I was suffering with intense pain in the back and biliousness, with bad taste in the mouth, and loss of appetite. Under the influence of the medicine all this quickly disappeared and I feel well again. One thing I wish to say, while they did the work finely, they were very gentle in action, no distress, no griping like other medicines, and I was able to work all the time. I can heartily recommend them to all who suffer from backache, kidney trouble or biliousness."

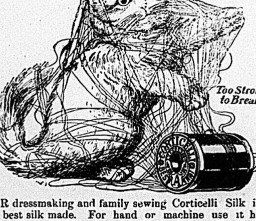
Corticelli

SPOOL SILK



FOR dressmaking and family sewing Corticelli Silk is the best silk made. For hand or machine use it has no equal. Corticelli Silk runs smoothly in the needle; it is always even in size and always full length and full strength.

Ask your dealer for "Corticelli" and politely but firmly refuse all substitutes which some clerk may say are "just as good." You may be sure they all lack the many excellent qualities of the genuine Corticelli Silk.

If your dealer does not keep Corticelli Silk it is probably because he makes a little more money selling you some other brand. As Corticelli costs YOU no more than poor silk, why don't you try it? Ask for "CORTICELLI"—the Dressmakers Favorite Spool Silk.

CHAPTER I.

"My dear boy, we must have money! If we argued the question twenty and twice twenty times over," says Lady Glynne, fanning herself with languid grace, "it would come to the same thing in the end. Stern reality, Dallas, stern reality!"

Lady Nora Glynne — otherwise "Lady Nora" to her hundred and one bosom friends — was baptized "Honoria" about forty-seven years ago; but she does not look thirty, except on the morning after a ball, or when her creditors grow unmanageable, or when some promising admirer goes away to fresh woods and pastures new.

For Lady Nora is a pretty little widow, and has been a pretty little widow for fifteen years, in spite of the most brilliant and daring speculations in the marriage market. Some small dividends her speculations certainly do return to her — jewelry, bric-a-brac, flowers, gloves, fans, opera and theatre boxes, and a few invitations for yachting parties, for autumn and Christmas parties, when there are going to be tableaux and theatricals. Lady Nora "makes up" exquisitely, and is the pertest and prettiest of chambermaids.

But what is a feast of pralines, fondants, and Chinois glaces when one is hungering for satisfying meat and drink? Rahatla-Koum is a wretched substitute for roast beef. One generous lover indeed gave Lady Nora an etrenne one New Year's morning of a dozen pairs of gloves, with a ten-pound note slipped deftly between each exquisite little pearl-gray and tan Suede pair.

Lady Nora is not proud. She sighs when she remembers that etrenne, which has never had a successor of equal worth, though she has tried the same methods of extortion — to wit, half a dozen bright stars glistening on her dark eyelashes, three or four heart-rending sighs, and a brief, fragmentary, artless confidence, from a full heart, to the "dearest, kindest, friend in the world," respecting some "horrid tradesman" and their "quite too abominably extortionate" charges.

But the giver of that charming box of gloves is the owner of twelve thousand a year. So, after all, the ten-pound notes were little more than a few pralines and fondants in place of the banquet which Lady Nora expected, and thought herself fully justified in expecting.

No; Lady Nora is not a proud woman by any means. She does many things at which a proud woman would blush—at which her son Dallas Glynne can not help blushing, as he has the instincts and sensitiveness of a gentleman, though, brought up in the school in which he has been, his code of honor is elastic and his shield of morality none of the brightest.

It is a cruel trial to maternal affection and lady-like amiability when a pretty woman who might very well pass for twenty-five, has suddenly to acknowledge a big broad-shouldered, moustached son in the Guards. Still the fact is a stern reality, as she has just said to Dallas about money, or rather the dire want of it from which they are suffering. And Lady Nora, being really a fond mother, and loving her big son best of anything on earth, has resolved, at forty-seven, gracefully to accept the inevitable, and recognize the fact of her stalwart son being twenty-six, and be proud of him, and dote on him even more than she does on diamonds, admiration, or a partie carree after the Opera.

And so she resolves to be a very good mother according to her lights —that is to say, she means to move heaven and earth, metaphorically, to scheme, plot, plan, cajole, condescend—do anything and everything for her son's advancement in life.

And there is only one way in which this is to be achieved—the easiest, quickest, most natural and reasonable way in which a handsome, well-bred, well-born young man can step from impecuniosity into prosperity—Dallas must marry money. There is no other hope for him or for her in this world, Lady Nora decides, and utters her decision.

She has worked hard—desperately hard—in every other direction, and failed—worked for the chances of a wealthy establishment for herself, worked for the chances of the favor of his uncle, the Earl of Pentreath; and now she is forty-seven and Dallas is twenty-six, and she has signally failed in her efforts.

The Earl allows her son the same yearly sum that he allowed that son's father, the Honorable Percival Glynne—five hundred a year—no more, no less; and he refuses absolutely to pay any debts for mother or for son, or to afford his brother's widow any further advantage from her relationship to him.

"And I know whom I have to thank for that," Lady Glynne says, setting her teeth hard—"that mean hypocrite, his son Lyulph Glynne, the man I detest most in the whole world!"

"He is a pale-faced smooth-voiced prig of a fellow," assents Dallas carelessly. "But I shouldn't worry myself by hating him so actively, if I were you, mother; you'll certainly upset your digestion—and that will be no joke after that underdone chou-fleur au gratin at dinner!"

But Lady Nora beats her pretty foot restlessly on the carpet, whilst her breath comes fast; she has her own reasons for her vengeful impotent hatred of her nephew by marriage—Viscount Glynne, whom good old ladies call "a most excellent young man." And yet she is in the main, a very good-natured, good-tempered, charming little woman, whom even her worst traducers cannot dislike.

So there is silence for a few minutes in the little salon, whilst Dallas smokes and stares sleepily at the carpet and the green plush-covered furniture, and the short, snowy-white, crisp window curtains, and the glaring gilded frames of the oblong and oval mirrors, all in meretricious style of the worst French taste.

And then Lady Glynne answers him, as if her thoughts had dwelt all the time on the badly-cooked chou-fleur—

"Yes, horrid, wasn't it? And so was the soup, and so was the duck. But what can one expect at a place like this? Things are desperate with us, or we would not have come here, of course!" "Uneatable plats are amongst the commonest miseries of poverty," Lady Nora goes on, her pleasant bird-like voice growing sharper and more peevish. "But here we are and here we must stay—at least, I must," Lady Nora says, beating her foot again on the carpet. She pauses for a moment, and then continues, "Glynne has taken that absurd wife of his to Trouville; and she knew I wanted to go horribly! It would just have suited me, for several reasons; but Lyulph Glynne would go out of his way to injure or disappoint me!" Lady Nora declares, setting her teeth very hard.

"I really dare not encounter those dreadful tradespeople again until I can give them something to stop them from devouring me alive!" her ladyship says presently, with tears of vexation in her eyes. "I sha'n't soon forget that horrid Rundle's insolence about my last order. Actually took back the goods when the cook did not pay him! They have become so disagreeable since the 'Stores' came into existence! Rundle said, 'Her ladyship can pay ready money at the 'Stores' for her groceries—let her pay me ready money for mine;' and the truth of it was, I hadn't five pounds in the world until I got fifty pounds from my dividends from Salter—and he would not give me a penny more! I am so weary of it all, Dallas!" Lady Nora concludes, with pretty pathos, sinking down on the carpet at her son's feet and curving her fair round throat backwards as she lays her head on his knee—a pretty pose, a charming and touching picture—the still young graceful mother and her stalwart son.

Lady Nora has practised the pose a great many times in public as well as in private, and Dallas is just a little tired of it.

"One of my lady's 'little ways'" he says to himself contemptuously.

"So weary of it all, dear," she repeats pathetically, "for you more than for myself!"

There is a pause.

"We must do something, Dallas!" Lady Nora says, with some impatience in her voice, as her son offers no suggestion. "The idea of your spending your leave in this fifth-rate place, with its fifth-rate cookery and tenth-rate people."

"To follow up your decision that something must be done, I suppose," Dallas answers with a yawn and a sigh as he lights another cigarette. "Give me your clever design, madre mia, and I will cast my practical eye over it, and tell you if it is feasible."

"Of course it is feasible," Lady Nora rejoins sharply, getting irritated. "As you know, and have always known, Dallas, you must marry a girl with money."

"Yes, I know it and I always have known it," he agrees quietly, with a stifled sigh. "And the only girl I ever cared for, hasn't a crooked sixpence."

"Who was that, Dallas?" Lady Nora asks coolly. "Your old playmate, Joyce Murray? Yes, poor Joyce is a very nice girl and a very pretty girl," she admits, shrugging her shoulders, "but, as you say, she hasn't a farthing. You might as well buy a broom and learn to sweep a crossing the day you thought of marrying her."

"And after the trouble of learning, I don't suppose Joyce Murray would care to marry a crossing-sweeper," adds Dallas.

"Of course she wouldn't," Lady Nora says, with a little laugh. "Joyce will marry well, I have no doubt. Her sisters all married well, and so will she. Of course she knows that is due to herself and to her position. Joyce is a little aristocrat to her finger-tips."

"Poor little Joyce!" ejaculates Dallas, with a slight break in his voice. "She used to be very fond of me when I was at Sandhurst and she was in the schoolroom. I believe she would share the crossing-sweeping with me if I were fool or knave enough to ask her."

"Perhaps so," responds Lady Nora drily. "But you are a gentleman, and man of sense and honor enough not to ruin a girl socially and plunge her into beggary simply because she cared for you."

Dallas is silent, scarcely heeding his mother's self-satisfied worldly chatter; but he feels a dull distaste for her society, and for his own at the same time, and sinks into a gloomy reverie.

"I wish that it was all settled and done with and that I had a wife— if there is such a thing to be got as a sensible, kind-hearted girl who would not expect too much from me," he muses. "I'd behave faultlessly to her —I would, on my honor; and, if we got on comfortably together, I should grow quite fond of her in time. Not as fond as I am of Joyce — that is a different sort of thing, of course. Poor dear little girl! I was hard hit last autumn in Scotland!"

"Did you notice her, Dallas? She is such a dear, queer old thing! She — they all sit far down the table on the left-hand side, and she wears a big lilac-and-white knitted shawl."

"She is Miss Dormer, and she is rich, and they are all rich, my dear boy," Lady Nora replies briefly and earnestly. "They have just had sixty thousand pounds bequeathed to them by a brother or uncle — I am not sure which — and the niece will be sole heiress to something like eighty or ninety thousand pounds."

"You are precise, mother," remarks Dallas, with something like a sneer. "Others would say 'a hundred thousand,' and think nothing of it. And is this good lady in the lilac-and-white shawl the niece?"

"Good gracious — no!" Lady Nora exclaims, startled and excited and very much in earnest. "How absurd of you, Dallas! And I should hardly expect you to ridicule my anxieties on your behalf!" she adds crossly.

"My dear mother," Dallas says, unruffled, "I did not know what glamour 'eighty or ninety thousand pounds' had cast over your usually keen perceptions. And if 'the good lady' — doesn't that phrase describe her exactly? — is the rich Miss Dormer, who is the richer Miss Dormer?"

"Miss Dormer's niece. You didn't notice her, I dare say," Lady Nora responds, with a little uncertainty in her tones — "quite a young girl. She sat behind her aunt."

"No; I saw nobody near the good lady in the shawl but a little girl with her hair in a pigtail," Dallas says, yawning unmistakably. "I christened her 'Miss Morleena Kenwigs' on the spot."

"Yes," she resumes in a thoughtful tone, turning the rings on her dimpled fingers, and gazing, not at Dallas, but past him, at the Place, now, "a harmony in black and silver" in the shadows and the moonlight; "the niece will inherit all — both her aunt's and her uncle's legacies, as well as her own. Miss Yolande Dormer will be very rich one day."

"Miss what?" Dallas adds, with impatience. "Yolande? Does she spell it with a 'Y' or an 'I'? What a name for an ordinary nineteenth century young woman! It is equally suggestive of Arthurian legends and a comic opera."

"Oh, I think it is such a sweet name!" Lady Nora says gushingly, and then stops, as if uncertain what to say next. "It was her father's choice, Miss Dormer told me."

"Well, madre mia, go on," Dallas urges, as she pauses. "I can spare you five minutes for a description of the charms of the richer Miss Dormer. Miss Iolande or Yolande! Heavens what a name to call a woman by if the house was on fire! I say, mother, couldn't you find a daughter-in-law with a prettier appellation than that?"

"A daughter-in-law? How absurd of you!" rejoins Lady Nora coldly. "I haven't seen the girl more than once or twice——"

"And know as much about her as if you had seen her one or two hundred times," her son interposes more coldly. "Madre mia, why will you trouble yourself and me with polite fictions? I won't marry a girl, however rich, who is deformed or disfigured, who has a blot on her name or a taint in her blood. Provide one who is different, and I'll hang the sacrificial garlands around my own neck, and trot up to the altar at St. Peter's, Eaton Square, or Saint Anybody's, and submit to my fate without so much as a bleat of disapprobation. I can't say any more than that, can I?"

"No, indeed," replies Lady Nora, laughing. "You are always the best of boys, Dallas; though indeed I should never have expected anything from you on this score but what was sensible and unselfish, dearest"—with a little gush of gratitude at which Dallas winces. "But you may be sure," Lady Nora continues, in a tone of cordial assurance, "that whatever girl I advise you to marry will at least do you no discredit. I shall be most careful on every point, you may rest quite satisfied, Dallas."

"Thanks," says the young fellow slowly, drawing his moustache through his fingers. There is a smothered sigh, and then he starts up and takes his hat. "I am going out," he announces rather abruptly; "it is stifling indoors, and it is getting quite late for this most virtuous town—nine o'clock! The French shop-keepers and goody-goody Britishers all go to bed at ten o'clock, I believe. I shall look in at the Etablissement, and see if I can find Ormond. If his party are staying at the Hotel des Bains, Lady Jeannie and he are sure to be there."

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Her Noble Deed.

"No wonder he loves her! Didn't she save his life?"

"Mercy! How?"

"Why, he said if she didn't accept him he'd go and kill himself, and she took him."

GREAT ALTERATION SALE

For the last year we have been inconvenienced considerably for want of space to show our goods, that our business has grown no one will doubt, and in order to keep pace with its rapid growth we must have more room.

To-day the carpenters will remove our rear store and begin work in earnest. The plumbers are with us busy at their part of the job. We have had to remove all our goods in the rear of the cellar and the front part of our store is also to receive special up-to-date touches. What we ask is that the people of Belleville and vicinity will aid us in getting rid of our crowded stock, and for this end we will hold two weeks sale, goods will be sold so cheap that it will startle the whole community.

DESERONTO DOINGS

BARN BURNED — BIG FISH CAUGHT—LABOR DAY CELEBRATION.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Adams are preparing for their departure for Winnipeg.

H. Bull, of Belleville, was in town on Wednesday.

A cricket match was played at Deseronto last Monday, Deseronto vs. Napanee, resulting in an easy victory for Napanee by an innings and 13 runs. Deseronto goes to Picton on Wednesday, August 6th, to play a match.

Rev. Dr. McDiarmid caught the first big black bass of the season yesterday. It weighed 4 pounds. G. W. Hedges, of Toronto, landed a channel cat that weighed five pounds.

The barn on the farm of Wm. Brant, just west of the town, was destroyed by fire yesterday. There were six tons of hay in this barn, as well as farming implements. The loss was total. He was in Marysville cutting hay and didn't know of his loss until the evening.

The Church of the Redeemer will be open for service on Sunday, after having been in the hands of the renovators for several weeks.

Miss Oronhyatekha's fine collection of parrots, cockatoos and other native Australian birds, which recently came into her possession, is interesting and attracts the attention of visitors to Foresters' Island.

The firemen of Deseronto are counting on a record day for their celebration on Labor Day. There is a prize of $35 in cash for the winning team in a hose reel contest, with $20 for second place. For a hook and ladder race similar prizes are offered. In the band competition $35 goes to the band securing the most points, and the second prize is $20. There will be a grand parade, leaving the market at 1.30 p.m., in which the visiting firemen are expected to take part.

"A Grave-Yard Cough" is the cry of tortured lungs for mercy. Give them mercy in the form of Allen's Lung Balsam, which is used with good effect even in consumption's early stages. Never neglect a cough.

AS TO PROHIBITION

A TORONTO PAPER SAYS IT IS A JOKE IN THE EYES OF ITS OWN FRIENDS.

(Toronto Telegram.)

The Dominion Alliance for the total suppression of the liquor traffic adjourned without enriching its list of vice-presidents with the names of Joseph E. Seagram, M.P., H. Corby, and the representative of Hiram Walker.

It is true that Mr. Corby and Mr. Seagram are not prohibitionists.

But neither is Hon. G. W. Ross.

Affection for or usefulness to prohibition seems to be no longer a qualification for the office of vice-president of the Dominion Alliance.

The list of vice-presidents includes the names of Hon. G. W. Ross and other non-prohibitionists. Brewers and distillers are non-prohibitionists. So are politicians, and neither Mr. Seagram nor Mr. Corby desires prohibition less than Hon. G. W. Ross desires prohibition.

Prohibition is a mistake. Sincerity even in the advocacy of a mistake is more admirable than the proceedings of such a ghastly fraud as the Dominion Alliance. An organization which chooses Hon. G. W. Ross and other gentlemen who do not want prohibition to lead the hosts which go forth to battle for prohibition is merely juggling with its alleged principles for the benefit of its party.

The Dominion Alliance chose Hon. G. W. Ross and Hon. Geo. A. Cox as its vice-presidents. Neither Mr. Ross or Mr. Cox is a prohibitionist. Why did the Dominion Alliance discriminate between politicians who are anti-prohibitionists and brewers and distillers who are in the same class? The list of vice-presidents might have been enriched with the names of Joseph Seagram and George Gooderham. The Dominion Alliance made a great mistake when it failed to appoint James Haverson, K.C., as its campaign secretary and to name that grand old Goliath of the prohibition cause, the Hamilton Times, as the official organ of the Alliance.

PERMANENT CURE FOR NEURALGIA.

Experienced sufferers state that no remedy relieves neuralgia so quickly as a hot application of Polson's Nerviline, the strongest liniment made. Nerviline is certainly very penetrating and has a powerful influence over neuralgic pains, which it destroys almost at once. Nerviline is highly recommended for Rheumatism, Lumbago, Sciatica and Toothache. Better try a 25c bottle, it's all right.

No Pills like Dr. Hamilton's.

One kind of popularity may be obtained through the pop of corks.

QUESTION ANSWERED.

Yes, August Flower still has the largest sale of any medicine in the civilized world. Your mothers and grandmothers never thought of using anything else for Indigestion or Biliousness. Doctors were scarce, and they seldom heard of Appendicitis, Nervous Prostration or Heart Failure, etc. They used August Flower to clean out the system and stop fermentation of undigested food, regulate the action of the liver, stimulate the nervous and organic action of the system, and that is all they took when feeling dull and bad with headaches and other aches. You only need a few doses of Green's August Flower, in liquid form, to make you satisfied there is nothing serious the matter with you. You can get this reliable remedy at R. Templeton & Co.'s.

THE VILLAGE DOCTOR.

Along the village streets where maples lean,
  Together like old friends about the way,
A faithful pair oft and anon were seen—
  He and his nag, both growing old and gray,
What secrets lurked within that old soul's breast,
  Of mother-love, of throb of pains and ills.
All safely kept beneath that buttoned vest,
  Receptacle of powders and of pills,
Thrice happy he when some fond mother's eyes
  Grew moist with love unspeakable to find,
Snugged to her breast her babe, whose paradise
  Within her soul and bosom were entwined,
How oft he held the wrist to mark the slow
  Pulsation of the feebly fluttering heart,
While his kind words, soft-murmuring and low,
  Essayed to calm the mourner's pain and smart,
He was to all a father, brother, friend;
  Their joys were his, their sorrows were his own.
He slept for years where yonder willows bend
  Above the violets that kiss the stone.

Alcohol Story Is Now Cleared Up

Investigation Shows That an Error Was Made.

Ex-Employee of Evans & Sons Says "Dope" of Alcohol Was Made—Police Still Cling to Murder Theory—Inquest Will be Adjourned Again.

Toronto, August 4.—Mr. J. M. Spencer, Manager for Evans & Sons, in whose warehouse the mysterious deaths of E. Geen and George Whalley occurred, said on Saturday that the alleged shortage in the stock of alcohol in the warehouse did not exist. At the inquest, the Manager swore that there appeared to be a discrepancy between the orders and the amount of stock on hand, showing a loss to the firm of 99 gallons of alcohol.

Mr. Spencer said he had been guarded in his evidence because he had only the statement of his clerks, made after a hurried stock-taking, to go upon. Since then there was a careful scrutiny of the several thousand orders, and these tallied with the stock to within a few gallons. Mr. Spencer said that, after allowance was made for evaporation, the figures of orders and shipments between March 31 and June 24 tallied exactly.

A Dope Story.

James O'Reilly, who works for the M. Langmuir Company, Limited, has come forward with a statement which may tend to throw a great flood of light on the warehouse mystery. O'Reilly worked with Evans and Sons for a number of years, and he declares that it was the practice of several of the employes then to make what he termed "dope" out of alcohol, diluting the spirits with water, and also mixing it with sherry.

Less than two years ago O'Reilly says he was seized with a fainting spell in the basement. He was removed to St. Michael's hospital in an unconscious condition. He was attacked with hemorrhage, and as a result of his illness he was laid up for over one month. O'Reilly attributed his sickness to the "dope" he had been drinking, coupled with the fact that he had been inhaling the fumes which at all times pervaded the basement.

An an ex-employe, O'Reilly was in the habit of calling at the warehouse. He paid a visit to the basement a few days before Whalley's death, and found that the practice of drinking "dope" made from alcohol had not been discontinued. He alleges that he had several drinks himself that day. He declares that only a short time ago he had been offered a position by Evans and Sons, but had refused to accept it, as he considered the basement a most unhealthy place to work in, owing to the fumes from the drugs.

Police Say Murder.

The police still hold to the theory that the two men were murdered. This is also ex-Manager Ragg's opinion of the case. Although desirous of instituting an investigation at the time of Geen's death, he received instructions from the head office at Montreal to let the matter drop. A desire to save the feelings of Geen's parents was the chief reason which induced the firm to advise this course. Coroner Powell was also influenced in deciding not to order an autopsy from the fact that the young man's mother was in a critical state of health.

Burglary a Genuine Attempt.

It is understood that ex-Manager Ragg's evidence bearing on the burglary of the warehouse on May 30th will be of a somewhat startling character. He still believes that it was a genuine attempt at robbery, and that it will be found that the deaths of Geen and Whalley followed as a result.

In this connection all the employes of the warehouse claim to be in a position to show where they were on the night of the burglary. Each man can establish an alibi if necessary.

Interest in the case now centres in the result of Prof. Ellis' analysis of the contents of Whalley's stomach. He expects to have his report ready in time to be submitted at the resumed inquest to-morrow evening. It is understood that no traces of hydrocyanic acid have been found, but whether the analysis will show death by poisoning can only be a matter of conjecture until the report is made public.

Inquest to be Adjourned.

Coroner Young stated to The Mail and Empire yesterday that the Crown intended to exhaust every effort to unravel the mystery. To this end he intends to adjourn the enquiry for one month after the session of the inquest this week.

Employes of the warehouse state that the office cat, which Whalley made his special charge, has been pining away since his death. The animal was found perched on Whalley's back when the body was discovered. The cat has absolutely refused to touch food or drink for the past six days.

YESTERDAY IN CITY CHURCHES

Rev. G. R. Beamish Preaches His First Sermon as Rector of St. Thomas'

St. Thomas' New Rector.

A strongly marked face, crowned with what the lady journalists would call "a wealth of iron grey hair" (which, by the way, is more grey than iron), a sonorous voice, good "church presence" and an impressive manner, those are the salient points which impress one as belonging to Rev. G. R. Beamish, Rector of St. Thomas' church, and successor to Rev. Canon Burke, who yesterday morning preached his initial sermon to his new flock. As might have been expected, Rev. Mr. Beamish took occasion to "lay down the law" to his new congregation, telling them plainly what he expected to do himself and what he, in turn, expected the members of the congregation to do. The text was the 1st and 2nd verses of the 4th chapter of St. Paul's first epistle to the Corinthians:

"Let a man so account of us as of the ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God.

Coming, the preacher said, as he did, to take the place, not to fill the place, of one who had ministered to this congregation for almost a generation, one who had earned the highest praise and respect of his fellow-priests in the diocese, he, the preacher, spoke with a full sense of the responsibility committed to him. The priests of God had nothing to do with success or failure, they were things which rested with the Almighty. He would ask the congregation for a moment to consider the position held by ministers of the church to-day. They spoke, not as men, but as ambassadors of God. Jesus Christ was the commander of the church militant, the clergy were his subordinates in this world. They were not here to be men-pleasers. They were not to seek that mushroom popularity which was earned without merit and lost without crime. They were here to do the work of Christ, able to show from whence they came and what they are. They were the stewards of Christ's estate, which he had purchased with his love and his own blood. They were to manage His estate until He returned, then they must give an account of their stewardship. The stewards must be able to show their credentials—to show that they were fitted for the work and that they had been appointed by proper authority, which Christ Himself possessed, and which He transmitted to His apostles and through them to the clergy of the present day. Such was his (the preacher's) commission to speak to them, otherwise he would not dare to stand in that pulpit. With that commission he feared nothing. Speaking of the duties of the clergy, the preacher said they had the right, as God's ministers, to declare the absolution and remission of sins to those who truly repented. The minister was an intermediary between the Master and His tenants, he pleaded for them to the Master and asked forgiveness of their sins. He presented to the tenants the wishes of the Master. The responsibility was a grave one, and in return for his labors of the minister the congregation must respect the office, even though they did not, as yet, know the man who filled it. The office was everything, the man was nothing. But the laity, as tenants of God's estate, must expect to labor in the vineyard, or the estate could never bring forth good fruit. The minister, as God's steward, had the right to demand of the laborers any duty he deemed necessary. God only knows the reality of our religion, as it is in our hearts and lives. The minister needed sympathy and encouragement, and he asked that of them, for it was very trying to leave those who had been found sympathetic, faithful and good and come among strangers. Therefore he asked them to assist him with their prayers. He spoke thus not from any faint-heartedness, for God would never let His work suffer, but he asked their prayers, which, in conjunction with his own, would be raised that neither priest nor people might forget their duty, which was ever to work for the glory of God.

At the conclusion of the sermon a large number of communicants partook of the Holy Communion.

Christ Church.

Rev. W. B. Heeney, rector, officiated and preached at both services yesterday. In the evening the subject was "The Parable of the Tares," the text being from St. Matthew, 13th chapter, 25th and 26th verses.

Bridge Street.

"A Hidden Gospel" was the subject discussed by the Rev. Dr. Crothers, at Bridge street church last evening. The text was from 2nd Corinthians, 4th chapter and 3rd verse:

"But if our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost."

During the service a solo was rendered by Miss Wheler.

St. John's.

At the morning service the sermon was dispensed with. In the evening the Rector, Rev. Rural Dean Bogert, preached, his text being from 1st Kings, 20th chapter and 11th verse:

"And the King of Israel answered and said, tell him, let not him that girdeth on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off."

St. Andrew's.

The Pastor, Rev. M. W. Maclean, preached at both services yesterday to fair congregations. In the evening the Rev. gentleman's text was from 2nd Corinthians, 5th chapter and 12th verse:

"For we commend not ourselves again unto you, but give you occasion to glory on our behalf, that ye may have somewhat to answer them which glory in appearance and not in heart."

Emmanuel R. E. Church.

Good congregations were present at both services yesterday. In the evening the Rector, Rev. Mr. Gilliland, preached an excellent sermon from the 10th to 16th verses of the 21st chapter of St. Matthew, showing that the divine example should actuate people in all their doings, not only on Sunday, but in all their walks of life.

Tabernacle.

The Pastor, Rev. J. H. Locke, occupied the pulpit in the morning and in the evening the Rev. Newton Hill, of Toronto, a former pastor of the church, preached to an appreciative congregation. His text was from Hebrews, 10th chapter, 12th and 13th verses:

"But this man, after he had offered one sacrifice for sin forever, sat down on the right hand of God.

During the service a duet was given by Mrs. C. H. Nicholson and Mrs. (Dr.) MacColl, which was much appreciated.

Baptist.

At the close of the morning service the sacrament was administered and in the evening the rite of baptism was administered. The Pastor, Rev. O. C. Elliott, preached at both services and his discourses were of an instructive nature. In the evening the text was from St. Matthew, 16th chapter and 24th verse:

"Then Jesus said unto His disciples, If any man will come after me let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me."

John Street.

Good congregations were present at both services yesterday and the sermons by the Pastor, Rev. A. H. Drumm, were of a high order. In the evening the Rev. gentleman's discourse was in reference to Christ's last supper with the apostles. The text was from St. Luke, 22nd chapter and 19th verse:

"And he took bread and gave thanks and brake and gave unto them, saying, This is my body, which is given for you; this do in remembrance of me."

Holloway Street.

Both services in this place of worship were yesterday conducted by the Pastor, Rev. J. R. Real. In the evening his text was from Numbers, 13th chapter and 30th verse:

"And Caleb stilled the people before Moses and said, let us go up at once and possess it, for we are well able to overcome it."

REMOVED A FILM

REV. J. E. HUNTER UNDERWENT AN OPERATION IN TORONTO.

Rev. J. E. Hunter, the well-known evangelist of St. Thomas, underwent an operation in Toronto on Friday last and had a film removed from his eyes. The reverend gentleman found his sight affected and it became necessary to have the operation performed. The ordeal was undergone successfully and Mr. Hunter expects to return to Muskoka on Tuesday.

THE FUNNEL SHAPED CLOUD

Struck St. Catharines on Sunday For Several Thousand Dollars.

Fortunately No Lives Were Lost in the Brief Thirty Minutes' Cyclone—Picked Up a Freight Car and After Stripping the Trucks From Under It Threw It Several Yards Away—A Great Unroofing in the City of the Saints.

St. Catharines, Aug. 4.—This city was struck by a cyclone at 1.50 yesterday afternoon and several thousands of dollars' damage done to property. No lives were lost, but some very narrow escapes are reported. A large funnel shaped cloud formed in a northerly direction and moved over the city with wonderful rapidity. At Welland avenue it started its destruction, moving south by Court and Geneva streets.

It first blew out the end of the N. St. C. and T. car barns. The building is a new brick structure, and is badly smashed. It picked up a freight car in the N. St. C. and T. railway yard, and threw it several yards, stripping the trucks from under it. At this point huge trees were torn up and the road blocked. All along Court street parts of the roofs are gone, and the yards and roads are completely blocked. Mrs. Captain Murray's brick barn was unroofed and almost wrecked. Slate shingles were stripped off and driven into frame houses. There is scarcely a chimney left standing in this vicinity.

The storm passed south, crossing Church, King and St. Paul streets. Here it turned east on Division street. The Belmont House, corner St. Paul and Geneva, was unroofed and damaged. Wise's lumber yard was slightly damaged and windows broken. Division street is probably the worst. Although the houses are standing, barns on all sides are unroofed.

The Bell Telephone Company and other wires are tangled in a mass. Some bare poles were picked up laden with wires and thrown on top of other poles and there they hang in the air. Fences are carried away, and chimneys and verandahs stripped off.

The storm, after leaving Division street, struck across the Welland Canal, throwing the water high in the air. Mr. Charles Steele, who lives just east of the canal, had his house wrecked. He saw the storm coming, and he and his family ran to the root house for safety. The roof of his house was picked up and fell with a crash on the root house, leaving him and his family prisoners until assistance came and chopped him out. He had a miraculous escape.

The last place in the city attacked was Carter's brick yard. It took the whole top off the main building and scattered bricks and smaller sheds everywhere. The barns were also unroofed. There was a power wire crossing near this point which fell and killed two cows. The stteet car wires here are down, and the traffic is suspended temporarily.

The cyclone moved in an easterly direction, but evidently spent its force here, as reports from surrounding places report no storm. A heavy rain followed the storm, which lasted for about 30 minutes and then it cleared.

The cyclone of yesterday afternoon traveled through about the same part of St. Catharines as the one four years ago, but instead of moving through Merritton, where four people were killed, it turned east. The streets are crowded with people viewing the scene of the disaster. Had the storm struck here on a week day there would undoubtedly have been a number of lives lost.

Twisted the Trolley Poles.

Niagara Falls, Aug. 4.—A party of forty masons and friends from Niagara Falls in special trolley car, kindly granted by Manager Seixus of Toronto, St. Catharines and Niagara Falls Road, to attend the funeral of the late Mr. William Thompson of that city, just missed the path of the storm, where it crossed the line near the Grimsby and Queenston road, between Merritton and St. Catharines. Several of the trolley poles were twisted by the force of the storm. The manager, who accompanied the party, soon had the poles and wires straightened out, and landed his guests in St. Catharines in ample time for the funeral.

Severe Hail and Windstorm.

Hamilton, Aug. 4.—About 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon a severe hail and windstorm struck the Beach and did considerable damage. Tents were blown down and other damage done.

Hit by Lightning But Lives.

Wallaceburg, Aug. 4.—Fred. Teeter, while on a laddet, was struck by lightning the other day. The top of the ladder was smashed, and the lightning ran down Fred's side, crossed over and ran up the other side, stripping off his clothing, even his socks and boots, and burning almost the whole of his body. He fell to the ground unconscious. Medical aid brought him around and he will live.

Two Montreal Fatalities.

Montreal, Aug. 4.—J. R. Paquin, Westmount drygoods man, was taking his wife and five children to Back River yesterday to see a house he had rented, and the car, jumping the track, Paquin fell to the ground and was run over and killed.

Four Persons Dead.

Middletown, N.Y., Aug. 4.—A head-on collision between a milk train on the Ontario and Western Railroads yesterday afternoon at Hortons, Delaware County, resulted in the death of four persons, the wrecking of two engines and the ditching of several cars.

TALKS TO UNCLE SAM.

Hon. J. Israel Tarte Says That Canada Can Make the Rates—Canada's Canal and Deep Water Enterprises.

Chicago, Aug. 4.—The Hon. J. Israel Tarte, Minister of Public Works for the Dominion of Canada, has arrived in Chicago on the steamer Lord Stanley. The Minister is making a tour of the great lakes and said that his country was spending a vast amount of money on harbor improvements and extensions.

"The time has come," said he, "when the United States must share her commerce with us. We have the route to the ocean and we can make the rates.

"Our first work of great importance will be the deepening and widening of the French River from Georgian Bay to Lake Nipissing. This gives one of the best ports on the lake to the Canadian Pacific Railroad. The principal transportation routes from the head of the great lakes will then be via Montreal and New York to Liverpool. We have $5,000,000 for the work—already started—to be done on the French River. There are four rapids to overcome and the river will be forty feet deep. From there the way to the ocean may be built. The enterprise will cost $80,000,000."

Mr. Tarte said that soon American vessels would go through the Georgian Bay instead of by Cleveland and Buffalo.

Left Milwaukee Sunday.

Milwaukee, Wis., Aug. 4.—Hon. J. Israel Tarte, Canadian Minister of Public Works, accompanied by other Canadian officials, arrived at Milwaukee yesterday on his private yacht, and after a thorough examination of Milwaukee's harbor, departed for Georgian Bay.

What Mr. Tarte Will Do.

Sault Ste. Marie, Aug. 4.—Canadian Minister of Public Works, Mr. Tarte, in an interview, says that he intends to recommend that a contract be let for one hundred thousand dollars' worth of dredging at the Canadian Soo. The contract may be let this year. After dredging is done boats drawing 20 to 22 feet of water will be able to call at the International dock.

METEOR BURSTS OVER VESSEL.

Kingston, Aug. 4.—Capt. Montgomery of the schooner New Dominion said yesterday morning that he never saw such sharp lightning as he witnessed Saturday night. When off Long Point a ball of fire shot out of the sky and appeared to make straight for the vessel.

When about ten feet from the stern it burst overhead, shooting fiery pieces in different directions. The report of the bursting of the meteora was louder than the discharge of a cannon.

The crew were stunned, and the captain, who was at the wheel, thought he would be thrown overboard.

Fooled With a Fog Signal.

St. Thomas, Aug. 4.—George Parey, the 12-year-old son of Birtch Parey of Alvinston, was terribly injured yesterday. He was experimenting with a fog signal on the M.C.R., when it exploded. The left side of the face was torn from the eye down the side of the nose around and down to the centre of the lip. This cut was clean to the bone. The left cheek bone was broken. There was a wound four inches long down the centre of the forehead which cut to the bone and fractured the outer top of the skull. There was a wound on the right side of the head just back of the eye from which a piece of tin two inches in length was extracted. The membrane of the left ear was injured as the lad, after the accident, was perfectly deaf in that ear.

He was in a semi-comatose condition for some time after the accident.

Lobster Industry Threatened.

Quebec, Aug. 4.—Considerable alarm is felt both in the Maritime Provinces of the Dominion and by the Department of Fisheries at Ottawa over the decadence of the lobster industry. Present indications point to a possible extinction of the supply of Canadian lobsters. So poor was the catch this spring that the fishermen and proprietors of canneries obtained from the Government a ten days' extension of the open season. The Government has become so alarmed at this condition of affairs that it has begun an investigation of the subject.

Prof Robertson's Trip.

Montreal, Aug. 4.—Professor Robertson, Dominion Dairy Commissioner, and Dr. Fletcher of the Experimental Farm, left last evening for the Maritime Provinces. While Mr. Robertson is in the east he will consult with the superintendents of education in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, with a view to a selection of the sites for the three consolidated rural schools, to be established in the Lower provinces out of the fund provided by Sir William McDonald.

Tracey Goes 30 Miles a Day.

Tacoma, Wash., Aug. 4.—Riding all night, hiding and resting by day, Harry Tracey, Oregon's desperado, is traveling across Eastern Washington at a rate of 30 miles a day.

What 60 Canadians Will Do.

London, Aug. 4.—It is said that 60 Canadians will witness the coronation from the inner circle.

Jacob M. Hirschfelder, teacher of Oriental languages at Toronto University, and connected with the staff of that institution for nearly half a century, died on Saturday, aged 83 years. The late Mr. Hirschfelder was born in Baden-Baden, Germany, and came to Canada in his 18th year. He was master of nine oriental languages and an author of some repute.

EMPLOYES WOULD BE SLAVES

What Railway Trainmen Say of Sir William Mulock's Bill.

Meeting of Railway Men at Ottawa on Saturday Behind Closed Doors—Delegates of Various Brotherhoods Strongly Expressed Disapproval of the Mulock Railway Disputes Bill—A Memorial to Be Prepared For Parliament.

Ottawa, Aug. 4.—A meeting of railway men was held here on Saturday behind closed doors to discuss Hon. William Mulock's railway disputes bill, introduced at the last session of Parliament. P. M. Draper, secretary-treasurer of the Trades and Labor Congress, was present and took part in the discussion. The organizations represented were the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the Brotherhood of Railway Conductors, the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, and the Trackmen's Union. The delegates were strong in their expressions of disapproval of the Mulock bill, claiming that it gives the companies, which have all the influence in Parliament, unlimited power. Clause 5, which proposes to make strikes and lockouts illegal, came in for considerable censure. The delegates contended that if it were passed the railway employes would be made slaves of the companies, as they would have no redress against grievances. It was decided to report to the lodges on the matter and have the bill discussed at further length, with the purpose of having a memorial prepared for presentation to Parliament, embodying the employes' views of the bill, and the modifications and amendments they think desirable.

STREET CAR STRIKERS.

They Completely Tie Up the Road From W. Virginia to Ohio.

Ironton, Ohio, Aug. 4.—The strike of the employes of the Camden Interstate Electric Railway almost completely tied up the lines from Guyandotte, W. Va., to Hanging Rock, Ohio, and intermediate points, yesterday. In seven hours all the non-union men were driven from the cars in this city by violence. At noon James Saunders, a union man, who refused to quit, was taken from his car and dragged towards the Ohio River. On promising not to resume his car he was escorted home in a roundabout way to escape the crowd. Cars were held up all over the city until noon, when traffic was suspended. The non-union men also were afraid to run through the crowds at Catlettsburg, and Ashland, Ky., and other points on the Kentucky and West Virginia side of the Ohio River. The Ironton strikers ran cabs and secured more passengers than the street car. Women who chose that mode of conveyance in preference to street cars were cheered by the crowds.

CALLED OUT AT MICHEL, B.C.

Sympathy Strike With Fernie Against Crow's Nest Pass Co.

Greenwood, B. C., Aug. 4. — The Miners' Union has called out the miners in the employ of the Crow's Nest Pass Co., at Michel. This is in sympathy with the strike that is on at Fernie. The aim of the miners is to force the hand of the company. If this is persisted in, the smelters throughout the country will have to be closed down as a matter of course. The local representative of the company puts the blame on the Miners' Union.

The Cost of the Strike.

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Aug. 4.—At the end of the twelfth week of the strike the estimated losses and costs are as follows, a new item being added, the cost of the troops now in the field, at the rate of $5,000 a day:

Loss to operators in price of coal	$29,500,000
Loss to strikers in wages	13,500,000
Loss to workers made idle	3,600,000
Loss to business men in coal regions	9,500,000
Loss to other business men	5,500,000
Cost of maintaining police	700,000
Cost of maintaining non-union men	275,000
Damage to mines and machinery	2,500,000
Loss by lace mills strike	100,000
Cost to state of placing troops in field	15,000
Total	$65,190,000

Trouble at Shenandoah.

Shenandoah, Pa., Aug. 4.—The entire 8th regiment was called to arms during Saturday night as a result of three attacks made by a band of men in ambush, who threw stones at the troops now in camp on the plateau outside the town. These attacks are becoming so frequent that Brigadier-General Cobin has decided to adopt stern measures to end them. Last night a double guard, supplied with ball cartridges, surrounded the camp, and the sentries have been instructed that if the stone-throwing is repeated they must shoot to kill and investigate afterwards. One of the attacking party is under arrest.

Russia's Line of Action.

St. Petersburg, Aug. 4.—It is semi-officially announced that the Russian Ministry of Finance expects a reply in the negative from the Powers to the note regarding international action against trusts. When such replies are received the Russian Government will once more affirm that any increase in duties on Russian sugar will be regarded as an infringement of existing treaties, and if such increase is enforced the Russian Government will consider itself free to disregard its treaty stipulations.

DINED WITH FAMILY.

London, Aug. 4.—Up to Saturday King Edward had taken all his meals alone, but then for the first time since his illness, he lunched with members of the royal family. His Majesty now receives numerous visitors daily and Cowes is becoming crowded with fashionable notables.

King Grows Chipper.

Cowes, Isle of Wight, Aug. 4.—King Edward spent most of Saturday on the deck of the Victoria and Albert. Several distinguished visitors were received in audience during the afternoon. His Majesty appeared to be in good health and spirits.

FUNERAL OF A JOCKEY.

London, Aug. 4.—Funeral services in memory of J. Watts, the one time well-known and successful jockey, were held at Newmarket Saturday, in the presence of a remarkable gathering. The King sent Lord Marcus Beresford specially to represent him, and wreaths were sent by the King, Lord Rosebery, Sir Edgar Vincent and others. Many notable persons and almost the entire town of Newmarket marched in the funeral procession. John Watts was known as the "Grand Old Man" of the English turf, although he was only 41 years of age at the time of his death. He rode the Derby winner four times in ten years. In 1891 he rode 114 winners. When he became too stout to ride, he became a trainer and served in that capacity for the King.

Treats Queen For Deafness.

Manchester, Aug. 4.—At Saturday's session of the British Medical Association it was learned that Dr. M. R. Hutchinson, a young American specialist, is treating Queen Alexandra of England and the Duke of Cambridge for partial deafness.

Another War Office Scandal.

London, Aug. 4.—Another War Office scandal has come to light at the Woolwich Arsenal, where, until 1899, the waste products of the gun foundries were given to the local authorities for repairing the roads. The arsenal authorities were then offered 44 cents a ton for them, and gladly accepted the money, until a policeman's suspicions were aroused by the fact that local marine store dealers were rapidly making large fortunes. Inquiries showed that they were recovering large quantities of brass from the Arsenal refuse, which really was worth $50 a ton. It is estimated that the public treasury has lost $1,250,000 by these transactions.

BIRTH OF AN ICEBERG.

The Dramatic Experience of Two Antarctic Explorers.

Mr. C. E. Borchgrevink, commander of the antarctic expedition of 1898, nearly lost his life by an accident of a nature so peculiar that it is probable no other man could duplicate the experience. At the foot of Mount Terror in February, 1900, he landed from his ship with Captain Jensen and three other men. Then, wishing to take a picture of the shore, he sent his boat back to the vessel to get a camera, and he and Captain Jensen were left alone on the rough beach. Before the boat returned a strange and awful thing happened. Mr. Borchgrevink told the story in the Outlook:

A roar and a rush, with tremendous explosions, shook the beach. The thought came to us that the perpendicular rocks above us were falling. Then we realized what was taking place. The mighty glacier immediately to the west of us was giving birth to an iceberg.

Millions of tons of ice plunged into the ocean. We could see nothing beyond an immense cloud of rolling snow. The water rose from the plunge of this antarctic monarch. I sang out to Jensen, "Now we shall have to face the wave!"

We rushed to the highest point of our limited beach, four feet above the sea. We saw advancing on us a dark green ridge with a white crest. I called to Jensen to struggle for dear life. We clutched the uneven rocks, with our backs toward the advancing water. Although it could not have taken more than seven minutes the time seemed long before the water closed over our heads.

Floating upward, scrambling upon the rocks, I tore the nails from my flesh in my endeavor to keep from being dragged out. After the second wave we again felt the rocks under our feet.

At the place where Jensen and I first stood the rock was wet twenty feet above our head. It was somewhat lower when it struck us. Where the wave had struck with full force the face of the rock had been altered, and rocks were still falling when the three men in the boat found us, bleeding and torn.

Two facts had saved us. To our right a small peninsula of ice protruded some five feet from the rock, and the rock itself bent toward the west. From the moment it struck the curve of the mountain rock to the west of us the wave took a course more easterly than where Jensen and I stood.

APHORISMS.

Approval.

"It seems to me that there is a great literary awakening in this country."

"Yes?" answered the matter of fact citizen.

"I observe it with great approval."

"Then you are fond of books?"

"No. I am in the stationery business. I sell pens, ink and paper."

ONE MAN'S FINE CONCEIT.

Massing of Men, He Says, Means Strength; of Women, Bonnets.

"It's an odd thing about women," remarked Jones to his wife as he settled himself for a special effort. "We admire you intensely in the individual. We adore you when taken singly, but it's a strange, sad fact that when a few hundred of you get together you lose distinction. A multitude of rare women brought together in one building for a common cause are far from venerable. Look at Sorosis. The club is undoubtedly made up of ideal mothers and wives, but one resolutely refuses to find it anything else than a convocation of bonnets. Earnest, intense women recruit the ranks of the Woman's Christian Temperance union, but its mass meetings only amuse the rest of the world. An exclusively feminine tea was never an object of envy to those who pass it by."

"And what of you men?" suggested Mrs. Jones. "Are you all so much finer in a crowd?"

"Undoubtedly," replied Jones. "It isn't open to dispute that a 'gang' of men is at all times convincing. If it is only a mob with a rope looking up a criminal, the sight does not lack impressiveness. The imagination plays about a 'smoker' and speculates as to the quality of the cigars and the stories. And a good share of the world's work has been done by men in mass for a purpose. Union to us is strength, and the novelist has always remained below when the door of the banquet hall was opened for the filing out of the ladies."

PERSIAN RUGS.

A Safe Rule by Which to Distinguish the Genuine Ones.

A great many persons flatter themselves that they are able to tell a genuine Persian rug from a spurious machine made one by touch, but in this they deceive themselves. The best and surest way to tell a genuine from an imitation Persian rug is the following:

If one will look closely, one will observe that in the genuine Persian rug the intricate and complicated pattern or design is not altogether symmetrical, the corresponding flowers, vines or geometrical figures of one side being a little out of line, larger or smaller or not meeting and pointing with figures on the corresponding detail on the opposite side of the rug. This is owing to the fact that in hand weaving it is impossible to obtain perfect symmetry of patterns, especially when the designs are as complicated as they are on Persian rugs. On the other hand, let one examine closely the machine made rug, and one will find the most perfect symmetry of pattern, so much so in fact that the design looks positively rigid and harsh. This a pretty safe guide, and if observed one will seldom mistake an imitation for a genuine Persian rug.

Cultivating Ginger.

Ginger is made a matter of scientific culture in Jamaica. It is propagated by cutting up small pieces of the root, and if possible, rich, cool soil from recently cleared woods is selected for it. It is a great impoverisher of the soil and grows so luxuriantly that in a short time a little piece of root will spread so as to produce nearly a pound of new roots. The sets are planted in March or April and get to their full growth about September.

The roots are dug usually in Jamaica in January or February. They are washed, exposed to the sun until thoroughly dried and packed in parcels of about a hundred pounds each. In order to dry them more rapidly they are first scalded in a little copper pot in order to destroy life, of which the roots are very tenacious. White ginger and black ginger are from the same roots, the difference arising from methods of curing. Roots for sugar preserving are dug while quite young, before the stems are more than five or six inches high.

Mexican Child Life.

Mexican children high and low are exceedingly fortunate in being treated almost uniformly with the greatest kindness and affection by their parents. From babyhood they have an excellent understanding with their elders, respect and affection on one side, affection and tenderness on the other. No Indian is too ragged or dirty to kiss the hand of his tattered old mother with the grace of a lord. This habit, with the real reverence of which it is the outward and visible symbol, is commenced early in childhood. An Indian, even drunk, does not abuse his family. Assisted home by a friend on either side, whose condition is only a few degrees better than his own, he sits on his doorstep, the one entrance to the single unlighted room constituting his dwelling, and contemplates life with maudlin good nature while the children and dogs play around him and over him until he falls into drunken stupor.

Syrian Asphalt.

Asphalt is found in the provinces of Syria on the banks of the Dead sea floating on the surface of its waters. Through the action of earthquakes the asphalt has been torn from the bottom of the sea and driven toward the shores, especially to the east. The narratives of the Greek and Roman historians to the effect that asphalt as small islands was upheld by the salt water and driven over the surface of the sea are without doubt true. This asphalt and generally the oriental or Egyptian is pure and expensive and used principally in the manufacture of a certain kind of varnish, but for general purposes, owing to its brittleness as well, is useless in the asphalt industry.

He Got the Guineas.

A pretty story is told of an English nobleman whom his barber left half shaved and in a great hurry. His lordship thought the man was mad and sent to inquire after him.

He returned in person and thus explained himself: "I was not mad, my lord, but the sight of that heap of guineas on your dressing table and the remembrance of my starving family so affected me that if I had stayed another minute I should have cut your throat."

"I am glad you didn't do that," said his lordship gently, "and by all means take the guineas. I won them at the gambling table and should doubtless have lost them there."

By Proxy.

"What I object to," said the young woman who wants a vote, "is taxation without representation."

"If it's all the same to you," said the young man who is too bashful to propose directly, "I should be only too happy to represent your sentiments at the polls at every election."

A Wife.

Meeks—Can't, old boy, but I can give you no end of advice on how to be managed by a wife so that you'll think you are the manager.

Honest.

"Is he honest?"

"Honest! Why, say, I don't believe that man would cheat an Indian out of his reservation if he had the chance!"—Chicago Post.

AN ILLUSTRATED VILLAGE.

Little Swiss Town One of the Quaintest In Europe.

When next you go to the Lake of Geneva, by all means pay a visit to the little known village of St. Legier, near by, on the road between Vevey and Blonay, one of the quaintest villages in Europe and one of the proudest on account of its extraordinary adornments. St. Legier and the adjoining village of La Chiesaz are nothing more or less than illustrated villages. They are as profusely illustrated as the modern magazine, for nearly all the houses bear on their outside walls some striking picture or comical caricature from the brush of a great man in the village, M. Alfred Beguin, a painter of local renown and not unknown in Paris, says Pearson's Magazine.

A house in St. Legier has no use for a signboard to tell the world that it is an inn, a cycle shop, a forge or a dairy. M. Beguin's picture does that. On a stable wall he draws a picture of a spirited runaway horse knocking down men as he leaps for freedom; on the white wall of the little village forge are pictures of men making horseshoes for dear life and shoeing a frisky steed; on the wall of the dairy a dairy maid balances a pail of milk on her head, while scenes of local life, as pictures of the annual summer exodus to the mountain pastures with the cows and goats, and caricatures of the local bigwigs make a bright picture gallery of the village. M. Beguin lives in one of the most imposing houses in St. Legier, whence he obtains a full view of the crooked little village street and of the Dent du Jaman towering up in the distance. For many years past he has amused himself by painting the houses, and in the first place he acquired most of his skill and boldness in painting in this way.

HORSEHAIR SNAKES.

Peculiar Habits of These Threadlike Little Serpents.

The "horsehair snakes" are small, flesh colored mites which live principally in stagnant water. After going through various transformations they come to the surface of the water in the shape of very slender, purplish looking threads. When they reach this last stage, they leave the water and work their way up the stalks and leaves of aquatic plants. When opportunity affords, they attach themselves to the feet, legs, wings and other parts of larger insects, often, as one authority states, creeping under the wing case of beetles. In the case of the cricket, katydid, grasshopper and other insects of that ilk, whose legs are hollow, the tiny horsehair takes the advantage and creeps up the hollows into the very vitals.

This accounts for the fat and clumsy condition of some individuals of the above named species, single specimens of the cricket having been caught with over two dozen of these threadlike "snakes" attached to and inside of their bodies. After heavy rains, which frequently drown crickets and katydids which are weighted down by these parasites, the "horsehair snake" emerges from the carcass of the insect a full fledged miniature serpent. In this mature state he is the delight of the curiosity seeker and a mine of study to those who delight to delve in nature's bypaths. Those which have been fortunate enough not to have been carried very far from water by the insects which they encumbered during life make their way back to the ponds to lay their eggs. They then wrap themselves around the eggs, which soon hatch into the little flesh colored mites mentioned in the opening. About this time the parent "snake" dies to make room for its progeny.

What the Witness Saw.

"Do you mean to swear," said the foreman of the jury to the witness, "that at the time of the quarrel that constitutes the cause of this action you saw the prisoner with a coal scuttle in his hands making ready to heave it at his wife?"

"Not exactly," said the witness, with considerable hesitation. "I mean to swear that I saw the prisoner with a coal scuttle in his hands."

"In what attitude was he then?" asked the presiding judge.

"Well, now, since your lordship has asked, I'll tell the truth. The prisoner was lying down with the coal scuttle over his head and his wife on the top of it."

The jury returned a verdict of not guilty.—London Chronicle.

Blessings Born of Sorrows.

The world's greatest blessings have come out of its greater sorrows. Said Goethe, "I never had an affliction which did not turn into a poem." No doubt the best music and poetry in all literature had a like origin, if we could only know its whole story. It is universally true that poets "learn in suffering what they teach in song." Nothing really worth while in life's lessons comes easily and without pain and cost.

Washington Timber.

"Pennsylvania avenue at one time had trees down the center, I believe," was the remark I made to a Georgetown man I met in a trolley car.

"Yes," was the gentleman's reply, "and now you can find presidential timber on nearly every street in Washington."

Trapped Himself.

Dobbs—Great snakes! What a brainless looking idiot! But I didn't know your wife was married before she met you.

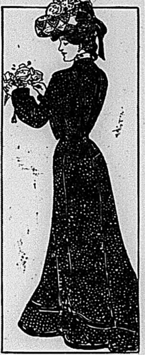
Dibbs—She wasn't. That is a picture of myself at the age of twenty.

FASHION CHANGES.

Tight Fitting Waists Are Things of the Past.

The tight fitting bodice with many seams is quite a thing of the past, and vests blouses and bodices are almost universally pouched in front and worn with a band or belt. The back is short and invariably tight fitting, and the short waisted back and elongated front created by the fashionable straight front corset are now characteristic of the prevailing fashions.

Sleeves are so varied in style that every taste should be suited. The full, banded sleeve is extensively patronized, and this, too, is arranged with some variation. In soft fabrics the sleeve droops in Turkish fashion and is exceedingly long in the back, but the bishop sleeve has grown smaller and is now simply an almost tight coat sleeve drawn into a wristband. This is the effect, but the cut is simplicity itself.



BLUE AND WHITE LINEN.

The cut shows a tailor made costume of navy blue linen dotted in white. The jacket is made with an open Eton front and a fitted back having hip pieces. The sleeves bag at the wrist and show the latest style of cuffs. The skirt is perfectly plain, with a habit back and a single gored flounce. The entire costume is trimmed with bands of stitched taffeta.

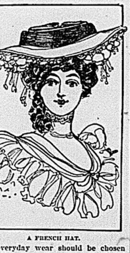
JUDIC CHOLLET.

MILLINERY HINTS.

Hats Trimmed Under the Brims. Amateur Milliners.

It is far easier to make a smart little dress at home than to trim a hat. There is no article of a woman's wardrobe so difficult to choose as a hat. It seems hard to give out one's good dollars for a little straw shape trimmed with an apparently simple twist of foulard or velvet when the material costs half the price, but dangers lurk in these simple little hats. It takes a particular skill to make a tailor made bow, and the amateur can more successfully trim even a picture hat.

Those who cannot afford much should be careful not to purchase anything exaggerated, as they are sure to get tired of it, for fashions in millinery change very quickly, and even good models often get vulgarized. The hat for everyday wear should be chosen with the utmost discretion. It should be well made and of lasting qualities, for it will be worn four days out of the seven at least.



A FRENCH HAT.

In regard to more elaborate hats a great many of them are being trimmed under the brim. Crushed flowers are used for this, together with leaves and dainty buds. Some of the flowers used on hats this year are very charming, and the mixture of fruits and flowers, though often incongruous, is always chic.

The smart French hat in the illustration is of tuscan straw trimmed with upright bands of red ribbon velvet and finished with a bow in the back. Clusters of buds and poppies are placed under the brim.

JUDIC CHOLLET.

THEY DROVE PIMPLES AWAY.—A face covered with pimples is unsightly. It tells of internal irregularities which should long since have been corrected. The liver and the kidneys are not performing their functions in the healthy way they should, and these pimples are to let you know that the blood protests. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will drive them all away, and will leave the skin clear and clean. Try them, and there will be another witness to their excellence.

There are 38 letters in the Russian alphabet.

HAD LA GRIPPE.—Mr. A. Nickenson, farmer, Dutton, writes: "Last winter I had La Grippe and it left me with a severe pain in the small of my back and hip that used to catch me whenever I tried to climb a fence. This lasted for about two months, when I bought a bottle of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil and used it both internally and externally, morning and evening, for three days, at the expiration of which time I was completely cured."

Their gentle action and good effect on the system really make them a perfect little pill. They please those who use them. Carter's Little Liver Pills may well be termed 'Perfection.'

AT DEATH'S DOOR.—DYSPEPSIA CONQUERED.—A GREAT MEDICAL TRIUMPH.—Gentlemen,—My medical adviser and others told me I could not possibly live when I commenced to use Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery for Dyspepsia. My case was one of the worst of its kind. For three years I could not eat meat and my weight decreased from 219 to 119 lbs. All the food I took for thirteen months previous to taking the Vegetable Discovery consisted of milk. I am now entirely cured and have regained my usual weight, can eat anything with a keen relish and feel like a new man. I have sold over thirty dozen Vegetable Discovery since it cured me, as I am well-known and people in this section know how low I was, and thought I could not possibly be cured. They are eager to try this grand medicine. It certainly saved my life as I never expected to recover when first I commenced using it. I am not exaggerating anything, but feel glad to be able to contribute this testimonial and trust it may be the means of convincing others of its merit as a certain cure for Dyspepsia.
Signed, JEAN VALCOURT,
Wotton, P.Q. General Merchant

It is better to have a light purse than a heavy heart, but more comfortable to have neither.

Very many persons die annually from cholera and kindred summer complaints, who might have been saved if proper remedies had been used. If attacked do not delay in getting a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial, the medicine that never fails to effect a cure. Those who have used it say it acts promptly, and thoroughly, subdues the pain and disease.

There are over 9,000 brass bands in the Salvation Army.

Use the safe, pleasant, and effectual worm killer, Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator; nothing equals it. Procure a bottle and take it home.

When an artist's wife poses for him he makes her stand around.

Have you tried Holloway's Corn Cure? It has no equal for removing these troublesome excrescences, as many have testified who have tried it.

There are nine kilted regiments in the British army.

FOR INFLAMMATION OF THE EYES.—Among the many good qualities which Parmelee's Vegetable Pills possess, besides regulating the digestive organs, is their efficacy in reducing inflammation of the eyes. It has called forth many letters of recommendation from those who were afflicted with this complaint and found a cure in the pills. They affect the nerve centres and the blood in a surprisingly active way, and the result is almost immediately seen.

Ten per cent. of the population of India are widows.

If you have a cough or cold do not neglect it; many without a trace of that hereditary disease have drifted into a consumptive's grave by neglecting what was only a slight cold. Had they used Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup before it was too late, their lives would have been saved. Mr. A. W. Levy, Mitchell, writes: "I think Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup the best preparation on the market for coughs and severe colds. About six years ago I caught a severe cold which settled on my lungs, and for three months I had a cough. I had a physician attending me, but gradually grew worse until I was on the verge of Consumption, and had given up hopes of being cured, when I was induced to try Bickle's Syrup. Before I had taken one bottle I found myself greatly relieved, and by the time I had finished the second bottle I was completely cured. I always recommend it for severe colds and consumption."

HIS SUMMER VACATION.

Summer vacation is to a man the bright, particular pleasure spot of the year. But go prepared. Have the clothing to enjoy it properly; better see us before you start. There never were nicer summer suits than the kind we are now selling.

You Are Not So Warm

As you will be during the next few weeks. Why not be one of the comfortable people who wear our cool clothes? Can't even give a summary of the "summer things," but the store is full of them. Things that suggest cool, green fields, shady woods, babbling brooks, country lanes—and all the charming pictures that flit across the minds of a brain-weary and vacation-hungry man.

Police Notes

Three front doors of business places were found insecure at an early hour on Sunday morning.

Mr. Chas. Knight reports that last evening, whilst in company with some friends, he was assaulted. The alleged assault took place on the roadway leading to the park.

Mr. Geo. H. Thomas, of Deseronto, reports that a valuable fox terrier dog was recently stolen from him, and he believes the canine is in this city.

Complaints have been made to the police of a disagreeable smell emanating from a barn on the corner of Bridge and Charles street.

A call was answered to Queen St. on Saturday evening, and a drunk was escorted to the station. He was acting in a disorderly manner.

Returned From Africa

Wm. Falconer, of this city, and Redford Richardson, of Prince Edward County, were in the city yesterday and attracted some attention, being clad in khaki suits. They arrived here from South Africa, having been members of the Canadian Mounted Infantry. Both were in two engagements previous to the peace declaration, but escaped injury. They report that a number of Canadians remained in South Africa.

PEOPLE WITH BAD BREATH

Generally suffer from Catarrh and should use Catarrhozone Inhaler four times daily, and be cured. The pleasantly scented Catarrhozone vapor spreads through every air passage of the breathing organs, and reaches the very root of the disease at once; it kills the germs, purifies and cleanses the mucous surfaces, and eradicates every vestige of catarrh in a short time.

Pure, sweet breath, free from headache, sneezing and discharge are quickly derived from the use of Catarrhozone Inhaler. Complete outfit, guaranteed to cure, costs $1.00; trial size 25c. Druggists or N. C. Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

Dr. Hamilton's Pills Stimulate the Liver.

An Effective Remedy

A Pittsburg, Penn., lady troubled with dyspepsia, heard of a remedy put up in capsules. Her husband bought a dozen at a drug store, and at the same time a dozen collar buttons made of metallic composition that looked very much like a pearl, and the druggist gave him a pill box similar to that in which the capsules were put up to carry them in. He took both boxes home, handed them to his wife, and the same day she began to take the medicine. After she had taken twelve doses, she was entirely cured and advertised the wonderful remedy all over the neighborhood. About this time her husband lost his collar button, and opening his pill box, found it empty. A brief investigation showed that the capsules in the other pill box were still there and that his wife had swallowed twelve composition collar buttons, two a day, for six days, and had been entirely cured of dyspepsia.

A Useful Punishment

(Hamilton Times.)

A New York justice sentenced a neglectful and dissolute husband the other day to do sixty days' work at his trade as painter for a contractor who stated in court that he needed such services, the money to be paid to the wife for the support of the family. For some time past the wife has had to support it, and hand over her lord money for drink. The sentence is not a judicial one in the sense that is founded on statute law, but who shall say that it is not better to give him such a task than to send him to loaf in jail?

HEARTS THAT ARE DISEASED

Will never be cured by the false, unnatural stimulation of liquor. First increase your vitality, build up the system, strengthen and purify the blood—then the heart will respond and grow strong.

Ferrozone is precisely what to take, it gives you an appetite and a digestion that will look after everything that is eaten. Ferrozone improves nutrition, makes rich, vitalizing blood, and is positively the most powerful restorative and strengthener known to science; it improves the nerve tone, regulates the heart's action, makes the feeble strong and the sick well. Ferrozone will do you untold good and costs only 50c., at druggists or J. S. McKeown.

THE PROPOSED FAST LINE.

From what we can learn of the proposed fast line steamship service, the Laurier Government appears to have got back to the position the Conservative Government had reached in 1896. When Sir Charles Tupper made his arrangement with the Allans the project was vigorously denounced by Sir Richard Cartwright and other leaders who are now Ministers. Shortly after the change of Government Sir Richard Cartwright introduced his own scheme. He explained that the contract with Petersen and Tate would cost the country less than the previous Government proposed to pay and would give the country a better service. Several Ministers assured Parliament and the country that they had satisfied themselves of the competence of the contractors to carry out the undertaking. For greater certainty they had two cash deposits of $50,000 each, but they were sure that the deposits would not be forfeited. Sir Charles Tupper and his followers were willing to congratulate the Government on the bargain, but claimed the right to wait until the service was established. It never came near success. The contractors were not even able to organize a company which could command the capital to buy the first boat. For two years the Ministers held out hopes to Parliament. Then they gave it up, and admitted that there never had been any business basis to the scheme. At last it was understood that the Petersen and Tate deposit would be returned.

Now the Government seems likely to make the same bargain as the one that the Ministers denounced. The subsidy will be as large as that which Sir Charles Tupper proposed to pay, and may be larger. There will be substantially the same service that the Allans would have provided. The boats may be a little larger and a little faster, but they will not compare better with the ships now on other routes than the boats contracted for in 1896.

TIMELY TOPICS.

It will be remembered that the following paragraph appeared in Timely Topics on Saturday:

"A correspondent wants to know what became of the scheme to present the Fifteenth with new colors. Can anybody tell him?"

The following answer has been received, which should prove very satisfying to the correspondent who "wants to know":

"If your correspondent will come right to the front and hand over $25 to the treasurer, Mrs. W. W. Pope, the colors will be presented at once. That amount additional is required. As yet the Veterans have not responded."

In St. Thomas' church yesterday morning, one was struck with the resemblance between St. Thomas' new Rector, Rev. G. R. Beamish, and Rev. Mgr. Farrelly. Both wear their hair long, are clean shaven and have the same Grecian features. The resemblance might fade upon closer comparison, but at a distance, in the "dim religious light" of the sanctuary, it was close enough to provoke comment.

Toronto Globe: The Tory papers appear to think that the great object of the meeting of the Ontario Alliance was to punish the Hon. Geo. W. Ross for something. The prohibitionists think that the main object is to carry the referendum. The election is over, and scolding does neither good nor harm.

Not at all dear Globe. "The Tory papers" know that the majority of the Grit prohibitionists hold Gritism paramount to Prohibition, and therefore would support and cheer for Ross no matter how he might snub and humbug them. The honest ones did hiss when his name was mentioned, and the Grit "machinists" cheered. Such are Grit Prohibition politicians.

The Grits have been in power since 1896, and under the late census, Ontario is to lose six—and some say, seven—members in the House of Commons, while Quebec, of course, retains its old numerical strength. The reduction of Ontario's representation at Ottawa is very welcome to the Laurier Government, as it gives Quebec more power in the parliament of Canada.

While it is gratifying to be told that the Intercolonial has a "surplus" of $86,952, it will be more gratifying if the facts do not show that to get that "surplus" the country has had to increase its investment by improperly charging to capital outlays of ten times that sum.

A Kingston newspaper man went fishing, caught (or says he did) a good string of black bass, and, on walking home with them, couldn't make a soul he met believe that he hadn't bought the fish from somebody and was trying to gull the public. In reply to a toast at a banquet given by the Lord Mayor of London a few weeks ago, to Archbishops and Bishops, Archbishop Temple gave utterance to the following sentiments:

"He was grateful for their recognition of the work that was done by the Church of England, and for their recognition of those who were working with him—his brother bishops and the clergy; and he hoped that he would not be misconstrued if he expressed gratitude to all those who, though they were not members of the Church, yet held the worship of the same great Lord, of the same Master, and who looked to Christ just as members of the Church themselves did, although they called themselves by different names. They, too, were laboring as Englishmen ought to labor; they, too, should share in all that was great and honorable in the history of England."

These are sentiments it would be well for all clergymen not only to adopt, but practice.

Divine service will be held in the Bridge St. Methodist Church on the 9th inst., in commemoration of the coronation of King Edward VII. The Rev. Dr. Crothers in announcing the fact yesterday, impressed upon his hearers the meaning of the momentous event, and the duty of every loyal Canadian to join in thanksgiving to the Almighty for the restoration of the King to health, saying that, though the Methodist Church was not the established church of the Kingdom, nor was it what is known as the Church of England, it was the Church of the English speaking people, and therefore it was the duty of every Methodist to join in a thanksgiving service on Saturday next.

Lieut. Harold Brunson, now a guest at Hotel Quinte, this city, tells the story of Harts River with splendid effect. Lieut. Brunson, then a full private in the rear rank, went to Africa with the First Contingent, and fought at Paardeberg alongside of Sergt. Glencoe Hulme, of this city. Upon his return, finding his martial ardor still unabated, he joined the 2nd Canadian Mounted Rifles as Lieutenant. He was in the famous fight at Harts River, of which so many inspiring accounts have been written, and talks of his experiences in a highly interesting way. The whole Canadian Regiment, he says, was engaged; and all behaved nobly. If some did more work than others it was because fortune threw the chance in their way. The Boer charges, he says, were the most magnificent spectacles he ever saw. They came thundering up, converged to the right and left, halted, fired three volleys and then withdrew. This was repeated again and again. It was war, and it was splendid. A very modest, manly young soldier is Lieut. Brunson, who tells his story in a vivid way very pleasant to listen to. In Canadian military life Lieut. Brunson was an officer in the 12th York Rangers. He is at present visiting friends in Belleville, and seems to be enjoying himself.

It is now found out that the story of alcohol being missing from the Evans warehouse in Toronto is not true, a satisfactory explanation of the alleged loss having been given. ATHLETICS.

A Great Boy Jumper.

Athletic experts have in the old world been staggered recently by the phenomenal jumping of Joe Darby, Jun., a boy 11 years old, and weighing just forty-two pounds. The youth is the only son of Joe Darby, professional trick jumper. On July 8 the boy made his first appearance at the Dudley Cricket Club lawn tennis tournament sports. Wearing a pair of clogs, he began the day's work by jumping off a brick and clearing 8 feet six inches in one jump. Standing on the same brick, end upward, he flew over four chairs placed in line and twenty-four inches high. In three jumps he cleared twenty feet, landing over a chair in the third jump. Afterward he covered forty feet in five jumps. He then had a brick placed on end and jumped over a chair, landing on a brick placed in a similar position on the other side, and never even stirred the second brick. His star feat was when he cleared 9 feet 6 inches over a chair, taking off from a brick.

DOES IT PAY TO BUY CHEAP?

A cheap remedy for coughs and colds is all right, but you want something that will relieve and cure the more severe and dangerous results of throat and lung troubles. What shall you do? Go to a warmer and more regular climate? Yes, if possible; if not possible for you, then in either case take the ONLY remedy that has been introduced in all civilized countries with success in severe throat and lung troubles, "Boschee's German Syrup." It not only heals and stimulates the tissues to destroy the germ disease, but allays inflammation, causes easy expectoration, gives a good night's rest and cures the patient. Try ONE bottle. Recommended many years by all druggists in the world. You can get this reliable remedy at R. Templeton & Co.'s.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

BOOK BINDING.

Orders for bookbinding should be left at this office. It is surprising how nice a volume can be made of these magazines, even though they are somewhat soiled from much handling. Books, magazines, or periodicals bound or rebound in any style at very reasonable prices. Blank books, such as journals, ledgers, day books, with any kind of ruling, made to order. All work warranted first-class. THE INTELLIGENCER, Belleville.

TAKE YOUR PAY OUT OF THAT

A Curious Remark That Saved Augustin Gravelle's Life.

The Man Had Bought a Razor and Tendered an Envelope With This Remark—Prevented From Ending His Life—Left a Strange Epistle Forgiving All For Causing Him Distress—Thought to Be Insane.

Sarnia, Aug. 4.—About noon yesterday a man, aged probably between 50 and 60 years walked into J. J. Clement's drug store and asked for a razor. He selected one from among those shown him. In payment for the same, he tendered Dr. Clement an envelope, with the remark, "Take your pay out of that," at the same time walking out of the store. Dr. Clement suspected that there was something wrong and he hurried out of the store and followed the man down the Lochiel street hill towards the river. When Dr. Clement found the would be suicide he was on his knees in the rear of the Lambton Loan Company building and was just in the act of cutting his throat. Dr. Clement grabbed the man's arm and called for assistance. Several men responded and the man was restrained from inflicting any more injuries upon himself. He fought desperately and seemed bound to destroy himself.

Dr. Morrison was summoned and attended to the cuts in the man's throat. In his attempt at suicide, Gravelle, for such his named proved to be, managed to make two cuts in his throat—one three inches long and another of about one in length, but neither of them was deep enough to cause death. Following is a copy of the letter which Gravelle left at the drug store.

"August 2nd.

"My dear wife Maggie, that I love,—I have been looking for you and Joseph night and day. I forgive you with all my heart. I love you, Maggie. Kiss Joseph and Maggie. Tell them a broken-hearted and loving father has gone to heaven. I kiss you all in my distress. In a few minutes I will meet my Judge, not the one that stole the children. I do not blame you. God told me to forgive. Please kiss the children. One more minute and I am gone to heaven.

"Augustin Gravelle."

"P.S.—I kiss you all. God be merciful to you. You have killed me and my dear children."

The letter was addressed to Mrs. A. Gravelle, Sarnia, Ont. The doctors express the belief that the man was insane and dangerous to be at the hospital. Information was laid against him and he was removed to the county jail on remand.

MEN AND BOOKS.

Chopin rarely read anything heavier than a French novel.

Lord Clive said that "Robinson Crusoe" beat any book he ever read.

St. John Chrysostom never tired of reading or of praising the works of the apostle John.

James I. of England was a lover of the classics and very familiar with most of the Latin writers.

Bunyan read little besides his Bible and often said that Christians would do well to read no other book.

Salvator Rosa liked any kind of poetry, but more especially that relating to the country or to country scenes.

Hume said that Tacitus was the ablest writer that ever lived and himself tried to model his style on that of the Roman historian.

Locke gave most of his attention to works of philosophy. He said, "I stand amazed at the profundity of thought shown by Aristotle."

The elder Pitt liked Shakespeare, but not the labor of reading plays. He enjoyed hearing them and once said that he had learned more English history at the theater than at the university.

At His Feet.

All day he scans the far horizon's blue
And asks, Will earth and heaven ever meet?
While all around, deep dyed with heaven's hue,
The violets are blooming at his feet.

Philosophy of Fatigue.

"Some may be interested to know that there is now almost a new kind of philosophy of fatigue," says a writer in Ainslee's. "Some speculators think man became conscious because his intuitions were slowed up by exhaustion, so that the mind has to pick its way slowly and logically instead of divining instantly, as it used to do. It was the fall of man. Wilder dreamers have even described the origin of cosmic gas and nebulæ, from which all the worlds come, as due to progressive fatigue of the ether, which is far more subtle and back of it. It is a little as if they were attempting to rewrite the first phrases of the Old Testament so that it should read, 'In the beginning was fatigue.'"

In the Author's Den.

"John," said the poet's wife, "the coal's out."

"Well, this poem here has considerable fire in it."

"And the gas man has taken out the meter."

"And we'll have to exist on cold crusts hereafter."

"Not at all! I have just finished two columns of hot stuff."

"Do be serious! What are we to live on?"

"The earth, my dear—the solid, substantial earth. And now just be quiet while I feast on this sonnet!"—Atlanta Constitution.

Even if a boy is always whistling "I Want to Be An Angel" it is just as well to keep the raspberry jam and cheese cakes on the top shelf of the pantry.

The Cheerful Face.

Next to the sunlight of heaven is the cheerful face. Who has not felt its electrifying influence? One glance at this face lifts us out of the mists and shadows into the beautiful, bright and warm within. A host of evil passions may lurk around the door, but they never enter and abide there. The cheerful face will put them to shame and flight.

Elastic Stockings.

Dirt is always unhealthy, so it should not be tolerated even in an elastic stocking, though that is not an article that can be sent to the wash. Clean it by rubbing it with a piece of flannel dipped in flour, heated as much as possible in the oven without browning it. Shake out the flour and repeat the process if necessary.

STEYN THANKS BRITISH.

Too Ill to Journey From Southampton to London.

London, Aug. 4.— Ex-President Steyn, of the Orange Free State, arrived in Southamption yesterday with his family, on the steamship Carisbrooke Castle. He was met by Messrs. Fischer, Wessels, and Dr. Pruyn, the former Boer delegates. He will go to The Hague, where ex-President Kruger will go from Utrecht to meet him Monday.

Mr. Steyn was too ill to bear the journey to London, although a special saloon carriage had been attached to the regular boat train for him. His physician would not allow him to be interviewed by the press, but Mr. Steyn sent word that he wished to express his thanks for the courtesies extended to him by the British authorities since the surrender, and for the care given him during the voyage.

The ex-President was removed on a stretcher to the Dutch steamer Batavier III., which was moored close to the Carisbrooke Castle. He will be landed at the Hook of Holland and conveyed in an ambulance to the cottage reserved for him near The Hague.

Kruger Prays For Steyn.

London, Aug. 4.—Former President Steyn of the Orange Free State has arrived at Scheeveningen. Mr. Kruger has sent him a message, in which he prays for his early recovery.

Lunched With Chamberlain.

London, Aug. 4.—General Lucas Meyer, who was recently in command of the Orange Free State forces, and Mrs. Meyer, lunched with Colonial Secretary Chamberlain and Mrs. Chamberlain Saturday. King Edward has invited General and Mrs. Meyer to witness the coronation ceremony at Westminster Abbey next Saturday, but as General Meyer goes to Dresden upon medical advice, to take the waters, they were unable to accept.

"Mere Pawn of Morgan."

London, Aug. 4.—The Right Hon. W. J. Pirrie, who represented the White Star and Harland & Wolff interests in engineering the Atlantic shipping trust with J. Pierpont Morgan, asked last week for the Conservative nomination for parliament for the vacancy for West Belfast. He was rejected unanimously by the Election Committee because it was said that he would be a mere pawn of Mr. Morgan.

Small Things That Count.

It is said that Cæsar chose his generals according to the length of their forefingers in comparison with that of their second fingers. No man whose forefinger was over one-eighth of an inch shorter than his middle finger had a ghost of a show. Men with very short forefingers are supposed to be effeminate. I believe it is so. Napoleon's generals were selected by their noses. Cromwell believed that bowlegged men made the best soldiers. Washington preferred men with high cheek bones. Receding foreheads were the rule among his generals. Alexander the Great judged men by their teeth, these having very large canines being preferred as commanders.

Life In New York.

Nobody living outside New York knows how difficult it has become in that city for people of moderate means to bring up their children in the love of genuine things. It is still done by many, but with increasing effort and only by dint of a strong will and an inheritance of the truest graces of life — simplicity, the domestic affections and the love of nature and one's kind. It is to the cultivation of these graces that we must look for a rescue from the artificiality and the vulgarity of the pitiable circle in every American city known as "the smart set."—Century.

Tannoform.

Tannoform is an insoluble powder of pinkish color. It is without odor and flavor and is practically nonpoisonous. When applied to the skin, it stops sweating and destroys the odor of sweat already secreted. Hence its utility in case of offensive secretion (bromidrosis). For allied reasons it is useful when the feet become tender by overheating Pedestrians and others will find it useful.

Worse For the Politicians.

"Do you think that sugar is unwholesome for children?" asked the anxious parent.

"Well," answered the physician, "my observation is that it isn't likely to do children nearly as much harm as it does politicians."

TRAINING OF HORSES

CAREFUL HANDLING TO FIT THEM FOR CIRCUS TRICKS.

The Candidate For Ring Honors Must Have Special Points Well Developed—Horses Can Be Coaxed, Like a Child, but Not Forced.

"A trainer must possess two qualifications before he can successfully educate a horse to do the tricks seen in a circus—he must possess kindness and perseverance.

"A veteran trainer selects his horses with as much care as a society woman plans a party gown. The candidate for the future applause of the circus going people of the world must be handsome in color, as near perfect as possible in conformation and possess an even temperament. His eyes must be large and devoid of the least trace of viciousness, he must hold his ears pointed slightly forward, and he must have a sensible looking head, broad between the eyes. Horses that lay back their ears at the approach of a man, who nip viciously at every passerby and whose eyes plainly demonstrate a mean disposition are discarded. A trainer will handle no animal of this kind.

"Once the candidate is selected he is shipped to the winter quarters of the circus and assigned to a comfortable stall in a large, clean, well ventilated barn tenanted by several hundred beauties of his kind. Good hay and oats are his in abundance, and for several days he is allowed to rest and become familiar with his surroundings. The trainer visits him daily and by speaking kindly and occasionally giving the animal a bit of sugar gains his confidence. After a time the horse begins to whinny at the approach of the trainer, and the bond of friendship is thus quickly cemented.

"Then comes the first lesson. The candidate is introduced to the training ring constructed near the barn and allowed to wander about at will. He smells the sawdust, the pedestals and the harness and ropes that will soon be buckled about his body and then, horselike, lies down in the center of the ring and enjoys a good roll.

"Next day he is led around and around the ring for several hours and soon understands that he is expected to encircle the ring of his own accord. Then a strap is placed around his right foreleg, and from this strap a rope is run through harness fastened around his body. The trainer grasps the free end of the rope in one hand and a pair of lines attached to the horse's bridle in the other. The animal is told to 'get up,' and after the ring is encircled a few times the command 'whoa' is given. If the horse refuses to obey, a quick pull on the rope draws his leg from under him, and he is forced to stop. Only a few demonstrations of this kind are necessary to show the horse that he must stop when the command is given.

"After these preliminaries are satisfactorily accomplished the equine pupil is taught to kneel first on one knee, then on the other and finally on both. All this is accomplished by drawing up the front legs, one at a time, thus forcing him down. His knees are padded to prevent injury, and every time he is forced down the command to kneel is given, and the animal is petted and reassured with kind words until finally he kneels at the word.

"It is in these preliminary lessons that a good performer is made or spoiled. The instructor must be firm and resolute, but kind, always kind. A horse is like a child; you may coax him, but you can't force without spoiling his disposition. The animal quickly notices any show of ill temper or roughness on the part of the instructor and resents it by becoming balky and obstinate. Blows or harsh punishment only make him worse. You frequently hear people assert that animals are beaten into submission in teaching them tricks. People who say this never saw the inside of the training quarters of a modern circus. A horse or any other animal conquered in this way is never reliable and is apt to spoil a performance by an outbreak of bad temper, besides being dangerous to handle.

"The next lesson for the horse is the art of lying down and remaining motionless until the word is given to rise. This information is imparted to the horse in a manner similar to the kneeling lesson. An ingenious harness makes it possible for the trainer to draw the horse down on a soft bed of hay without injuring him. When the horse willingly lies down at the word of command, he is taught to sit upon his haunches and then is gradually drilled into the other tricks that always draw applause from children and adults alike.

"It is usually an easy matter to teach a horse to stand upon a pedestal, to waltz, rear on his hind legs and march in unison with equine companions after these simple lessons are thoroughly learned and the horse understands the trainer is his friend and not his enemy. The horse of average intelligence learns quickly as soon as he realizes what is required of him. The main requisite on the trainer's part is patience, and if a man hasn't got this, and lots of it, he had better keep out of the business. If he gets excited or impatient and goes to hauling the horse about unnecessarily, the animal is sure to become uneasy and fretful, and a little experience of this kind will spoil him.

"The better bred a horse is the more intelligence it has and the more apt it is to make a good performer, provided it has been handled properly from colthood. All high bred horses, however, are nervous and require kind treatment in order to insure good results."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

ROAD-BUILDERS USE DYNAMITE.

Up-to-Date Methods in the Temiskaming District.

Colonization road builders in the Temiskaming district are using dynamite for the first time for the removal of the stumps, and are enthusiastic in praise of its superiority over the older system of "grubbing." Mr. A. W. Campbell, Deputy Commissioner of Public Works, who returned to Toronto recently from a three weeks' visit to the district, where he planned and saw the work commenced upon forty miles of new roads, brought this information with him. "Dynamite," he added, "does away with tedious and laborious work in clearing, and is of course very effective." He said that there were 300 men engaged on road work, and the forty miles mentioned would be completed this season. Grading machines are also being used for the first time, so that the work will proceed as rapidly and as thoroughly as up-to-date methods permit. Following previous methods, all the new roads will have a uniform grade and a width of twenty feet, with ditches on either side, part of a complete system of drainage. A twofold object is attained by this system, namely, substnatial roads and the drainage of the frontal portions of farm locations, which is of great assistance to settlers in the work of clearing. No corduroy roads will be built, as the initial expense is heavy, and they require considerable repair every spring. Mr. Campbell says that many settlers are going into the district. The majority are from the older portions of Ontario, have horses and implements, a little money, and strong determination to succeed. They are putting up good houses and substantial buildings.

A Lesson in Anatomy.

How many bones in the human face?
Fourteen when they're all in place,
How many bones in the human head?
Eight, my child, as I've often said.
How many bones in the human ear?
Four in each and they help to hear.
How many bones in the human spine?
Twenty-four, like a climbing vine.
How many bones in the human chest?
Twenty-four ribs, and two of the rest.
How many bones the shoulders bind?
Two in each—one before, one behind.
How many bones in the human arm?
In each arm one; two in each forearm.
How many bones in the human wrist?
Eight in each, if none are missed.
How many bones in the palm of the hand?
Five in each, with many a band.
How many bones in the fingers ten?
Twenty-eight, and by joints they bend.
How many bones in the human hip?
One in each, like a dish they dip.
How many bones in the human thigh?
One in each, and deep they lie.
How many bones in the human knees?
One in each, the kneepan, please.
How many bones in the leg from the knee?
Two in each, we can plainly see.
How many bones in the ankle strong?
Seven in each, but none are long.
How many bones in the ball of the foot?
Five in each, as the palms are put.
How many bones in the toes half a score?
Twenty-eight, and there are no more.

The Swan's Song in Its Flight.

And now what is the flight like, the effects of which are so potent? At first there is much commotion; the powerful wings smite upon the water with percussive sounds that are heard at a long distance and all is foam about the broad, bent tail and strongly paddling legs. The blows cease, but the bird is not yet entirely quit of the water, along which he now runs, or proceeds with a double motion of flying and running, leaving a pathway white as himself, like a milky-way, behind him. The feet, in fact, are for some time an effective help to the wings. Each, as it strikes the water, jerks up the aspiring body till, at length, the proud moment comes when it can float without them, upon which they bend upward and disappear beneath the tail.

And now the bird is of air, and the wings, as rejoicing at it, burst instantly forth into music, emitting with each of their strong, swift strokes, a note so clear and ringing, so full of a wild, glad melody that all the beauty and poetry of earth and sky and sea seem to have been caught up by them and translated into sound. The soul of the world seems speaking, and its voice is so siren-sweet that the heart lifts up.

This is the real music—the song—of the swan. True it is that sometimes he sings to his harp as he flies, and the note is then pleasing enough. But it is only occasionally uttered, and so low, in comparison, that it is lost in the other. It is not the clarion it should be to match that. One must be near to hear it—the song of the swan in his flight.—Edward Selous, in London Saturday Review.

Charcoal for Fowls.

The value of charcoal must not be underestimated. It is of much help in keeping fowls in health and preventing looseness. Feed it powdered in the food two or three times a week. Chickens for market will fatten faster if fed charcoal, it has been found. Charcoal is not a medicine, strictly speaking. It is an absorbent and as such takes up the poisonous gases in the system, and carries them off. It is practically harmless in any amount.

Best Horse Pasture.

Why not have a horse pasture near the buildings, seeded with Brome, native rye or timothy? Your horses will appreciate being turned out after working all day on the fields far better than standing on the dry stable floors, eating hay and oats. There will be less swamp fever and fewer sick horses, when the work horses are kept on cultivated hay and pastures.

Why Americans Drink.

"Pleasureable emotional excitement is a great relaxer," says a writer in Ainslee's. "Every kind of work is liable to leave the muscles and nerves tense and overdrawn. We often see muscle tonus corrugating the brow, rigidifying the face or attitudes and showing that innervation impulses continue to flow out from the nerve centers after toil is over. We Americans lack the very words gemuth and esprit, and it is very hard for us to entirely forget the struggle for existence in social intercourse. The careful studies of Partridge and others show that the desire for this kind of unbending is one of the chief causes that lead Americans to drink, because they have lost the power to feel the normal exhilaration which inebriation stimulates. Instinct points to this as a great boon, and so it is sought over cups and glasses in the conviviality that comes from artificial stimulation. A little more rollicking jollity, with jest and quip with congenial friends, the tale, the song, perhaps the quiet, harmless game that does not overtax the system—of all this we have too little in our stern American life, with its tendencies to overtonicity and cramps of will and attention."

Rats and Mice and Large Animals.

How many people are there who know that elephants, rhinoceroses and other large thick skinned animals have formidable enemies in rats and mice? These small, rascally rodents have found that the feet of the elephant are excellent eating and have no hesitation in gnawing at them when the animal lies down, when, owing to its confined condition, it is not very well able to defend itself against its puny enemies. To protect these vast creatures it is found necessary in most menageries to keep terriers about the cages. These little fellows very soon dispose of the pachyderm's tiny adversaries. It was recently discovered in a well known menagerie that the mice and rats had been very busy with the hide of a rhinoceros. A Scotch terrier, Fanny, was put into the cage of the huge beast, and in the first night she had killed no fewer than twenty-seven rats. In a few days there were no rats left to nibble the hide of the poor rhinoceros.

The Arabs of Syria.

Among the Arabs of Syria a man changes his name after the birth of his eldest son, assuming the name which has been bestowed upon the heir, with the prefix Abu, meaning "father of." Thus, if the son is called Fudle Allah, "God's Bounty," the father will be henceforth known as Abu Fudle Allah, "Father of God's Bounty." In like manner the mother would become known as Em Fudle Allah, "Mother of God's Bounty." This custom is not merely one of common speech, but extends to all occasions and even to legal documents. Still more strangely, even when a man though married has no son the courtesy of oriental society demands that he should be addressed as Abu Salim or Abu Mahmoud, after an imaginary son whom politeness confers upon him.

Necklace of Ants.

A necklace made of black ants is an article of adornment of New Guinea. The Anglican mission there gives particulars of one which measured over eleven feet long and was composed of as many as 1,800 bodies of ants. Three little pieces of shell and a dozen English beads were incorporated into it, and there was a native string holding it together, yet its weight only reached 2 drams 2 scruples 13 grains. These large black ants make big nests in the native gardens, and the native women and girls catch them, pull off their heads, bite off and swallow the other end and thread the thorax.

Faith.

A mother in one of the suburbs of New York, wishing to prepare the minds of her two children for a coming event of great importance, told them that if they would like to have a little brother or sister she thought if they prayed earnestly every night and morning God would send them one.

In due time the desired baby arrived, to the children's great delight and evidently to the strengthening of their faith, for the next day the father came into his wife's room, saying:

"Look here, Lizzie, this thing has got to stop. I just went into the parlor and found both those children on their knees praying hard as they could for goats!"

Airy Persiflage at Sea.

But the giddy young thing who was talking to the captain was a good sailor and didn't mind a bit of rough weather.

"Doesn't it seem unnecessarily cruel, captain," she said, "to box a compass?"

"Not any more so, miss," he replied grimly, "than to paddle a canoe."

And the ship groaned some more.

The Lacking Stroke.

"Do you think it would improve my style?" inquired the varsity man who had got into the crew through favoritism, "if I were to acquire a faster stroke?"

"It would improve the crew," replied the candid trainer, "if you got a paralytic stroke."

Too High.

"He has such high ideals!" she told her father.

"Yes," said the old gentleman, "that's the trouble. Why couldn't you have been satisfied with a less expensive husband?"

If you are of a more grateful disposition than your neighbor, don't take credit to yourself. It may be that you are older.—Atchison Globe.

Was in Four Hospitals,

DOCTORS SAID I WOULD NEVER BE WELL AGAIN—AM NOW AT WORK AFTER SIX YEARS OF ILLNESS — THANKS TO

The case described below was a very severe one, and well illustrates the power of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food in curing the most serious and complicated diseases. You can be certain of this preparation doing you good, because it works hand-in-hand with nature in building up the system.

Mr. Simon Cloutier, shoemaker, 110 Lagauchetiere street, Montreal, Que., states:—"For six years I was not able to work, my nerves were all unstrung and my digestion bad. I had severe attacks of headache, could not sleep and suffered with shooting pains in the small of my back. I was in four hospitals, but the doctors could not cure me. They said I would never be well again. In spite of their decision, I began the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food some months ago, and I am convinced that I owe my life to this medicine. I have now been at work for over two weeks and believe that my health has been fully restored. It is a pleasure for me to add my testimony to the hosts of others from persons who have been cured by this wonderful medicine."

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food 50 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

All work warranted first-class. THE INTELLIGENCER, Belleville.

FAIRY GOLD

BY BERTHA M. CLAY

—Author of—

"A Woman's Vengeance," "Between Two Loves,"
"Her Second Love," "A Fatal Wedding," Etc.

"Sure to be anywhere where Sir Harry is not," Lady Nora observes severely, arranging some tendril-like curls of her exquisitely-made golden-brown wig over her temples. "And yet that woman does talk so of others! It is audacious of her, for George Ormond is not a boy, and people will talk when one goes about perpetually with a good-looking brother-in-law of thirty-five, and one's husband is a wretched martyr, always shut up with his valet, nursing sciatica, or lumbago, or some other awful thing: they say all his joints will be ossified by-and-by, and that he will have to be carried about like a stone image."

"That will be convenient, I should say, for Lady Jeannie," remarks Dallas drily. "Will you come out, mother? It is fun to see the aristocracy of the Camden Road and Bloomsbury disporting themselves when they fling off their garments of British propriety and starchiness. They 'go it,' I assure you, worse even than nous autres."

"Oh, yes," Lady Nora says scornfully, "that class of people can never be fast without being glaringly so! They label themselves 'improper,' as it were, before one's very eyes."

"We manage matters better," observes Dallas, selecting a cigarette. "Won't you come, mother? We are sure to find two or three whom we know."

"It is very doubtful," Lady Nora rejoins gravely. "No, Dallas; I am going to Miss Dormer's rooms, to sit with the dear old soul and chat with her."

Dallas stares with cynical amusement; but Lady Nora picks up her work-basket, with some knitting-wools and a number of Good Words, and trips off with a matronly air altogether charming.

"Her ladyship seems in earnest," he says, shrugging his shoulders—"carrying the war right into the enemy's camp. I may rest quite satisfied while she does the fighting, and makes terms, and annexes territory. Oh, the unspeakable blessing of being an orphan-boy and having a mother who will be most careful on every point respecting my future wife's pedigree, breeding, and disposition!"

He thrusts his hat upon his head, flings his half-smoked cigarette away as if disgusted with it, and, sauntering slowly out of the vine-hung courtyard of the Hotel Morval into the paved street, with its trottoir of running water. Dallas deliberately turns his back upon the sea and the marine delights of the noisy, glaring Etablissement—whence the strains of the band-music come softened to his ears—and the dimly-lit pier with lovers seated in all the cosy corners, and goes up the long tree-shaded hill to the older part of the town.

The air is much fresher and cooler up here; the Place, between the old Hotel de Ville and the Cathedral, is quite deserted, and the moonlight streams in a flood of light upon the white-walled convent and the flight of steps leading up to the church doors, now in blackest shadow. One solitary lamp only is alight over a side-door; and Dallas, without any distinct idea of what he is doing, or what he may expect to see in the Cathedral at this hour, pushes open the swinging inner doors and enters a side-aisle.

CHAPTER II.

The building is in darkness, save for a few lamps glimmering faintly along one of the pillared aisles and the light of a cluster of tapers around the altar in one of the side-chapels; and before the altar is a woman praying.

There is something unusually gloomy and sombre in the aspect of the great church even in its semi-obscurity; and Dallas, looking about to ascertain the cause, sees that the great organ and its gallery over the entrance-doors are draped in black, and the pillars up the centre aisle and the rows of prie-Dieu nearest the high altar are also festooned with black cloth.

At this moment the organ, which he had fancied he heard before he entered, begins again—low—rolling—the muffled music of a funeral service. And then Dallas recollects suddenly that he was told two days since of the death of the prefect of the department. To-morrow he will be buried, and so the Cathedral is partly draped in black for the high mass at which all his relatives and friends—some of them wealthy manufacturers and shop-keepers of the district—will attend.

"Rather odd I should just step in for this sort of thing!" he mutters, shrugging his shoulders. "If I believed in evil omens, I should say this was one."

He makes his way softly round to the little side-chapel, where the tapers are burning, idly wondering who the solitary devotee can be who is at prayer at this hour.

But Captain Glynne does not venture to disturb the worshipper, and so slips into a chair a little way behind, in the shadow of the pillar, partly out of vague curiosity, partly because he wants to rest, most of all because he wants to think out in the cool shadowy silence of the old church the tangled thoughts that harass him—thoughts of his debts, his poverty, and the complications attendant thereon, of this marriage of convenience from which his inmost soul shrinks, for does not a vision of Joyce Murray's little golden head and sparkling blue eyes and dainty lissom figure flit between him and this unknown woman whom he is to marry—whom he must marry if she can only be found, and will be complaisant enough to buy him and his debts and his difficulties with her money-bags—this unknown future wife, whom he already hates?

Presently the bowed head of the woman kneeling near the altar is raised. As she removes her face from her clasped hands and looks reverently upwards, the yellow gleam of the candlelight falls on her uncovered hair, and Captain Glynne's eyes instantly take note of two facts—first, that it is a grandly-shaped head, intellectual, noble, womanly in its graceful curves and the width of the low brow; secondly, that the stranger is not a woman, but a young girl, with her thick soft hair combed loosely back from her temples; so that little curls and silken rings lie over her brow, while all the thick brown tresses are plaited into one broad plait which falls below her waist.

"That's a good head and a good profile," Dallas thinks contemplatively, as the girl looks about rather nervously at this juncture; and Captain Glynne, behind the pillar, sees a pale, rather thin young face with an earnest, intense expression and melancholy bright eyes.

"Not French, of course," he tells himself—"an English 'mees,' or she would not be here alone at this hour. I wonder who she is?"

She is standing up now, a tall thin girlish figure, slender and willowy as a young sapling, and is hastily putting on her hat and veil while apparently watching and waiting for some one, peering about wistfully with a frightened childishness of aspect that touches Captain Glynne's not very hard heart.

"I wonder who she is?" he repeats, watching her. "Would she giggle with delight or get hysterical with terror if I venture to address her and ask if I could do anything for her? The British school-girl always does one or the other. She looks scared; it would probably be hysterics, so I will let her alone."

The girl was hurrying out of the church now, with swift glances from one side to the other; and Dallas, waiting until she disappears in the gloom, follows leisurely. But, as he reaches the porch doors, he sees the girl pushing fruitlessly at the hinge side of the leather-covered swing-doors.

"Oh, dear, what shall I do? I'm fastened in! The Cathedral is locked up for the night!" she mutters in terror, looking about distractedly, when a tall stalwart figure comes out of the shadows behind her, and a strong hand is stretched out towards the refractory door.

"Permit me," a clear, refined English voice says; and the closed doors swings open smoothly.

"Merci, monsieur," she says, with her school-girl French accent, too flurried to know exactly what she was saying; and, as she steps forward and he follows, they both find themselves shut in between the double doors in pitchy darkness.

"Take care," Captain Glynne says calmly, "until I open the other door."

But, eager to get out of durance, she pushes the door ere he can touch it, and his strong hand falls with a heavy pressure upon her slim, warm, ungloved fingers.

"I hope I haven't hurt you?" he says politely, as the door opens, and they both step out into the shadow of the portico with the flight of wide shallow snow-white steps before them in the moonlight.

"Oh, no, thank you!" she replies, hastily, pulling on her long black-silk gloves, though there is a little red bruise on the back of her hand from Captain Glynne's thick gipsy ring.

There is no one in sight, and the young girl looks about anxiously.

"I am waiting for my governess," she explains, as Dallas lingers. "She went to see a friend while I was in the church."

He raises his hat at once, and goes down the steps without a word, half resolving at the same time to linger and see that she has a safe escort home. She is rather a new specimen of the genius school-girl, this maiden with the devotional eyes and grave pure face, who goes to pray whilst waiting for her governess; and she interests Captain Glynne—slightly.

CURED TOTAL PARALYSIS!

It puzzles the Doctors and astonishes his patients how South American Nervine cures so many who are "given up to die"—It never fails.

"My wife was stricken with nervous prostration, which developed into total paralysis. We had hardly any hope of her recovery, but had heard of the great cures made by South American Nervine in cases of nervous troubles. We decided to try the treatment, and it was astonishing the results that followed the taking of three bottles—it worked wonders indeed. I feel I cannot speak too highly of this great remedy."

SHIP MAY BE SAVED.

Meanwhile the Tide Rises and Falls in Her Forward Compartments.

Halifax, N.S., Aug. 4.—The Norwegian steamer Blaamanden, 3,000 tons, with general cargo, from Hamburg, for New York, is ashore on the rocks off White Point, about five miles from Canso. The steamer struck Saturday night during a dense fog. The rocks protrude through her bottom and the tide rises and falls in her forward compartments. Her pumps are making an effort to keep the water out of the engine room and after compartments, and up to this time have been successful. If the weather continues fine the ship may be saved.

Mrs. Moffat of New York, and M. D. Grey of Elizabeth, N. J., were passengers on the ship. They, with the crew, and the wife of the second officer, a bride of two weeks, were put in the boats when the ship struck, at midnight, and at daybreak were landed at a fisherman's hut on an island near by.

Leaped and Was Killed.

Toronto, Aug. 4.—As a result of injuries received through jumping from a Mimico electric car on Saturday night Miss Maria Thompson died at the General Hospital last night. Miss Thompson had been on a visit to Mimico with her sister, Miss E. Thompson, who lives at the same address, and who has been for some time employed by the Christie, Brown Company on Duke Street.

Force of Firmins Beaten.

Cape Haytien, Aug. 4.—A body of the troops of General Nord, the Minister of War of the provisional Government, commanded by General Piquion, has driven the army of General Salnave, who supports M. Firmin of the Presidency, to a point five leagues from Cape Haytien. A number of the soldiers were killed or wounded.

From Halifax to South Africa.

Johannesburg, Aug. 3.—While giving testimony before the Trade Commission, Mr. Jardine, Commissioner of the Canadian Government, said Canadian traders could not compete successfully in South Africa, until such time as a direct steamship line between South Africa and Canada is established. Mr. Jardine said that if his report on trade prospects in South Africa was satisfactory to the Canadian Government, they would be willing to devote money to such a purpose, and that he hoped to have a steamship line running from Halifax to South Africa within six months.

Steamer Rustington Ashore.

Father Point, Que., Aug. 4.—Steamer ashore on west point of St. Barnaby Island is the Rustington, Capt. T. Bunnett of the Southdown Steamship Company. Messrs. Bell, Symondson & Co., of London, are managers. She is in ballast, inward bound, and went ashore at 11 o'clock Thursday night. The ship lies bow on east by south, and lies 50 feet from bow to near midships. No. 2 hold fills with water at high tide. The position is a very dangerous one should northwest winds arise.

Bicyclist's Awful End.

Burk's Falls, Aug. 4.—While rapidly wheeling down Yonge street on Friday night, 1st inst., Walter Burk, a young man, son of Mr. D. F. Burk, ex-postmaster, deceased, ran into a team of horses, striking the whiffletrees, and was thrown violently under the wagon, sustaining terrible injuries. His bowels and chest were badly torn, and two of the wagon wheels passed over him. The unfortunate man died Saturday night at 6.30 p.m., never recovering from the shock.

GREAT ALTERATION SALE

For the last year we have been inconvenienced considerably for want of space to show our goods, that our business has grown no one will doubt, and in order to keep pace with its rapid growth we must have more room.

To-day the carpenters will remove our rear store and begin work in earnest. The plumbers are with us busy at their part of the job. We have had to remove all our goods in the rear of the cellar and the front part of our store is also to receive special up-to-date touches. What we ask is that the people of Belleville and vicinity will aid us in getting rid of our crowded stock, and for this end we will hold two weeks sale, goods will be sold so cheap that it will startle the whole community.

Waiting For The Inquest

Prof. Ellis' Report, Re Whalley Case, to be Submitted To-night.

Police Have New Information About the Burglary—The Montreal Telegram Explained—Police Still Think Both Men Were Poisoned.

Toronto, August 5. — Many people think that much of the mystery which has hovered over the Evans warehouse and its gloomy tragedies will be cleared up when Coroner Young resumes his official enquiries to-night. The above gentleman expected to receive Prof. Ellis' report on the result of the analysis of the contents of Whalley's stomach at one o'clock to-day. If it is found that the unfortunate shipper's death was due to poisoning, steps will be taken to exhume Geen's body.

For some reason which they are not prepared to make public, the police hold to the view that both men were poisoned, and in their conduct of the Whalley case they are proceeding on the assumption that Prof. Ellis' report will establish this fact.

From all that is publicly known of the case, there is nothing inconsistent with death from natural causes. Those who were thrown in daily contact with Whalley regard it as highly probable that he placed his pay envelope in some secret place, and that he was in quest of it when he was seized with a fainting spell. This would account for his body having been found in a part of the basement where his duties did not call him. Geen's clothes were not searched until after the body had been removed to Millard's undertaking rooms. He died before the warehouse had been closed for the day, and he was surrounded by five of his fellow-employes when he breathed his last. Unless it is contended that he was robbed before he entered the vault, the clue to the disappearance of the $8 which he was known to be possessed of must be looked for outside the warehouse.

The police have secured additional information in respect to the attempted burglary of the warehouse premises on May 30th. It is of such a character as may warrant them in taking action after the adjournment of the inquest.

Ex-Manager Ragg will be the star witness at the inquest to-night. Prof. Ellis' report will also be put in, and young Albert Leatch may be called.

Montreal Telegram Explained.

Manager Moffatt, when seen at the head office of Evans and Sons, at Montreal yesterday, in reference to the instructions wired to Mr. Ragg as to the Geen matter, said:—

"There is no mystery about it at all. Every reasonable man was satisfied that Geen had died a natural death. He had enteric fever in South Africa, and was not well afterwards. The doctor said he died from heart disease, and the boy's father felt convinced that there was nothing wrong. Under the circumstances the hint of suicide or something else was very annoying. Mr. Ragg took great interest in the matter, and was apparently fond of something sensational. He kept writing to this office constantly about it. Finally, on June 26th, a letter was received from him, nominally on business, but half of it was taken up with discussing the Geen matter. Mr. Evans became annoyed and sent the telegram. It was an admonition to Mr. Ragg to drop the subject, and attend to business. That's all there is to it.

James O'Reilly telephoned last night that the Mail and Empire was in error in stating that he had been employed by Evans and Sons. O'Reilly worked for Northrup and Lyman, whose premises are next door to Evans and Sons. The two firms have much in common, and O'Reilly and the other employes were free to come and go during working hours. O'Reilly would now like to modify his statement, as he doesn't like the appearance of it in print. He now says the last time he visited the Evans warehouse was in March.

The Legend of Glenora Up-to-date

Just where the broad blue St. Lawrence flows forth from the encircling shores of its foster-mother, the Bay of Quinte, a tall forest-clad mountain stands, as if keeping sentinel watch over the sparkling waters of the bay at its feet. Islands dot this rippling surface; now an emerald oasis on a desert of blue, and again, a bare gray rock, with a tree clinging persistently to a ragged cleft; each perfectly mirrored reflection repeating the island beauty above it, and forming the commencement of that ever-changing scenic grandeur, "The Lake of the Thousand Isles."

The gentle swish, swish of the waters has no more effect upon the pebbly shore than have the fleeting years on the old mountainside, except that the winding path which leads to the summit becomes more and more beaten with the passing of many feet; for there, like a precious jewel embedded in the mountain's crown, lies "Glenora," the far-famed "Lake on the Mountain."

When the waters of the bay and river are in their gayest and sunniest humor, this mysterious lake on the Mountain-top will toss and tumble in troubled unrest; when the bay and river are lashing their shores in angry fury the lake will oftentimes lie calm and peaceful, with never a ripple upon its broad, dark surface.

* * * * * *

The summer sun was just as golden and the summer sky just as blue in the days of long ago, when Nora, the beautiful daughter of the great chief Woo-rang-a-wong, met and loved the noble pale-face, Captain McKenzie. He was the child of fortune, but Fate willed that Nora, the sweet wild-flower of the hillside and glen, should strike the chords of his life's destiny and bring forth the tender, joyous music of love.

But the grim old warrior said:

"No; my daughter is a princess among her people. She shall not become a white man's slave. Seek a squaw among your own nation, and leave me my daughter."

And so that was the reason, when the stars shone bright and clear one night and the glen was wrapped in shadows, Nora arose from her couch of skins, arrayed herself in all her barbaric splendor, and stole silently forth. She glided swiftly along until the wigwams of her people were indistinct and shadowy, then, pausing and looking sadly backward, she softly intoned a sort of crooning chant:

"Farewell, oh, my wigwam and my father!
Farewell, oh, my mountain and my river!
Farewell! I give all up for my white

Without another sign of womanly weakness, she hastened onward to the bay shore, where she had promised to meet the captain—her captain. His great canoe, which moved so silently upon the waters, was to be in waiting, and together they were to go to some distant settlement and find a priest. She was a trifle nervous, this Indian maiden, for, after all, a woman's loving, loyal heart beat beneath her richly broidered tunic. She waited, listening to the low sobbing of the water, and watching the stars rock to and fro on its glistening surface. She was on the alert for the crackle of a twig or a moving speck upon the bay. An owl hooted in the virgin forest above. Nora shuddered, for it was the death-call of her tribe.

With the patience of her race, she waited, never for one moment doubting her lover's constancy. Her sinewy brown limbs were chilled with the night air, when a form appeared, coming wearily up the shore. She did not move. Her unerring eyesight detected that it was her lover's cousin and trusted friend. He broke to her as gently as he could the tidings that the captain had given his life that very day in trying to save another. Both he and the one whom he sought to save were caught in the treacherous smiling river, and carried irresistibly on to certain death.

"Then my captain comes no more to me," said the maiden, calmly, her dusky cheek growing a shade paler. "He asked me to meet him. I promised. I cannot fail him now because the Great Father has called him onward and the journey is longer than we thought. Farewell!"

For an instant the girl lifted her bare, round arms heavenward, and stood silent as the tree-trunks which towered upward from the shadowy background; then, like an arrow sped from the bended bow of the skilful archer, she was lost in the gathering gloom.

When the great chief missed his beautiful daughter, one of her kinsmen came forward and said that he had met the girl near the basin-like depression on the mountain summit, when the moon was pale and the east rosy with dawn. He had called to her, but she had gone straight on, as one walking in sleep. All the younger braves joined eagerly in the search, for she was the darling of the tribe, and each cherished a secret hope in case he should be the one to find her. When the searching party had climbed the mountain and reached the Great Basin, they stopped short in amazement. Instead of the rocky, broken declivity, a beautiful lake sparkled in the morning sunlight.

"Ugh—ugh—there Glen Nora," ejaculated Wahokin, the foremost Indian, with a wave of his brawny hand, and a look of keen disappointment on his rugged countenance. "She no my squaw now. She nobody's squaw."

The search was abandoned, for why look further when the Great Spirit himself had placed his seal of silence upon the hapless love of the Indian girl? Slowly and despairingly the little band retraced their steps down the mountain path. Slowly and with bowed heads they approached the old chief, sitting at the opening in his wigwam. There was no need for explanation. He read the story of their failure, although no word was spoken.

* * * * *

When the days of mourning, of chanting to the rhythmic beating of tom-toms, and of rocking to and fro in the disheveled abandon of grief, were ended, even Woo-rang-a-wong conceded to the popular verdict that the lake of tears was all there was left to remind them of Nora and her lost love.

The sceptical protested that a subterranean river had found an outlet, but certain it is that the maiden was never again beheld by mortal eyes. From that day the cascade on the mountain-side had a deeper, more plaintive murmur, as if the spirit of the hillside were repeating the sad tale to the spirit of the glen. As the years passed by weeping willows drooped from the banks and a fringe of fine delicate fern nestled near to the lake.

"The maiden's hair," her people said, tenderly, and to this day each Indian girl shyly plucks a frond of the "maiden's hair" as a talisman against accident to her lover. Some claim that even now when the wind sighs mournfully through the trees the beautiful daughter of the grim old chief walks by the margin of the lake, and by her side is the form of the stalwart white captain.

The old chief and his braves have long since gone to the great unknown "Land of the Hereafter," where, doubtless, for them, the mystery has been solved.

Steamers ply back and forth on the great waterway, and a hotel of modern architecture now stands where Nora kept tryst for her lover, but the name still clings to the spot—the lake-crowned mountain—Glenora.

Stories of the Day

Of recent years Lord Salisbury's stoop and his air of meditative abstraction have often been commented on, but these have not been merely "old age" characteristics with him. The Westminster Gazette recalls that, as far back as March, 1863, Mr. W. White, then principal doorkeeper of the House of Commons, wrote as follows in a weekly journal: "We suspect that Lord Robert Cecil's habits are those of a recluse, and that he loves the retirement of the study. He is only thirty-three years of age, but he looks at least ten years older, and his pale face and stooping figure seem to show that poring over books is more congenial to his taste than the sports of the field."

Plenty of Names.—She was idling at the soda fountain. "How many different kinds of drinks do you serve here?" she asked. "Oh, ten or fifteen," replied the clerk, "but we have fifty or sixty different names for them."

Mr. Balfour is the fifth statesman since the union of Great Britain and Ireland, who, having been Chief Secretary for Ireland, has become Prime Minister. More than seventy years have elapsed since the last Irish Secretary who subsequently became Prime Minister was appointed. In 1830 Lord Stanley, subsequently known as the great Earl of Derby, was appointed Irish Secretary, and held that office till 1833. The other Prime Ministers who were previously Irish Secretaries are the Duke of Wellington, who, as Sir Arthur Wellesley, was Irish Secretary from 1807 till 1809; Sir Robert Peel, who filled that office from 1812 till 1818; and the Right Hon. William Lamb (Lord Melbourne), who was Irish Secretary from 1827 till 1828.

The satisfaction that everyone must feel at the triumph of the boy about whom the following anecdote is told is due to the same feeling which prompts a big-hearted man to take the part of the "undermost dog."

Walter was the important witness and one of the lawyers, after cross-questioning him severely, said:—

"Your father has been talking to you and telling you how to testify, hasn't he?"

"Yes," said the boy.

"Now," said the lawyer, "just tell us how your father told you to testify."

"Well," said the boy, modestly, "father told me that the lawyers would try to tangle me, but if I would just be careful and tell the truth I could tell the same thing every time."

An argument often used against Insurance, is, that in a bank you can withdraw your money at any time. The Imperial Life discounts this by providing for annually increasing Loan, Paid-up and Cash Values after the policy has been three years in force. To-day, by payment of a premium of say $30.00, your estate is at once augmented to the extent of $1,000, if death overtakes you, whereas, the same amount deposited will add no more than $30.00.

Hunt & Jeffers, opposite the Post Office, represent the Imperial.

SPORTING NOTES.

The Toronto Eastern League Baseball team made George Sullivan, the Kingston pitcher, look like a counterfeit yesterday, batting his curves at will for a total of 13 hits.

Toronto is being called to win the pennant in the Eastern. They now have a lead of 16 points over Buffalo. Montreal will hardly finish in the first division.

HE DIED FOR HIS FRIEND

Two Boys Drowned Near Clinton While in Bathing.

A Mother's Awful Discovery at Yorkton, N.W.T.—Crow's Nest Company's Bookkeeper at Fernie, B.C., Commits Suicide—A Lad Accidentally Shoots Himself at Simcoe—Clara Lindman, Aged 17, Used Kerosene With Fatal Results.

Clinton, Aug. 5.—A sad accident by drowning occurred on Sunday afternoon in Goderich Township about three miles from Bayfield, and six from Clinton. Two promising and much respected young men, Fred Burnett, only son of George Burnett, and Arthur Curry, only son of Joseph Curry, lost their lives. They had gone with another young lad some two miles from home to Bayfield river to have a swim. Burnett got beyond his depth and Curry went to the rescue. As neither could swim both were drowned. The third lad dragged Burnett's body out and went a mile and a half to the nearest house for assistance. Every effort was made to resuscitate them, but life was extinct.

His Fourth Son Killed.

Dundas, Aug. 5.—Word was received here yesterday that P. H. Clark, son of James Clark, of this town, was killed near Silverwood, Ind. He was an engineer on the Toledo, St. Louis & Kansas City Railroad, and fell from his engine. This is the fourth of Mr. Clark's sons who has met his death while employed on railways.

CAR REPAIRER KILLED.

S. Bown of Winnipeg Run Over in C.N.R. Yards.

Winnipeg, Aug. 5.—S. Bown, a car repairer was killed yesterday in the C. N. R. yards. Bown was engaged in repairing a line of freight cars when the foreman went down and warned all the men to go away, as the engine was going to pull cars out of the yards. Bown moved away with the rest, but evidently went back a few moments afterwards for some tools he had forgotten. He was run over and died a few hours later.

MOTHER'S AWFUL DISCOVERY.

Yorkton, N. W. T., Aug 5.—John Brio, jr., committed suicide by hanging. He was found in a cellar by his mother at 6 o'clock yesterday morning. No cause is known for the rash act. His mother was overwhelmed by her discovery.

SUICIDE AT FERNIE, B.C.

Fernie, B.C., Aug. 5.—George Dunsmore, bookkeeper of the Crow's Nest Company, committed suicide Saturday morning. He was in company with two young men, who were making an attempt to reach the summit of the mountain called Middle Sisters. When almost within reach of their goal, Dunsmore's companions, on looking back at Dunsmore, were horrified to see him fall, with the blood gushing from a wound in his throat, caused by a razor. No reason is known why he should do this act, unless it was that he was temporarily deranged, the effect, probably, of the unusual exertion.

LAD SHOOTS HIMSELF.

Handling a Revolver When It Was Accidentally Discharged.

Simcoe, Aug. 5.—A lad named Bert Imrie accidentally shot himself yesterday morning at the residence of Mr. Edwin Culver, where he was visiting. It appears that he was handling a revolver in the presence of other boys, when it was discharged, killing him instantly. Deceased was a nephew of Rev. Mr. Dey, of Simcoe, and was about 17 years of age.

KEROSENE AS KINDLING.

German Serving Maid, Three Weeks Out, Fatally Burned.

Winnipeg, Man., Aug. 5.—While trying to light a fire with kerosene on Sunday, Clara Ludman, 17 years of age, who just arrived from Germany three weeks ago, was fatally burned as the result of flames catching her dress. She was taken to the hospital immediately, but died in the evening.

Sad Double Drowning at Tonawanda.

Tonawanda, N. Y., Aug. 5.—Miss Rubie Adams of Toronto, who has been visiting Dr. C. W. Clendenan during the past week, was accidentally drowned in the Niagara River near the Tonawanda ferry about 9 o'clock last night. The Outing Club of Tonawanda, left this city on the yacht Ella H. on a pleasure trip. The excursionists spent a pleasant day, and about 8 o'clock left Coney Island for home. When near the Tonawanda ferry dock Miss Rubie Adams and Dr. Gray, who were on the upper deck of the pleasure yacht, decided to go to the first deck. While Miss Adams was going down the rear steps her foot slipped a step and she fell to the deck below and rolled into the river before aid could reach her. Dr. Gray, who had been with her, dove into the stream and made a strong effort to save her, but owing to the swift current at that point, both were swept away and were drowned.

Woodstock Is Excited.

Woodstock, Aug. 5.—A suspicious stranger around the tollgate on the Benderville road, has given rise to the rumor that William Tracey, of Washington State, is in Oxford. The police searched for him last night with electric lamps.

KING GROWS STRONG.

Cowes, Isle of Wight, Aug. 5.—King Edward yesterday for the first time since his illness, walked up and down a flight of stairs without assistance. He also enjoyed a stroll on the upper promenade deck of the royal yacht, Victoria and Albert, from which a splendid view of the yacht races was obtainable. Empress Eugenie, who has arrived here, on her yacht the Thistle, visited King Edward yesterday. Queen Alexandra, Princess Victoria and Sir Frederick Treves took a cruise yesterday on board the royal yacht Osborne.

MAYORS TO SEE CROWNING.

Chief Executive of All Cities of More Than 20,000 Invited.

London, Aug. 5.—Visitors to London who will not be able to see the interior of Westminster Abbey before the coronation day, may do so after that event, it having officially been announced that the edifice will be open from Aug. 12, to Aug. 16. The colonial and the native Indian troops will be admitted free on Aug. 12. On other days the entrance fees will range from 6d to 5s.

Invitations to the coronation ceremony have been telegraphed at the King's command to the Mayors of all cities of more than 20,000 inhabitants.

Rehearsals of the coronation ceremony are held daily, with the exception of the musical program which has been made a special order for Friday. A structure is to be erected between the Abbey and Parliament Buildings through which members of the House of Commons will have private access to the Abbey.

POISONED BY A CUBAN COOK.

New York, Aug. 5.—Richard Benjamin Van Horne, son of Sir William, chairman of the Canadian Pacific, lies in the quarantine hospital here, ill with fever and the effects of what is supposed to be poison, given him for vengeance by a Cuban cook in camp near Matanzas, Cuba.

Mr. Van Horne has been chief engineer of the new Cuban Railway, which his father is projecting, was passenger on the steamer Curityba and was taken to the hospital immediately on arrival yesterday.

In Cuba he discharged a native workman, who swore he would get even, threatening to shoot Van Horne on sight. The man left the camp, and later got back, unknown, as cook.

Mr. Van Horne complained of poison symptoms for several days before sailing from Mantanzas for a visit home. He was taken violently sick on board the Curityba, but was given the best care possible by Capt. Hoppe and his officers.

He is reported as being in a critical condition. Sir William has been notified. Sir William's friends in this city were also notified. He is about 30 years old.

Well-Known Orangeman Dead.

Halifax, Aug. 5.—James Kelley, assistant traveling passenger agent of the I.C.R., died here yesterday after an illness of only a few days. He was about 48 years of age, a native of Ireland, but a resident of St. John, N.B., for many years, where he leaves a wife and family. He was at one time Provincial Grand Master of the Orange Order for New Brunswick and a Deputy Grand Lecturer of the Grand Lodge of British North America, and was well known all over Canada.

Canadianizing the U.S.

St. Paul, Minn., Aug. 5.—The first definite announcement that the Canadian Pacific will enter American territory has been made by David McNicholl of Montreal, vice-president and general manager of the system. His statements were to a St. Paul railroad official. The important fact indicated by Mr. McNicholl, the official said yesterday, is that the Canadian Pacific definitely plans to secure its own line into St. Paul or a line so closely in its control as to amount to the same thing.

Hawkesbury Bylaws Carried.

Ottawa, Aug. 7.—Word was received from Hawkesbury last night stating that the three bylaws for local improvement voted on in that town carried by large majorities. By the bylaws $100,000 will be raised for the installation of a system of waterworks, $73,000 will be expended on sewers, and $20,000 on good roads.

REMOUNT SCANDAL RE-AIRED

Army Estimates Again Discussed By House of Commons.

War Secretary Brodrick Says Government Intends to Probe Charges of Corruption—Emphasizes Difficulties of Buying—He Does Not Believe Lord Kitchener Would Join in Cry Against the Department.

London, Aug. 5.—The remount scandals were re-aired in the House of Commons yesterday in the course of a discussion of the army estimates and the item of transportation and remounts. Sir Charles Dilke, suggested the publication of the correspondence bearing on the remount scandals, obtained from the United States and Argentina. Colonel John P. Nolan condemned the loose system of contracts under which such dreadful scandals were possible, while several other members of the House deprecated the method of purchasing horses through middlemen.

Mr. Brodrick, the War Secretary, replying, said the members overlooked the difficulties in the way of providing one hundred and fifty thousand horses in an emergency. He said the Government intended to probe the charges, but that he believed some remount officers had been harshly judged. He did not believe that Lord Kitchener would join in the universal cry against the remount department.

In answer to the War Secretary, John Dillon, asserted that Mr. Brodrick's vague speech only strengthened his suspicions, and he pointed out, as an instance of this, that the Government had not denied that Major Studdart had profited largely through buying horses in Ireland under a false name.

Mr. Brodrick denied that he had no disposition to push the Studdart and other investigations, and said the Government would go to the fullest extremes to convict the perpetrators of conspiracy and fraud.

The vote on the item of transportation and remount was agreed to.

To Subvert British Rule.

London, Aug. 5.—The correspondent of The Daily Mail at The Hague says in a despatch that it is becoming increasingly difficult to combat the generally accepted Dutch theory that the Boers leaders here are campaigning toward the ultimate subversion of British rule in South Africa. The Boer General, Lucas Meyer, who has just reached Holland from London, instead of going to Germany, has stepped at The Hague and is going to visit Mr. Kruger, while several other prominent Boer leaders are assembling here. Nobody at The Hague, continues the correspondent of The Daily Mail, believes their story that their mission is to collect funds for Boer widows.

QUEEN HINTS TO KITCHENER.

Rumor Revived That the Soldier Is About to Marry.

London, Aug. 5.—When Queen Alexandra met Lord Kitchener after his return from South Africa, she told him there was only one thing necessary to make him everything that could be desired.

He asked her what that was.

The Queen answered: "A clever, handsome wife."

The commotion excited in London society by this story was intensified by Lord Kitchener's intimation to the London Corporation that he wants a piece of decorative gold plate when receiving their address and not the conventional gold casket. This is thought to indicate that he intends to start housekeeping.

It has been noticed with anxiety that Lord Kitchener gets on better with American women than English women, for the latter's usually stiff, formal manners chill him.

Darby Had a Saw.

Windsor, Aug. 5.—Darby Travers, who is confined at the county jail on suspicion of burglarizing the residence of Col. Burk, United States consul at St. Thomas, was caught in a bold attempt to gain his liberty Sunday by Turnkeys Elliott and Iler. Travers had come into possession of a saw in some manner and had already sawed through two iron bars of his cell, when the turnkeys became aware of his plans and frustrated them.

Convention of Photographers.

Buffalo, Aug. 5.—To-day, at Convention Hall, the Photographers' Association of America will hold its 22nd annual convention, and the indications are that the attendance will be one of the largest in its history. The association numbers some 1,700 members and includes photographers from Canada, Mexico and the West Indies.

May Lose His Sight.

Chatham, Aug. 5.—A little son of J. G. Kerr, barrister of this city, will probably lose an eye as the result of a mishap while playing yesterday. The sight is badly damaged.

Outbreak Is Over.

Washington, Aug. 5.—Captain McCrea of the gunboat Machais cabled the Navy Department yesterday that the outbreak at Hayti is practically over.

Dr. Roche May Resign.

Winnipeg, Aug. 5.—It is rumored that Mr. Roche, Federal member for Marquette, is to resign his seat in the House and enter the Local Cabinet.

Smallpox Victim's Obsequies.

Perth, Aug. 5.—No one could be found to bury William Lee, who died of smallpox, and Rev. Father Davis volunteered and completed the task.

Headache.

Pain across the forehead or at back of head is dangerous. It slowly but surely weakens the intellectual powers, impairs the vitality and will. Headache is sometimes from the eyes but more frequently is caused by a disordered condition of the stomach and digestive organs.

Sunday Steamboat Case.

Owen Sound, Aug. 5.—The first round of the battle between the Lord's Day Alliance and the King's Royal Park Company was fought in the Police Court yesterday morning, on the charge against Capt. McKenzie of the ferry steamer Canada, of running an excursion. A number of witnesses were examined for the prosecution, principally young men, who had taken a trip on the boat on Sunday, July 20. The first witness for the defence was N. P. Norton, customs collector, and after his evidence was heard as to the view taken by the department in the matter, the case was adjourned till next Monday.

Dumont's Patron Hurt.

Paris, Aug. 5.—M. Deutsch, donor of the prize of 100,000 francs ($20,000) offered for the inventor of a dirigible balloon, which was won by Santos-Dumont, was seriously hurt in an automobile accident in a suburb of Paris to-day. Several of his ribs were broken and he was otherwise injured.

Another Murderer Gone

Ossining, N.Y., Aug. 5—Aaron Hallo was put to death in the electric chair in Sing Sing prison yesterday for the murder of Mary McCarthy, whom he shot and killed in a New York department store, May 17, 1900.

Struck by a Car.

London, Aug. 5.—About 12.30 this morning a young man named George Bremner, son of a prominent local cigar manufacturer, who had just returned with the excursion party from Ingersoll, was struck by a car which was being shunted in the Grand Trunk yard and was badly injured about the head.

Minister's Wife Dead.

Elora, Aug. 5.—Mrs. Willoughby, wife of Rev. N. R. Willoughby, D.D. of Elora, died in Saskatoon, N.W.T., Sunday, suddenly, at the residence of her son. The body will be interred in Toronto, Friday at 3 p.m.

Helping a Sculptor.

When Macmonnies, the American sculptor, was a young man working in Paris, Falguiere, the famous French sculptor, on one occasion entered his atelier and found there a beautiful Diana that had been for months "on the stocks" and was approaching a perfection measurably satisfactory to the sculptor himself.

Falguiere became so absorbed in the work before him as to forget that it was not his own. He began to twist and pull the dainty limbs of Diana this way and that, to punch her in the ribs, turn her queenly head—for she was then only in clay, of course, and susceptible to impressions—until at last he had produced the very pose he desired. "There, my friend; I like her better so," he cried and skipped out of the studio.

He had really intended to do Macmonnies a favor and had indeed paid him the greatest compliment of which he was capable, but the young sculptor was in distress, for on comparing the remodeled Diana with a photograph of Falguiere's statue of the same character he found the Frenchman had unconsciously made a practical replica of the other. Macmonnies did not rest until he had restored his statue to its original pose.

A Literary Kleptomaniac.

Among French writers no one carried the profession of the literary brigand to such an extent as Mme. de Genlis. In 1830 her evil ways brought her into the courts of law under very discreditable circumstances. Bout, the publisher of a series of manuals, engaged her for the sum of £16 to write a "Manuel Encyclopedique de l'Enfance." The manuscript, which had been paid for, was on the point of being printed when it was discovered to be an exact copy of a book of the same kind published in 1820 by M. Dasscha. I do not find it easy to understand the audacity of a writer who would perpetrate a fraud of such enormity or the imbecility which would suppose that it would not easily be detected.

Another time she contributed to a Paris newspaper a feuilleton which turned out to be a close reproduction of a romance printed some twenty years before. Surely the poor woman suffered from literary kleptomania

Reason and Instinct.

A certain north country miner was particularly proud of a clever little dog he possessed. At times he was apt to claim a little too much for his pet, and one morning a neighbor was endeavoring to point out the difference between instinct and reason when an amusing interruption occurred.

A seedy looking tramp turned the corner, and the dog, without so much as a word from his master, sprang into the road and offered battle.

"There you are," laughed the miner as the dog snapped and snarled round the heels of the tramp; "'e don't like the look of the chap. That's instinct."

Suddenly the tramp turned and kicked the dog into an adjacent field.

"There you are," ejaculated the miner's friend grimly. "The chap don't like the look of the dog. An' that's reason."—London Tit-Bits.

Practice and Preaching.

When the late Bishop Hare was presiding over a Methodist Episcopal church in New York city, a large reception was given in his honor, to which a brother of his, a lawyer, who closely resembled the bishop, was invited.

During the evening a member of the conference who had never met the bishop's brother approached him and, shaking him warmly by the hand, said:

"Good evening, Bishop Hare. I greatly enjoyed the sermon you gave us today. It is just what this church needs."

"You are mistaken in the person," said the brother, smiling, as he pointed to the bishop on the opposite side of the room, "that is the man who preaches; I practice."

His Quaint Suggestion.

A Frenchman, who appears to have been of a thrifty turn of mind, conceived the idea in 1878 that too much valuable time was being wasted in cleaning sardines when preparing them for the market. He found a way of preparing them without cleaning them, and on this he took out letters patent. Apparently he had some slight misgiving as to whether the public would be perfectly suited with his invention, and so in his claim he makes this parenthetical entry:

Fish put up by this process may be slightly unpleasant to the customer at first, but he soon gets used to it.

Taverns In Sweden.

Taverns in Sweden are closed on Saturday, which is pay day, while the savings banks are kept open until midnight. This plan induces the workmen to invest their money where it will pay them interest instead of in alcoholic stimulants.

Elephants' Love For Finery.

Strange as it may seem, the elephant is passionately fond of finery and delights to see himself decked out with gorgeous trappings. The native princes of India are very particular in choosing their state elephants and will give fabulous sums for an animal that exactly meets the somewhat fanciful standards they have erected. For these they have made cloths of silk so heavily embroidered with gold that two men are hardly able to lift them.

They Felt Hungry.

She—Well, Clarence, dear, the situation is not quite as rosy as it was pictured to us before marriage, is it?

He—Well, not altogether so, love.

She—I wish—er—I wish—

He—What do you wish, dearest?

She—I wish we had the rice and the old shoes they threw at us when we were married.

Her View.

A little three-year-old miss while her mother was trying to get her to sleep became interested in a peculiar noise and asked what it was.

"A cricket, dear," replied her mother.

Honesty.

If honesty is the best policy in business, it is also the best policy when one has done wrong and is confronted with the question whether he shall confess everything frankly or make excuses. A transparent excuse is worse than none at all.

After a man is married he discovers that his wife's golden tresses are nothing in the world but red hair.—Philadelphia Record.

DOES IT PAY TO BUY CHEAP?

A cheap remedy for coughs and colds is all right, but you want something that will relieve and cure the more severe and dangerous results of throat and lung troubles. What shall you do? Go to a warmer and more regular climate? Yes, if possible; if not possible for you, then in either case take the ONLY remedy that has been introduced in all civilized countries with success in severe throat and lung troubles, "Boschee's German Syrup." It not only heals and stimulates the tissues to destroy the germ disease, but allays inflammation, causes easy expectoration, gives a good night's rest and cures the patient. Try ONE bottle. Recommended many years by all druggists in the world. You can get this reliable remedy at R. Templeton & Co's.

Accommodating the Captain.

One of the sea captains in the employ of Stephen Girard had a rural Yankee's fondness for whittling with his jackknife and on one trip succeeded in getting away with a large part of the rail, although, feeling that he was not without the artistic sense, he really regarded the rail as greatly improved in appearance. When the vessel came to Philadelphia, Girard went aboard, made a general inspection in the captain's absence and as he was about to return to shore asked one of the seamen who had been cutting the rail. The seaman told him the captain and then, afraid his telling might have unpleasant consequences were the captain to learn of it in a roundabout way, informed that official of the interview with Girard. The captain was in terror of a reprimand, but, hearing nothing from his employer, supposed the incident closed. As he was about weighing anchor ready to leave port a dray loaded with shingles drove down to the wharf, and the driver hailed the vessel.

"There must be some mistake!" shouted the captain. "Our bill of lading doesn't mention shingles!"

"This is where they belong!" sung back the driver. "Mr. Girard himself told me to deliver them! He said they are for the captain to whittle!"

The Cat Nature.

The cat's spirit of independence is the most distinct characteristic of her nature. As Mme. de Custine rightly said, the cat's great difference from and, according to her sentiments, superiority to, the dog lie in her calm insistence on selection which invariably accompanies her apparent docility. To the dog proprietorship is mastership; he knows his home, and he recognizes without question the man who has paid for, feeds, and on occasion kicks him with all the easy familiarity of ownership. He follows that man undoubting and unnoticed, grateful for a word, even thankful for an oath.

But the cat is a creature of a very different stamp. She will not even stoop to conquer, nor be tempted out of her nature by offers of reward. She absolutely declines instruction; nay, even persuasion is lost upon her for any permanent effect it may be designed to have. You may be the legal possessor of a cat, but you cannot govern her affections.

HEROIC HEART "FOOD"

Dr. Agnew's Cure for the heart is heroic because in cases of heart disease seemingly beyond all human aid it goes to the very brink of the "Black River" and snatches from it the heart-sick victim.

In a trice it allays pain—in a twinkling it gives strength and vigor and it works a quick and permanent cure as by magic. It is the one great heart remedy which rightly bears the crown of supremacy and on which is inscribed the life words, "It never fails." Thirty minutes after taking the first dose, the sick heart forgets its pain. Try it. 43

Some Very Old Pronunciations.

"Laylock," the pronunciation of lilac once very common, has now almost entirely passed away. It is hardly likely to be found in dictionaries or glossaries except such as profess to give provincial variations of spelling. Sixty years ago, however, it was by no means a provincialism or a mark of the uneducated. I well remember that Walter Savage Landor always spoke of "laylocks," as did my own mother and most people of that generation. It belonged to the age, now almost entirely passed away, which called Rome "Room," gold "goold," St. James "St. Jeames," with other variations of sound now deemed vulgar. I have heard my father say that George IV. always spoke of "my loyal city of Luunon," while "obleeged" and "cowcumber" were heard from the most refined mouths.

I can distinctly remember on the first Sunday in Advent, 1825, hearing the officiating clergyman at St. Mary Woolnoth give out sonorously when reading the first lesson "like a lodge in a garden of cowcumbers," and my dear old rector, Julius Charles Hare, twenty years later adopted the same pronunciation, saying at table, "Obleege by passing the cowcumber." "Vilets," as a dissyllable for violets, was equally common among people of good education.

Merely Symptoms.

"Life is a failure," said the tired looking passenger in a grave and faraway voice. "Man is a fraud, woman a bore, happiness a delusion, friendship a humbug; love is a disease, beauty a deception, marriage a mistake, a wife a trial, a child a nuisance; good is merely hypocrisy; evil is detection. The whole system of existence—life, morality, society, humanity and all that—is a hollow sham. Our boasted wisdom is egotism; generosity is imbecility. There is nothing of any importance but money. Money is everything, and, after all, what is everything? Nothing. Ar-r-r-r-r!"

"Glad to meet you, sir," said the thin little man with the ginger hued whiskers, extending his hand cordially to the speaker. "I have the dyspepsia pretty bad at times myself."

Australia's Stony Desert.

The great stony desert of north Australia was discovered by Captain Sturt, an Australian explorer, in 1845-46. It is north of the river Darling and is about 300 miles long and 100 broad, consisting of sandy dunes or ridges. Its want of trees, except along the creeks, gives the country a sterile appearance. These ridges were probably formed by the joint effect of winds and a gradually retiring sea.

According to Captain Sturt, these waters were gradually lost by evaporation or carried to some undiscovered sea. The only vegetation, growing scantily, are prickly acacias in full bloom, all of stunted growth. Water is scarce except in the creeks which are sheltered, and this is generally brackish. Few travelers care to traverse this inhospitable desert.

Sucking Poisonous Wounds.

Among all people the sucking of the wound has ever been considered the most effective remedy of immediate application for snake bites. In Africa a cupping instrument is employed in emergencies of the kind to draw out the poisoned blood. The ancients followed the same methods, and when Cato made his famous expedition through the serpent infested African deserts he employed many savage snake charmers, called "psylli," to follow the army. They performed many mysterious rites over men who were bitten, but the efficacy of their treatment appears to have consisted in sucking the wounds.

A Musical Beat.

The Courrier de Paris relates that a party of men, sitting in front of a boulevard cafe, were recently approached by a man who had a clarinet in his hand and who said: "Gentlemen, excuse me. I have to make my living, but I suppose you would rather give me a sou not to hear me." They took the hint. He repeated this performance several times till one day one of the men said he felt like hearing a tune and asked him to play. "I am sorry," said the man with the clarinet, "but I cannot play a note."

Not Work to Preach.

A minister who used to preach in Somerville had a little boy. A few days before his father left the city to go to his new parish one of his neighbors said to the little boy, "So your father is going to work in New Bedford, is he?"

The little boy looked up, wondering. "Oh, no," he said, "only preach."

The Dead Sea.

The daily average of 6,500,000 tons of water is received into the Dead sea from the Jordan. There is no outlet, and the level is kept down by evaporation only, which is very rapid because of the intense heat, the dry atmosphere and the dry winds which are constantly blowing down from the gorges between the mountains.

Good Reason.

"I wonder," began the man with the investigating mania, "what makes babies cry?"

"Probably," butted in the practical fellow, "contemplation of some of the things they're in danger of being like when they grow up."

Must Be Good.

Young Husband—My dear Melanie, I must say that this pudding tastes very bad.

Wife—All imagination, dear; it says in the cookery book that it tastes excellent!

[illegible]

In singing his own songs Moore altered the arrangement of the airs and sang the first part of each verse twice over at the beginning instead of as a refrain at the end. In that glorious song of his, "Oh, the Light Entrancing!" Moore's own singing of it was a matchless treat. With head upraised, he seemed almost to revel in the fresh morning light as he gazed on the "sight entrancing," and his eye sparkled as "files arrayed with helm and blade" seemed to pass before him, while a deeper feeling awoke as the passion of the song came upon him.

His voice, one of infinite modulation, but of small compass, rose clear and thrilling to its highest pitch as he sang:

Go ask yon despot whether
His armed bands could bring such hands
And hearts as ours together.

His song was an inspired recitative, and he seemed to improvise as he ran his fingers over the notes, and as the tide of thought came over him it was poured forth in harmonious cadences of exquisite variety. Had he been tied to a chair, with the added doom of a prosy companion, he would have exploded and gone off like a rocket or a bottle of sparkling champagne.

Moorish Slavery.

It would do those good who write passionate articles on Moorish slavery to see the well fed, lazy slave of Wazan lounging in the sun, kiff pipe in mouth and scarcely doing a stroke of work from week's end to week's end. The most ordinary English kitchenmaid would accomplish in a couple of hours what a Wazan slave does in a week. All are free to come and go as they please, but none avails himself of this freedom. The reason is not far to seek. In Wazan they are fed and clothed by the shereefs and on holidays and feast days receive presents of money.

Thus all the necessities of life are found them without their having to work for them, which otherwise they would be obliged to do. Nor is it only the necessities of life that are thus supplied to them free, but they are given each his room to live in and married at the expense of the shereefs to slave women. Their children, by law slaves, are not necessarily so and are often apprenticed to workmen to learn some trade or if they wish are free to seek their fortune in other lands.

A Lucky Escape.

An elephant hunt on the Muar river is described in the Straits Times of Singapore. The beast turned hunter, and the man, fleeing, caught his foot in a rattan creeper and fell. He discharged his rifle, however, and that fortunately frightened the animal away. The Times continues: "It is not every man who has the good luck when pursued by an elephant to be crossing a swamp, so that when the animal has carefully kneaded his prostrate foe and passed along thinking him completely pulverized the said man should come up smiling behind the elephant none the worse for his massage treatment. This actually happened to a well known man in the Straits Settlements."

A Unique Home.

In Sweden and Norway there are several homes for spinsters. One of these at least is as attractive as it is unique. It is a monument to the memory of an exceedingly wealthy old man, who, dying more than 200 years ago, left the major part of his fortune to the old maids among his descendants. A superb home was built, furnished and managed by salaried trustees. It flourished and has continued. Any unmarried woman who can prove blood relationship to the founder of the institution is entitled to admission to the home. She is given a suit of rooms, a servant, private meals and is subject to no rules save such as ordinary good behavior demands.

Music's Power.

Grimes—Yes. I'm fond of music. There's Tinnerman, for instance—

Grimes—It has been very enjoyable to me. I got Tinnerman to keep at it night and day, and the result was that I bought the house next door for a thousand dollars less than the man who lived in it asked a week or two before.

Two Sinners.

"It is very wrong to tell a falsehood," said his mother to little Jimmie, who had caught him in one.

"Then we're both offul sinners, ain't we, maw?" queried Jimmie.

"Both! What do you mean?"

"Why, you told Missus Smith yesterday that you hoped she'd call again, an' after she wuz gone you said you wished she'd never come again."

A Money Saver.

"But you are taking considerable risk in letting your young men owe two or three weeks' board."

"Yes, there is some risk," answered the boarding house keeper. "But then, you see, they worry over it so that they lose their appetites, so I save money in the long run."

She—He was desperately in love with her. Why, he sent her costly flowers and presents nearly every day for two years.

He—Did he finally win her?

She—No; he earned her.

THE PUBLIC should bear in mind that Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil has nothing in common with the impure, deteriorating class of so-called medicinal oils. It is eminently pure and really efficacious—relieving pain and lameness, stiffness of the joints and muscles, and sores or hurts, besides being an excellent specific for rheumatism, coughs and branchial complaints.

Many beds have the appearance of comfort, but no amount of clothing can warm a cold heart.

A WONDERFUL CURE.—Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes; "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly to cure the sore but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, so I got a bottle and when I had used about one-half, the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done, it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very bilious habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. But since using 3 bottles of the Vegetable Discovery, the biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 60 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know."

The Flagging Energies Revived.—Constant application to business is a tax upon the energies, and if there be not relaxation, lassitude and depression are sure to intervene. These comes from stomachic troubles. The want of exercise brings on nervous irregularities, and the stomach ceases to assimilate food properly. In this condition Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will be found a recuperative of rare powder, restoring the organs to healthful action, dispelling depression, and reviving the flagging energies.

The man who can keep his mouth shut has the best of the argument with all women.

Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial is a speedy cure for dysentery, diarrhoea, cholera, summer complaint, sea sickness and complaints incidental to children teething. It gives immediate relief to those suffering from the effects of indiscretion in eating unripe fruit, cucumbers, etc. It acts with wonderful rapidity and never fails to conquer the disease. No one need fear cholera if they have a bottle of this medicine convenient.

Sometimes the most charitable view of others is that they ought to be in the insane asylum.

Sleeplessness.—When the nerves are unstrung and the whole body given up to wretchedness, when the mind is filled with gloom and dismal forebodings, the result of derangement of the digestive organs, sleeplessness comes to add to the distress. If only the subject could sleep, there would be the oblivion for a while and temporary relief. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will not only induce sleep, but will act so beneficially that the subject will wake refreshed and restored to happiness.

The wonder is there are not more kicking horses, since there are so many men who kick without discrimination.

Icebergs in the North Atlantic usually appear about February 15 and are seen more or less frequently until about June 15.

They make one feel as though life was worth living. Take one of Carter's Little Liver Pills after eating; it will relieve dyspepsia, aid digestion, give tone and vigor to the system.

Up to the present slower progress is being made with the construction of the Edward VII. than of any warship built at Davenport.

Nothing so suddenly obstructs the perspiration as sudden transitions from heat to cold. Heat rarifies the blood, quickens the circulation and increases the perspiration, but when these are suddenly checked the consequences must be bad. The most common cause of disease is obstructed perspiration, or what commonly goes by the name of catching cold. Coughs, colds, sore throat, etc., if attended to in time are easily subdued, but if allowed to run their own course generally prove the fore-runner of more dangerous diseases. Nine-tenths of the consumptives date their afflictions from a neglected cold, and the diseases that are caused by wet feet, damp clothes, or exposure are more numerous than are generally supposed. One of the most efficacious medicines for all diseases of the throat and lungs is Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, which frees the lungs from viscid phlegm by changing the secretions from a diseased to a healthy state.

WILL KITCHENER MARRY?

SIGNS SEEM TO POINT TO THAT CONCLUSION.

The old story that when Lord Kitchener returned from the war he would wed a wife whom he had wooed for some time, is revived, but who the lady is no one has yet ventured to suggest. But those who pretend to know say the victorious General is contemplating matrimony, and that in love, as in war, he will say or do nothing till all is ready. And they point to one or two suggestive incidents which happened during last week. First of all, the King, in conferring the rank of Viscount on Lord Kitchener, officially announced in the Gazette that the title was to descend to his daughter in the event of his not having any heirs male. Then Lord Kitchener chose a piece of plate instead of a casket for presentation with the address from the city next month, thereby upsetting all traditions and customs of the corporation, members of which, themselves, in discussing the matter, seemed to come to the conclusion that Lord Kitchener means to set up housekeeping some early day, with a Lady Kitchener as a partner. While Viscount Kitchener is the last man in the world to be described as a carpet knight, he did figure the other day as a knight of dames with a considerable degree of success. It was at a dinner, given in his honor in Londonderry House, Lord Kitchener sat by the side of his hostess. When her magnificent pearl necklace burst open there was consternation on the faces of those near. A nervous footman added to the Duchess' concern by failing to repair the damage, but Lord Kitchener, with all his accustomed coolness, dexterity and rapidity, caught up the necklace and in a trice securely locked it on the fair neck of the owner of the pearls.

WHAT DOES IT MEAN?

The cry of the Protectionist Liberals, who support the present Government, is that a permanent tariff, so far as it can be made permanent, is absolutely necessary in the interests of industries now in existence, and of those which under a protective policy may be established. It is true there is a section of the party who are professed free traders in principle, who chafe under the non-fulfilment of pre-election promises, and who predict a fulfilment of them in the near future. Of this class Mr. Walter Scott, M.P. for West Assiniboia, ranks himself. To please his exclusively agricultural constituents, he told them in a speech delivered at Milestone, N.W.T., a short time ago, that—

> "The Liberal party was elected on a platform of tariff for revenue. Under the new schedule to be introduced next year considerable reductions would be made." The manufacturers had made a determined set on the Government for an increase in taxation on a large number of articles. The lumbermen, the woollen men, the implement men, the cotton men, in fact, all the manufacturing industries were represented during the session by delegations demanding increase in the tariff. It was only just that the people of the North-West who were interested in a low tariff, should be advised that the tariff will be reduced next session." "The tariff had already been reduced, but it would be better to have it reduced still lower. Every reduction in the tariff tended to the benefit of the country. There had been practically no importations of machinery before 1897. Since then that business had radically changed. There was now active and keen competition from American manufacturers."

Does this western supporter of the Government speak authoritatively? It would appear so, for he tells his hearers that "under the new schedule "to be introduced next year con- "siderable reduction would be made," and that "it was only just that the "people of the North-West, who "were interested in a low tariff, "should be advised that the tariff "will be reduced next session."

If it be just to give such information to the farmers of the North-West, is it not equally just, and more so, that the manufacturers and importers in the East should be forewarned of what is to take place, in order that they can prepare for the coming cut? This fore-warning of what is to take place will enable the importer to diminish his importations in order that he may not have a large stock of goods on his shelves, upon which a higher duty has been paid than will have to be paid under the "new schedule," which Mr. Scott tells his constituents is to be introduced next year. It will also be in the interest of the manufacturer to see that his business is not injured, if not ruined, by flooding the market from foreign countries with the articles which we manufacture. It does not, however, appear, from what is taking place, that this latter but important class of our people are to be considered, either in the protection of their business or in giving them information which saves them from ruin.

Were it not for the serious injury to the country which the adoption of such a policy as that indicated by Mr. Scott would inflict, one would be inclined to exclaim, "it serves the protectionists who assisted in placing professed free traders in power right; knowing, as they must know, that a continuance of the National Policy by the present men in power is not from principle, but for fear of popular opinion, and from a determination to retain power at all hazards; and that if they do not carry out the pledge which the member for East Assiniboia has promised his constituents, it will be for fear of the result."

What have the Ministerial organs of Ontario and Quebec to say to this declaration of a new schedule of tariff reductions? Have they not yet received instructions from Ottawa to feel the public pulse upon the question? Or was it left exclusively to the Western man to break the ice? Will not the Globe "speak now?"

TIMELY TOPICS.

A Civic Government, says a cynical journal, is asleep and its tax rate and other mistakes are the snores which keep everybody else awake.

• • •

Some of the United States newspapers have discovered the importance of the traders on the Pacific Coast, and propose the concession by the United States of a "spot" at the head of Lynn Canal to Canada, upon which a Customs House could be erected, in consideration of tariff concessions by Canada; or in other words, allow the products of the United States West free entry in the Klondike Territory in return for a "lot" large enough to erect a Customs House at or near Skagway. Well may the Halifax Herald exclaim: "For "a solemn joke this is almost good "enough for dog-days. To claim "a lot to which they have no right, "and then to offer to give up part "of this unfounded claim in order "to secure something else they "want, appears to satisfy some "people's sense of justice and reci- "procity." No one need be surprised at this proposition. Yankee journalists have cheek enough for anything.

Who will dare deny that Canada's Militia Department is not presided over and governed by a titled aristocracy? The Minister is Sir Frederick Borden, a K.C.M.G. and P.C.; the Adjutant-General, Lord Aylmer, is a Baron; the Major-General Commanding is the Earl of Dundonald. How elated and joyful must Sir Wilfrid, the despiser, of what he terms "Tin Pot titles" be, when permitted, to stretch his legs under the same table and sip his wine with such distinguished titled gentlemen.

A writer in Dublin to the London Express says: "I am in a position to state that no appointment as successor to Earl Cadogan as Viceroy would be more popular than that of the Duke of Connaught, who is at present Commander-in-Chief in Ireland, and who has gained the friendship and good-will of all classes of Irishmen." This augurs well for the future of Ireland. If "all classes of Irishmen" have at last found an Englishman, who has "gained their friendship and good will," Ireland may yet be acquitted of the charge of attempting to dismember the Empire.

The Ontario Education Department has issued an official statement which announces that candidates for teachers' certificates will not in the future be required to study Latin. The study of chemistry will, however, be made compulsory. It also announces that after 1905 no foreign language will be either optional or compulsory. This order, so far it affects our Common schools will meet with general approval. A knowledge of chemistry is of much more importance to 99 per cent. of our common school pupils than a knowledge of Latin.

Pretty nice music the band played last night. Yes, indeed! Your humble servant sat on a bench and fought mosquitoes and enjoyed himself hugely. The nicest selection of all, perhaps, was the pot pourri of old tunes. The old tunes of our boyhood, how dear they are! And the memories they call back! You heard that one first at the amateur minstrels, where poor Charlie Ockerman, and Hank Leavens, and Philo Scovill and Lew Chown et al. held forth, and you thought it was the very finest entertainment to be seen in the world, even though you travelled from Dan to Beersheba. Just about that time John McCrudden and Tom Downs were new men on the police force, and our old friend Allan Petrie was Chief. Pretty busy men they were in those days, too, especially on Saturday nights.

Those were Belleville's good old days, sure enough. When the big sawmills were running and money was almost as plentiful as sawdust, when the old d.s.b.g. was Belleville's leading necropolis, when our cricket club had a provincial reputation, when the yachts of the Bay of Quinte showed their sterns to all rivals at regattas, and when Belleville, for its size, didn't take a back seat for any town between Halifax and San Francisco.

• • •

Yes, it takes the old tunes to call back the old memories. Pity it is that the band couldn't, by its music, reincarnate the spirit which actuated the men and women of old times, when the money was kept in circulation and the word Belleville was a synonym for hustling and aggressiveness.

• • •

People who claim to know say that it would not require any very great effort to once more put Belleville in the van of progress. A few more industries like the Lock factory and Chown's, a few thousands of dollars of local money invested, something doing at the Rolling Mills and we would have a return of the good old days. Will it ever come to pass? Yes, when Belleville people have faith in their own town, and show their faith by their works.

However, what we started out to say was that the band played very well last night, and did much credit to their leader. That's one thing, anyhow, in which the Belleville of to-day leads the Belleville of three decades ago—the people then didn't have Queen Victoria Park and a good band to give concerts on it twice a week.

Winnipeg is forging ahead. The Union Bank is about erecting an eight storey building, Marshall, Field & Co., of Chicago has purchased property on Notre Dame avenue, and is about building a mammoth departmental store; $50,000 has been offered for Grace church and refused by the trustees of the church; a modern hospital is proposed at a cost of $45,000; 450 acres of land in West St. Boniface have been sold, the price paid being $50,000. Referring to these evidences of the city's prosperity, the Winnipeg Telegram of August 2nd, exultingly exclaims: "Millions are involved in several stupendous deals in Winnipeg building and real estate." We wish them all prosperity. Let's have a second Chicago in Manitoba.

"When is Mr. H. Corby coming back from Karlsbad?" "When the supply of post cards runs out."

"Why don't you get a month's holidays, and go off and enjoy yourself?" "Can't do it. I'm not a minister."

"Did you hear the story about the three Aldermen?" "No." "Too bad."

"What makes Ald. Blank look so happy these days?" "Well, you see its this way: He expects to run for Mayor next year, and if the Grit paper keeps on abusing him he knows he's as good as elected."

"Sam Bjones is looking for trouble." "How is that?" "Trying to persuade his wife to let him take the children to the picnic to-morrow."

WE'RE GETTING

BUSINESS

ALONG

In Wall Papers and Interior Decorations, despite the warm weather. The season makes some difference, but there's always something doing and we are doing it this summer.

OUR DECORATIVE IDEAS

Are being employed in the first homes of Belleville and in many of the better homes of Canada. We employ only skilled craftsmen to execute the work, designing and color schemes of our artist.

WE DO NOT CATER FOR OUTSIDE AND ORDINARY PAINTING.

We rather cater to Interior Decorative work. This we make a specialty of, can execute your work in superior style to the ordinary plans the "done to death" methods, giving you the newest ideas employed today in the larger cities of America in decorative interior work and the cost will be no greater than the ordinary old-fashioned way. The result will be both pleasing and lasting in its effectiveness.

OUR STOCK AND SELECTION

OF paper hangings is so replete that it would tire you to see the entire line during one day.

If you have a home to decorate take two days, get our decorator to study your rooms, to give you sketches of the rooms furnished and to suggest color schemes in harmony with the other furnishings and the surroundings. He can do it and the suggestions will cost you nothing.

ALL CLASS OF INTERIOR WORK.

CHRISTIAN GUARDIAN MAY HAVE NEW EDITOR

ILLNESS OF DR. COURTICE MAY RESULT IN A VACANCY—REV. DR. ROSE IS MENTIONED FOR THE POSITION.

Toronto, Aug. 4.—There are strong possibilities of a change in the editorship of The Christian Guardian. The illness from which Rev. Dr. Courtice is suffering is one which may at any time unfit him for work, and consequently a large number of leading Methodists are advocating that a new editor be elected to the Guardian. It is further claimed that the work of editing the official organ of Methodism requires close attention to the work, and that the Rev. Dr. Courtice in his present condition would be utterly unable to do justice to the task.

The Guardian is not regarded by a number of the so-called progressive party in the church as being up-to-date, and they believe that a change in the editorship would be in the general interests of the church at large. This proceeding would, of course, be bitterly opposed by the more conservative leaders of the Methodists and the men who are at present in authority.

Rev. Dr. Rose, of Ottawa, a brother of the late Judge Rose, of this city, is believed to be willing to accept the editorship of the Guardian should it be afforded to him at Winnipeg, and many of his Eastern friends are very desirous that he should stand for election. His name has been mentioned as an opponent of Rev. Dr. Carman for the General Superintendency of the church, but in this connection his chances are not regarded as serious, as the probability is that the Rev. Dr. Carman will be re-elected at Winnipeg by acclamation.

OFFENSIVE FEET

MAY BE MADE SWEET AND WHOLESOME BY THE USE OF "FOOT ELM."

Many people of cleanly habits, who bathe their feet regularly are nevertheless mortified to find, despite all their care, that their feet emit an unpleasant odor. This is due to germs or bacteria which find the warmth and moisture of the feet a splendid place for their development. There is no treatment so effectual for destroying these germs, without injury to the feet, and removing the unpleasant odor as "Foot Elm." It keeps the feet sweet and clean, cool and comfortable.

Besides this, if your feet itch or ache, get tired or sore easily, blister or burn, swell or sweat, "Foot Elm" will readily remedy all these unpleasant conditions.

Price 25 cents a box at all druggists or by mail. Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont. Do not take a substitute.

Literary Notes

The Cosmopolitan Magazine announces that it has obtained for the year 1902 the exclusive American rights to H. G. Wells' work and an option on a like privilege in 1903. By way of preface to the publication of Mr. Wells' "Mankind in the Making," a series of papers that is sure to excite even wider comment than did "Anticipations" from the same pen, the August Cosmopolitan publishes an interesting biographical sketch and character study of Mr. Wells.

The advance styles for autumn are presented most attractively in The Designer for September. Of great practical value is an article on "School Array" for the boys and girls, and in the millinery pages are given full directions for making a stylish toque suitable for the season. Especially interesting among the literary features is the initial appearance of "What Women are Doing," under the editorship of the feminine readers of The Designer. The regular departments of "Notes of New Books," "Selections for the Recitationist," "Toilet Table Chat," "Etiquette Hints," "Points on Dressmaking," "In Motherland," and "The Kitchen Kingdom" are practical, valuable and timely.

BOYS' KHAKI SUITS.

The last of a big lot, sizes up to 30, clearing at $1.50 the suit at the Oak Hall. These suits have been very popular selling at $2.50 and $3, but the season has been backward and they must be cleared. Come before all the sizes are picked up.

WORSE THAN CREEDS.

"Did you hear of the split in the Church of the Extended Invocation?"

"No, I haven't heard. What could it be about? I thought the members of that church were the most united in the city."

"They have always borne that reputation, but there is trouble enough there now."

"What about?"

"The members decided to give their pastor an automobile so he could more easily make the round of his parish, and, after the money had been collected, the question of whether it was to be a steam, an electric or a gasolene vehicle came up, and you can easily imagine the rest."—The Automobile Magazine.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh), that can not be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

TOWN IN HANDS OF MOB.

Knightstown, Ind., Aug. 5.—The village of Charlottesville, five miles west of here, was in the hands of a mob for several hours last night, and the sheriff of Hancock County, with 75 armed deputies, is on the scene. The trouble arose from an attempt to prevent the running of its cars by the Indianapolis and Eastern Traction Company.

Recently a quarantine was established by Hancock County against this city on account of smallpox here. The traction company stopped running its cars until Sunday. When an effort was made to resume the police of Charlottesville stopped the second car, arrested the motorman and conductor, and side-tracked the car.

Later other cars were run through the town and late Sunday night a car was assailed by a fusilade of shot from the guards and villagers, and C. M. Kirkpatrick, one of the directors, and several other passengers were hurt.

The sheriff of Hancock County, with the armed deputies, has been sent to the scene to enforce the quarantine.

COMING TO CANADA.

Former Texan Ranchers to Take Up a Western Range.

Dallas, Texas, Aug. 5.—C. W. Merchant, J. H. Parradore and R. C. Andersen of Abline, and Cape Willingham of McMillen, prominent Texas stockmen, have arrived at Dallas, en route to Canada, where they will engage a ranch for next season. Heretofore Texas cowmen have been sending cattle to the Dakotas and Wyoming country, but next spring they will try the experiment of using a Canadian range, as they expect in Canada to meet with less disturbances from public authorities. The Texas combination expects to pasture about 2,000 head of cattle in Canada next year.

New Anglo-Saxon Scheme.

London, Aug. 5.—The Sunday Observer, one of the most serious and erudite of English journals, gives great prominence to a long editorial article advocating the extending of the postoffice savings banks into an Imperial banking concern, embracing the whole Empire, somewhat upon the lines of the American national banks, with branches in America, with an Anglo-American naval alliance as an adjunct.

In Favor of Confederation.

Montreal, Aug. 5.—Judge Emersan of Newfoundland, who is in the city on a visit, says that the feeling in favor of confederation is now very keen, but he hesitates to give an opinion as to whether the colonial conference in progress in London is likely to bring about the consummation desired by many. His Honor, says the Premier, is very much in earnest in the matter.

Murder in St. John.

St. John, N.B., Aug. 5.—The body of Joseph Doherty, aged 20, was found concealed in a clump of bushes yesterday, with wounds on head and face, supposed to have been caused by bullets and sharp-pointed instrument. All circumstances point to foul play. The police are investigating the matter.

Old People's Favorite.

A MEDICINE THAT INVIGORATES THE KIDNEYS AND LIVER, TAKES AWAY THE PAINS AND ACHES AND REGULATES THE ACTION OF THE BODILY ORGANS, STRONG RECOMMENDATIONS FOR

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

The experience of Mr. Brown, as stated in his letter below, is similar to that of scores of men and women who feel old age creeping in upon them. The kidneys grow weak and inactive, the back aches, there are deposits in the urine, and pain and smarting in passing water. The legs swell, and there come pains and aches not unlike rheumatism.

Under such circumstances old people turn to Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills for relief and cure, and are not disappointed. They have learned by repeated trial that they can depend on Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills every time, and consequently they have become known as the old people's favorite medicine.

Mr. John Brown, 66 Nelson St., Ottawa, Ont., writes; "I am getting up in years, and having been a hard worker all my life, I am beginning to fail. For some time past I have thought there was something wrong with my kidneys. I seemed to bloat up, was very short of breath and feared heart disease, although I was told there was nothing wrong with my heart. I got so bad that I had to do something.

"Hearing of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, I began using them, and by the time I had used up the first box I felt considerably improved. I continued using this medicine, and to-day feel ten years younger. I am strong and hearty, and do not suffer from my former ailments. I consider Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills an excellent medicine for old people."

There are people in nearly every town, village and country side road who have proved the merits of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. Ask your friends or neighbors about them. One pill a dose; 25 cents a box. At all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

A WORD TO THE GREAT ARMY OF SUMMER TOILERS

IF YOU ARE NOT AS ROBUST, VIGOROUS AND HAPPY AS OTHERS IN AUGUST, A BOTTLE OR TWO OF

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND

Will Give You Health, Full Energy and Happiness.

Many men toiling in offices, stores and workshops during this hot summer weather, and women weighted with the works and cares of home, are critically near the breaking down point. The symptoms of coming sickness and disease are manifested in sleeplessness, nervousness, tired feelings, languidness, irritability, failing appetite and poor blood circulation.

Paine's Celery Compound is a precious boon to the ailing, sick and rundown in this August weather. A bottle or two used at once will quickly bestow the needed strength to battle against the weakening and enervating effects of the oppressive heat, and will enable men and women to go through the necessary routine of daily toil with heart, soul and energy. Paine's Celery Compound is specially distinguished for its ability to build up rundown systems in hot weather. Mrs. Mossop, of Mimico, Ont., says:—

"I have much pleasure in giving my testimony in favor of Paine's Celery Compound. I was entirely broken down by hard work, anxiety and sleeplessness, and had pains all through my body. Doctors' remedies had no effect, and nothing met my case until I used Paine's Celery Compound. This medicine has done wonders for me, and I would strongly urge all sufferers to use it, as it is the best in the world."

St. John's Eve.

Curious and quaint beliefs still prevail in some parts of England concerning St. John's eve. Lassies still place their shoes, before retiring for the night, at right angles, forming a T, reciting the lines:

Hoping this night my true love to see

under the idea that their future husband will be revealed to them in dreams. Formerly supper was placed on the table with the belief that the future husband would enter by the open door. There is, too, a prevalent idea that especially fortunate are the children born on St. John's eve, the rhyme running:

Under the stars on the eve of St. John,
Lucky the babe that those stars shine on.

Waited For a Yawn.

Two young fellows recently went out on a shooting expedition, driving to their destination in a trap. They had excellent sport, and toward nightfall they returned to where they had hobbled their horse and were proceeding to hitch up when they discovered that neither of them knew the way to do it. In about an hour they had most of the harness on; but, try as they would, they could not get the bit into the horse's mouth. At last one of them sat down in despair, and his companion said:

"Well, Tom, and what are you going to do now?"

"I'm going to wait till that brute yawns," was the reply. And they did.

The Wrong Roll.

Immediately after a wedding which took place in Washington the best man started for South Africa, where he remained more than a year. On his return, says a writer in Harper's Magazine, he was given a dinner and wore evening clothes for the first time since the wedding.

In the midst of the evening, fumbling in his waistcoat pocket, he astonished himself and his friends by pulling out a hundred dollar bill. Where had it come from? A sudden thought flashed across his mind.

The next morning he went to the clergyman who had married his friends.

"Do you remember marrying Mr. Armitage and Miss Bently about a year ago?"

"Oh, perfectly," replied the clergyman. "I see them constantly at my church."

"Well, will you pardon me if I ask you a delicate question in strict confidence. How much did you receive as your fee?"

"I will return frankness with frankness," returned the clergyman, smiling whimsically. "It was the strangest fee that ever came my way. After the ceremony the best man, with a profusion of thanks, slipped into my hand a small sliver of plug tobacco wrapped in a wad of paraffin paper!"

A Sight For Sarah.

Of a certain bishop, famous as about the plainest man in England, the Liverpool Post tells this pleasing tale: One day as this homely parson sat in an omnibus he was amazed by the persistent staring of a fellow passenger, who presently unburdened himself as follows:

"You're a parson, ain't yer?"

"Well, yes; that is so."

"Look 'ere, parson, would you mind comin' home with me to see my wife?"

Imagining the wife was sick and needing assistance, the clergyman at great inconvenience to himself went with the man. On arriving at the house the man shouted to his wife to come downstairs, and, pointing to the astonished parson, said, with a grin of delight:

"Look 'e 'ere, Sairry. Yer said this mornin' as I wur the hugliest chap in England. Now, just yer look at this bloke!"

A Weed That Eats Fish.

An English naval officer, writing from Suakin, Red sea country, contributes the following remarkable instance of a plant preying upon one of the vertebrata. The instance noted was observed by him when surveying the Paracel Islands, in the south China sea: "As I neared a pool cut off by the tide from the sea I noticed among other submarine plants a very ordinary looking flesh colored weed. Bending to inspect it closer, I noticed numbers of small fish lying helpless in its fronds, apparently with little or no life in them. Putting my hands down to pick one of them up, I found my fingers caught by suckers on the weed, the fronds of which had closed tightly upon them.

"The fish had been caught in every conceivable way—by the head, the tail, sides, etc.—and some of them had been held until the skin was completely macerated. Those of the fish that were still living had evidently been caught at different times, they appearing in all stages of exhaustion. I regret being unable to name either the plant or the fish, but that the botanical cannibal really preyed upon the finny denizens of the deep there isn't the least doubt."

When Reptiles Ruled a World.

There was a time "in the wide revolving shades of centuries past" when our globe was wholly in the possession of walking, swimming and flying reptiles. Being the dominant type, they divided naturally into three great classes. In the oceans they became gigantic paddling enaliosaurians; on dry land, or, rather, wet land, for the whole face of the globe was doubtless a quagmire at that time, they became monstrous, erect dinosaurians, some of which had legs fifteen feet or more in length; those which inhabited the regions of the air were the terrible flying pterodactyls.

For a vast but unknown length of time these awful creatures literally ruled the earth. Finally after they had "seen their day" they began to grow less and less. One by one they died out in the face of the younger and more vigorous fauna until at the present time only a few miniature alligators and crocodiles and a few toy snakes remain as reminders of skulking lizards and geckos and of the enormous reptilian types that once crowded land and sea.

Simple Indeed.

It seems as if the acme of frugality had been reached by a French officer who explained with many appropriate gestures his system of sustaining life on a pension of five francs a week.

"It is simple, veree, veree simple," he said to the friend who had expressed amazement at his feat. "Sunday I go to ze house of a good friend, and zere I dine so extraordinaire and eat so veree much zat I need no more till Vednesday.

"On zat day I have at my restaurant one large, veree large, dish of tripe and some onion. I abhor ze tripe —yes, and ze onion also—and togezzer zey make me so seek as I have no more any appetite till Sunday. You see, it is veree simple."

The Holland Primrose.

There is a plant in Holland, known as the evening primrose, which grows to a height of five or six feet and bears a profusion of large yellow flowers so brilliant that they attract immediate attention, even at a great distance, but the chief peculiarity about the plant is the fact that the flowers, which open just before sunset, burst into bloom so suddenly that they give one the impression of some magical agency. A man who has seen this sudden blooming says it is just as if some one had touched the land with a wand and thus covered it all at once with a golden sheet.

The Man In the Moon.

Life, whether vegetable or animal as we know it, certainly cannot exist under lunar conditions, says the London Mail. The alternations of a long day of considerably over 300 hours' duration, with a night of similar length, accompanied by changes from excessive heat to its antipodes of cold, would alone render all earthly life impossible, but experience has taught even here the adaptability of life to most extreme conditions, and it may be believed that, after all, organic life may have found a congenial home in our "lamp of night."

Money Talks.

Parvenu—I was raised as genteel as you was, an' I'll bet you a hundred on it. Come on now; money talks.

Kortique—If your money talked the way you do, you'd be bankrupt pretty soon.

"What do you mean?"

"It would give itself away."

Stumbled on a Fact.

A minister went recently to preach in a chapel unfamiliar to him. "You must do your best to keep your voice up, sir," said the chapel keeper, "for our church is very unfortunate in its 'agnostic' effects." Whether he meant it or not, it was quite true.

A New Theory.

"Papa, were we descended from monkeys?"

"Not all of us, my boy. Some were ascended."

Enthusiasm gives life to what is invisible and interest to what has no immediate action on our comfort in this world.—Mme. de Stael.

The Fairy Lamplighter.

Affection often inspires ingenuity. In a life of Joseph Severn the narrative of the artist's care of the poet Keats in his last illness includes a graceful incident. Severn, worn out with watching and tireless service, would sometimes drop asleep and allow the candle to go out, thus leaving the sick man in darkness, which he dreaded. Realizing that this was liable to occur, Severn hit upon a happy device to keep the light still burning. One evening he fastened a thread from the bottom of the candle already lighted to the wick at the top of another unlighted one set ready near by.

Not being sure the experiment would succeed, he had not mentioned it, and when later on he fell napping as the first candle was burning low the invalid was too considerate to awake him, but lay patiently awaiting the extinction of the fluttering flame. Suddenly, just as he expected gloom and blackness, the connecting thread—too fine and distant for him to see—caught fire, and a tiny spark began to run along it. Then he waked the sleeping nurse with an exclamation of joyful surprise.

"Severn! Severn!" he cried. "Here's a little fairy lamplighter actually lit up the other candle!"

But it was only the good fairy of many sickrooms—loving forethought—that had lighted the candle.

Flowers of the Cranberry.

One of the daintiest of wild flowers of June is the blossom of that time honored concomitant of roast turkey, the cranberry. While, however, everybody knows the berry, few are acquainted with the flower, for the peat bogs where it blows in the choice fellowship of the stately pitcher plant and the golden club and of many a rare orchid are quite remote from the beaten paths of travel. The cranberry plant is a small, slender, somewhat trailing shrub, with the neatest of evergreen leaves, from amid which a few threadlike stalks lift their nodding flowers. When fully expanded, the pink lobes of each corolla are curled back like a lily's, and from the heart of them the compressed stamens protrude in the shape of a spear point or beak. The imaginative may see in this long beaked little blossom a resemblance to a tiny crane's head, whence some hard pressed etymologist has thought to derive the word cranberry,—that is, crane-berry.

Italian Rings.

Rings of Italian workmanship are remarkably beautiful. Venice particularly excelled in this art. In the Londesborough collection is a fine specimen. The four claws of the outer ring in open work support the setting of a sharply pointed pyramidal diamond, such as was then coveted for writing on glass. The shank bears a fanciful resemblance to a serpent swallowing a bird, of which only the claws connecting the face remain in sight.

It was with a similar ring Raleigh wrote the words on a window pane, "Fain would I rise but that I fear to fall," to which Queen Elizabeth added, "If thy heart fail thee, do not rise at all," an implied encouragement which led him on to fortune.

Candy For Change.

"Some people wonder why we carry a stock of cheap candy, penny candy," said the man who keeps the railroad newsstand. "Well, you see, it's this way: I have a lot of regular customers who want it. They take it out in change. For instance, one man has been buying two evening papers from me every afternoon for several years. If he has any pennies, I never see them. He always throws down a nickel, picks up his two papers from the pile and then takes three pieces of candy, which he chews while waiting for his train. Other men saw him do this and followed suit, and now it's quite the regular thing."

Eating From the Same Plate.

In former days it was usual for a couple seated together to eat from one trencher, more particularly if the relations between them were of an intimate nature or, again, if it were the master and mistress of the establishment. Walpole relates that so late as the middle of the eighteenth century the old Duke and Duchess of Hamilton occupied the dais at the head of the room and preserved the traditional manner by sharing the same plate. It was a token of attachment and tender recollection of unreturnable youth.

A PRONOUNCED VERDICT.

"I LOVE MALT BREAKFAST FOOD"

YOUNG AND OLD WHO HAVE USED THIS KING OF FOODS SAY IT IS THE MOST DELICIOUS OF ALL CEREALS.

Malt Breakfast Food, delicious, appetizing, easily digested, rich in nourishing properties for blood, flesh and brain, is the chosen breakfast food of all who prize good health: The pronounced verdict of each man, woman and child is: "I love Malt Breakfast Food." No other grain food has had such a welcome into the homes of all classes; no other is now, so popular at the morning meal. If you would be strong, vigorous and happy use Malt Breakfast Food. Do not be induced to take a substitute from any Grocer. Insist upon having Malt Breakfast Food every time. All progressive Grocers sell it.

FAIRY GOLD

BY BERTHA M. CLAY

—Author of—

"A Woman's Vengeance," "Between Two Loves,"
"Her Second Love," "A Fatal Wedding," Etc.

Within the friendly shadow therefore of a buttress on the east side of the church he resolves to linger unseen and watch the tall slender figure under the portico; but he finds the snug hiding-place already appropriated.

"Confound those spoony couples," mutters Captain Glynne. "There isn't a square yard of the town, from the pier to the ramparts, safe from them! A sergent de ville and a bonne, of course!"

But the pair who have been disturbed in their soft whispering and giggling do not apparently belong to either class. The man indeed looks a jaunty "gent" of the London type and the woman is a fashionably dressed personage in a lace-trimmed silk costume. She runs fleetly up the steps to the church porch, with exclamations in voluble French, in a most unrefined voice with a provincial accent, to the young lady who is patiently waiting there; and then they both descend the steps and walk away down the narrow street together.

"Upon my honor, a discreet chaperon!" Dallas says cynically, keeping them in view as he saunters down-hill. "I wonder does the young lady's mamma — a British matron perhaps of Low-Church principles and immaculate propriety — know how her dear child and the French governess have been employed?" He grins under his tawny moustache at his own ideas. "I wonder also if the young 'mees' goes to pray every evening while the governess meets her lover in the moonlight?" he mutters. "If so, I think I'll supplant the unfaithful institutrice in her duties! My devout little friend might make it worth my while."

He follows the governess and her charge all the way down into the Basse-Ville, along the Rue Bazaine, to the court-yard doors of the Hotel Morval.

Captain Glynne's suspicions are deepening every moment, and he keeps close behind them—indeed mademoiselle the governess has detected the echo of a masculine step following them long since, and has already cast several swift demure side glances at the tall shapely figure with its measured soldierly tread.

"Isabelle, I am afraid we are late for prayers!" the young lady says, in an anxious tone.

"Gracious mercy, prayers again!" Dallas thinks, fairly shocked at such an unreasonable amount of devotion.

The girl opens a door softly as she speaks, and they both go in — not without another sly backward glance from the governess at the tall figure in gray tweed standing a few doors farther down.

Captain Glynne sees on the closed door the number "54"; and, after noticing it carefully, he walks down the corridor very slowly, and deliberately opens a door at the farther end—the door of his mother's salon.

He goes in, throws himself upon a couch, with one arm over his head, and so lies a long time silent with wide open haggard eyes staring at the ceiling.

"So," he says at last, with a slow bitter smile, "the little devotee in the black frock and with the long plait of hair over her shoulders is the future arbitress of my destiny, the possessor of the money-bags which I shall take from her in exchange for my name and myself! If she is only rich enough, that ignorant child can buy me. Poor little girl! She looks too good for an evil fate!"

CHAPTER III.

"Will you remain for our little evening worship, Lady Glynne?" old Miss Dormer says, with a preparatory cough and a deprecatory smile at her visitor, whose presence is at once an honor and an infliction to the homely old lady, translated at this advanced period of her life to what she calls "grandeur."

Miss Dormer bravely opens the devotional books which her old servant has just placed before her, and selects a hymn "for sinners convinced of sin," and a chapter which she thinks will be peculiarly suited to a "worldly fashionable" like Lady Glynne, and puts the blue-ribbon mark against the form of family prayer for that evening; and Mr. Dormer, her brother, leans back in his chair with a sigh and closed eyes, and the old servant "ahems" respectfully, and folds her hands on her knees in her corner near her mistress's chair.

"I shall be delighted, dear Miss Dormer," Lady Nora answers, feeling utterly dismayed.

What will she be expected to do or say? she wonders. They are evidently Methodists—for so she designates together all Dissenters—perhaps they will pray for her, and expect her to describe the state of her soul! She has heard of such things being done by those dreadful Methodist people.

"I'll put up with it this time, for the sake of Dallas," Lady Nora tells herself, eyeing with secret glances of alarm the array of books and the solemn faces. "At another time Dallas shall come and be prayed for and preached at; I will let him see how he likes it!"

"We must wait for Lolie and her French governess," the old lady says, with another deprecatory smile; and the old gentleman nods assent.

"Lolie ought to be in now," observes, consulting his watch, with its heavy old guard and topaz pendant. "Young gels can't be too particular, I always think, my lady."

"She's in the care of her French governess, Silas," his sister says reprovingly. "Such a nice young lady, Lady Glynne! Such a nice miend!"—for so the worthy old lady pronounces the word, with an impressive drawl. "She and Lolie have gone up to the old part of the town to study the lights an' shadows of the moonlight—so mademoiselle says. She's so fond of my niece, Lady Glynne, and takes such pains with her education!"

"I dare say," Lady Nora responds, with a smile of contempt. "A toady!" she says to herself, with fine discernment. Then she asks aloud, "Where did you get her, Miss Dormer? I fancy I have seen her before."

But, before the question can be answered, the door opens, and a tall girl in a plain clinging black gown of "nun's veiling" and a dashing looking young lady in a fashionable black broche silk come in together.

"Yolande, my dear, we've been waiting prayers for you and mamaselle," Miss Dormer says.

"It's too late for young gels to be out o' doors," remarks Mr. Dormer, shaking his head.

"I was afraid I should have to go without seeing you, dear," Lady Nora interposes, with a lustrous melting smile and a fond pressure of the girl's thin hand. "Your dear auntie will tell you what a nice little project we have been planning together this evening!"

"What a long, lanky creature it it," her ladyship remarks. "And what an expression for a girl of her age—a solemn stare like a virgin-martyr in an old picture! Those horrid Methodistical people have ruined her. She will be always an outre uncomfortable sort of girl. She has no more manner now than figure, and that is saying a good deal! Poor Dallas! And he is wonderfully fastidious about girls for so young a man."

"It was so exquisite a night madame," the governess says, with a little gasp of affected rapture, speaking in English, and English without a French accent, too, "the silver-white lights and the dense black shadows were so beautiful, we forgot the time, mademoiselle and I."

But the governess is visibly uneasy in the presence of Lady Nora, and tries to keep out of the range of her keen eyes, which scrutinize poor "mamaselle," as her employers always respectfully term her, with all the acumen of her worldly knowledge and savoir-faire.

"Yes, yes," Miss Dormer says, with a rebuking smile, taking up one of the good books; "but we're going to talk of something better than moonlight or sunlight either now, mamaselle."

In a moment "mamaselle" looks meek as a chidden child, and ceases her mundane remarks, with an inquisitive side glance at Lady Nora, who is looking at her steadfastly.

"Will you read the hymn, brother?" Miss Dormer asks politely, but nevertheless holding the hymn book tightly in her own hands.

"No, no, Keren; you read it tonight; my eyes are not very well," Mr. Dormer replies, declining the duty.

For the good man, honest and brave in other respects, can neither overcome his inborn British awe of a titled person nor the dreadful uncertainty that possesses him regarding the pronunciation of certain words of his mother-tongue.

So Miss Dormer leads off with decorous fluency through hymn, chapter and prayer.

And then Lady Nora bids them all good-night most sweetly.

"Au revoir until to-morrow afternoon, dear," she says, with a light caressing touch of her jeweled fingers on Yolande's soft rose-pale cheek, and a merry radiant smile at the girl's puzzled solemn eyes. "Three o'clock, Miss Dormer, at the Pont de Naque, is it not? It will be a charming afternoon!"

The governess hurries to get out of the room the instant prayers are over; but Lady Nora, by a quick movement, intercepts her; and the other has to draw back. And, while she bids Miss Dormer and her brother a nice good-night, Lady Nora is scrutinizing the governess in the bright gaslight with deliberate, smiling patrician insolence.

"Mademoiselle Bella Glover, I believe?" she says coolly, as she passes her, with a gracious little nod, and speaking in perfect Parisian French, with a very different accent from "mamaselle's." "I am pleased to see you so well placed. So much nicer for you than your post with Mrs. Vavasor!"

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

Montreal, Que., Aug. 4.—There were about 750 head of butchers' cattle, 100 calves and 1000 sheep and lambs offered for sale at the East End Abattoir to-day. The butchers were present in good numbers, but trade was dull, and prices continue as low as on Thursday's market. There were no prime beeves on the market, and only two or three of the best cattle sold at a little over 5c per pound, and from that down to 4c, for good medium beasts. Common stock sold at from 2¼c to 3½c, and the canners paid from 1½c to 2¼c per pound for the small bulls and leaner cattle. Calves sold at from $2 to $12 each. BARNS LIGHTNING'S TARGET.

Chatham, Tamworth and Winchester All Suffer Loss.

Chatham, Aug. 5.—Yesterday lightning struck and destroyed the barns of Mr. Barker, on the 9th concession of Chatham. Some grain and live hogs were destroyed.

Tamworth, Aug. 5.—Lightning yesterday struck the barn of Isaac Harrison, a farmer living about a mile and a half from here, destroying it together with 25 loads of hay, two horses valued at $300, and 25 hogs, buggies, wagons and all farm implements. Loss over $1,600; insurance about $600.

Winchester, Aug. 5.—There was a heavy electrical storm here last night about 11 p.m., which passed to the north. The lightning struck the barn of Alex. Campbell, about three miles from here, the outbuildings, including barns, were burned and 50 tons of hay. The stock was saved, and nearly all the farm implements and carriages.

Saving the Cargo.

Halifax, N.S., Aug. 5.—Heavy seas surround the steamer Blaamanden, nevertheless considerable cargo is being saved. Steamer Aid arrived early yesterday morning at the scene, and installed pumps and appliances for floating the ship.

The Rustington Pulled Off.

Father Point, Aug. 5.—The SS. Rustington, previously reported ashore at Barnaby Island, was pulled on at 2.30 o'clock yesterday, and proceeded to Quebec.

RAILROAD MEN RESTLESS

Urge Leaders to Seize Opportunity to Settle Grievances.

If the Miners Re-open Without a Settlement With the Miners, It Is Likely That the Trainmen Will Refuse to Move Non-Union Mined Coal—To Aid Coal Revolt Financially, and $1,000,000 a Month Is Expected.

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Aug. 5.—Belief is growing that any serious attempt on the part of the operators to resume the mining of coal at this time will precipitate a strike of the various organizations of railroad employes, which will render the situation tenfold worse than it has been since the miners quit work. It is more than probable that the shipment of coal mined by non-union men on a large scale will precipitate a contest on all the coal roads that may easily spread to other systems.

There is already a notable restlessness among the railroad men. They have grievances of their own and they have been urging upon their leaders that this would be an opportune time to bring them to an issue.

In answer to this demand, P. H. Morrissey, grand chief of the Brotherhood of Trainmen, made public a letter last week, in which he said that to strike at this time, would make it seem that the strike had been called in sympathy with the miners, and that he was opposed to any sympathetic strike.

It has already been agreed by the railroad men to contribute money for the support of the miners' strike whenever such a demand is made. This request has now been made, and it is expected that funds will soon be coming in from this source. The levies from the soft coal men and from other labor organizations will not begin to come in before the middle of the present month. It is estimated that, after the flow of contributions has once begun, it will yield not far from $1,000,000 a month. This should be sufficient, with careful management, to meet the needs of the 100,000 men and their families.

At the present time the strike is being supported largely on huckleberries. Miners, with their wives and children, go out regularly and return at night, with pails and baskets filled to the brim. They receive five cents a quart from the local buyers for what they care to sell.

ST. CATHARINES BEAT 48TH.

Cobourg, Aug. 5.—Yesterday was Cobourg's civic holiday and the anniversary of the Cobourg old boys' re-union. At 10.30 yesterday morning an immense excursion arrived from Toronto and was met at the depot by the Sons of England Band and a reception committee. At 2 o'clock a procession was again formed and marched through the gaily decorated streets to the Agricultural Park, where a monster band and baseball tournament was held. The band contest resulted as follows: The 19th of St. Catharines first, with the 18th Highlanders of Toronto second. M. James Robinson of the 13th Band acted as judge. In the baseball tournament Cobourg defeated a crack team from Bowmanville, the score being 22 to 13. Last evening a grand display of fireworks was given and a band concert in the Opera House.

Visited the Old Haunts.

Picton, Aug. 5.—A very large crowd from all parts of the country assembled here yesterday to meet with the "Old Boys and Girls" of Prince Edward County. At the agricultural grounds addresses were made by several of the "Old Boy" visitors. Principal Dobson of the High School was chairman and was presented with an elegant cake basket and jardinere and an address from "The Old Boys and Girls."

Dufferin Old Boys at Home.

Orangeville, Aug. 5.—The town of Orangeville was in gay attire yesterday in honor of the annual visit of the County of Dufferin Old Boys' Association. Yesterday's excursion, which was the third in the history of the association, was a huge success in every particular, and the day was thoroughly enjoyed, both by visitors and townspeople.

JAMES J. HILL IN ROSSLAND.

He Says Some Nice Things That Raise Large Hopes.

Rossland, B.C., Aug. 5.—James J. Hill, president of the Great Northern Railroad, spent a few hours in Rossland with his party, but the visit was long enough to enable the famous railroad man to say some pleasant things about the Golden City smelting industry.

Mr. Hill remarked: "We have been waiting a long time to see if the camp was to be permanent. Now we are satisfied from the showing by the Le Roi and other mines that permanency is assured, and the Great Northern is prepared to take the matter up in detail with a view to doing everything in its power to enable the mines to utilize the enormous deposits of comparatively low-grade ore which we know they possess."

It is thought that this declaration portends immediate improvements to the road between Rossland and Northport, including substantial reductions in the cost of handling ore between the mines and smelters.

Joan of Arc Not a Saint.

Paris, Aug. 5.—Joan of Arc will not be canonized by the Roman Catholic Church. The news that the Sacred College of Cardinals has definitely refused to beautify the heroine of Rouen, was received here yesterday, and has caused widespread dissatisfaction.

SEA SERPENT AT LINDSAY

ANOTHER COMPETITOR FOR THE BELT.

Every fashionable tourist resort boasts of a sea serpent or two, and hitherto some disappointment has been felt because the Kawartha waters have not been known to be the cruising ground of these mysterious monsters of the deep. The reproach has been removed — a serpent has been seen at Sturgeon Point, according to a correspondent of the Lindsay Post, from which it may be inferred that society at that charming resort has reached the ne plus ultra point. Either that or it is time a Government inspector tested the drinking water in use by the Pointers.

GREAT ALTERATION SALE

For the last year we have been inconvenienced considerably for want of space to show our goods, that our business has grown no one will doubt, and in order to keep pace with its rapid growth we must have more room.

To-day the carpenters will remove our rear store and begin work in earnest. The plumbers are with us busy at their part of the job. We have had to remove all our goods in the rear of the cellar and the front part of our store is also to receive special up-to-date touches. What we ask is that the people of Belleville and vicinity will aid us in getting rid of our crowded stock, and for this end we will hold two weeks sale, goods will be sold so cheap that it will startle the whole community.

Come early. Goods sold out will not be replaced during alterations.

McINTOSH BROS.

FORMER BELLEVILLE BOY MARRIED

PRETTY HOME WEDDING OF MISS ROSE GUNN AND MR. BERT FERRIS.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. William Gunn, 1003 Hancock street, was the scene yesterday afternoon of a very pretty home wedding, when their daughter, Miss Rose Gunn, was given in marriage to Bert Ferris, of Toronto. The ceremony was performed by Rev. N. S. Bradley, of the First Congregational church, and was witnessed by about 50 friends of the contracting parties. Miss Nellie Kyes, of Mayville, rendered Mendelssohn's wedding march as the bridal party entered the parlor. The bride was attended by Miss Minnie Wilcox, of East Tawas, and William Gunn, brother of the bride, acted as best man. The bride was gowned in white organdie and carried pink and white carnations. Miss Wilcox was gowned in blue Japanese silk, and carried pink carnations. The home was artistically decorated with asparagus fern, carnations, sweet peas and nasturtiums. The occasion was in every way as enjoyable as such occasions usually are. Mr. and Mrs. Ferris left on the afternoon train for Detroit and Toronto. The bride is a charming young lady, who came to this city recently from Mayville, which was also the former home of the groom, the wedding being the sequel of a long time friendship. Mr. Ferris at present holds a responsible position with the Kemp Manufacturing Co., of Toronto.

MARRIED AT ST. MICHAEL'S

MR. JAMES P. MURRAY, OF BRADFORD, PA., CAPTURES A BELLEVILLE YOUNG LADY.

A goodly number of the fair sex assembled at St. Michael's church this morning at 10.30 to witness a marriage ceremony. The bride was Miss Margaret M. O'Hare, daughter of Mr. James O'Hare, who resides on Moira street, and the groom Mr. James P. Murray, of Bradford, Pa. Rev. Father O'Brien united the couple and also celebrated the nuptial mass. The bride was attended by her sister Miss Emma O'Hare. The services of a groomsman were dispensed with. After the ceremony the wedding party repaired to the residence of the bride's father, where the wedding repast was partaken of. Mr. and Mrs. Murray left this afternoon for the west and will visit various places before taking up their residence at Bradford.

Inquest Touching Death of George Whalley Still Fruitless.

No Evidence of Poison Found, and Organs of Dead Man Were in Normal Condition—Inquest Adjourned Till September 12 to Await Developments.

Toronto, Aug. 6.—The session of the coroner's jury, which is enquiring into the death of George Whalley, last night was devoid of anything tending to cast light upon the mystery surrounding the death of the Evans' warehouse employe or other features touching the unusual circumstances that centred in the Front street building. The physicians testified that they found no evidence that death had been occasioned by poison, and further, that the organs of the dead man were in normal condition. They had examined every vital organ carefully, and were unable to offer a suggestion as to the cause of death.

The coroner announced that no verdict would be asked for at present, but that an adjournment would be taken until Sept. 12 to await developments.

Toronto, August 5.—Mr. Alban E. Ragg, former manager for Evans & Son, whose Front street warehouse was the scene of the mysterious occurrences of the past few months which are now being investigated, has thrown a little additional light on the affair, having related to a reporter of The News a few points which previously escaped his memory.

One statement of Mr. Ragg throws light upon the discovery by Watchman Johnston of the person in the rear of the building. It has been said that the watchman upon encountering this person did not go round to the front immediately, but took a little time to do so. Mr. Ragg, however, states that the watchman was very excited when he saw Mr. Ragg, and said: "I wish I had knocked that man down as he stood there. It would have been one of the chances of my life. I stood talking to him at the door. He said: 'Mr. Ragg is round at the front, and is very mad because the Dominion Express Company was not called for a package of goods.' I was a bit suspicious. At the same time it was quite an ordinary thing for the express waggon to come round at that time. I went round to the front, and when I got round the place was in darkness. I went back again, and by the time I got round he had gone."

"Johnston," said Mr. Ragg, "also came round, and asked me to use my influence with the new manager to have his pay increased from $1 to $2 a month."

A point upon which Mr. Ragg is not clear, and upon which the inquest ought to throw light is, what became of Toner, the C.P.R. constable, while Johnston went round to the front? Did he remain behind to watch the suspected person in the rear, or did he go to the front with Johnston?

Mr. Ragg also says that in answer to some casual observation regarding Whalley an employe of the firm said: "Has Whalley been playing the races again?"

A BRILLIANT SCENE

RECEPTION TO REV. MR. BEAMISH AND WIFE LAST NIGHT.

A reception to the Rev. G. R. Beamish and wife was held last evening at the residence of Mrs. F. R. Lingham, John street. A large number of the members and adherents of St. Thomas' Church were present to welcome the new Rector. At night the beautifully situated grounds were tastefully and brilliantly lit with electric lights, making an enchanting scene. The Chalaupka orchestra was present and rendered a programme, which was thoroughly enjoyed. Refreshments were served in abundance.

CELEBRATION MONDAY NIGHT.

The Coronation Committee have decided to give a grand Fireworks display and Band Concert, on Monday night, at Corby's Driving Park. Admission 15c, or 2 for 25 cents. d&w

NEWSPAPER POSTAGE.

The postage on newspapers is now excessive, is oppressive, it is utterly contrary to the spirit of the age and antagonistic to the principles which lie at the root of popular government and educational progress. For the Government of a democratic country like Canada, where newspapers are necessaries of life, to restrain the circulation of journals by oppressive postage, is a startling anomoly which can only be explained by their being some influence at work, which is a recrudescence of prejudices against the press that were entertained a century ago, and such as are kept up in half-civilized countries like Russia.

Postal burdens on newspapers are like a tax on free speech. A burden put on weekly journals is "a tax on knowledge," it is obstructive of educational progress, for the weekly paper, with a few exceptions, is a powerful and most effective educational agency.—Chronicle.

The Auditors' Report

FOR THE YEAR ENDING 1901, JUST PUBLISHED, CONTAINS SOME INTERESTING MATTERS.

The Financial Statement of the Corporation of the City of Belleville, just issued from The Intelligencer press, contains many matters of interest, among others the report of the Auditors, Messrs. Jeffers and Bird. Inasmuch as the report has never yet been published, some extracts may prove of interest to our readers. After setting forth that they had made a careful and extended audit of the books and accounts of the city, and acknowledging, with thanks, the courteous assistance of all the city officials, the auditors submit, in due form, a statement of the receipts and expenditures for the year.

Then the Auditors "beg to submit for your consideration the matters referred to in the following memoranda, made in the course of the audit":

Pay Sheets.—The undermentioned Pay Sheets were not certified to by the Chairman of Public Works, which necessitated a reference to the Street Surveyor's Time-books in order to verify them. No. 1, dated Jan. 10, 1901. No. 8, dated April 18, 1901. No. 10, dated May 16, 1901. No. 13, dated June 27, 1901. No. 14, July 11, 1901. No. 17, dated August 22, 1901. No. 18, dated September 5, 1901.

Some of the Pay Sheets certified by the Chairman were incorrect and were adjusted by the Treasurer. The verification of these Sheets should be certified to, in every instance, before payment. We noted also that many of the payments were not properly vouched for, being receipted by the Treasurer in cases where men could not sign their names. We would suggest, in justice to the Treasurer, that some member of the Committee be present to initial such payments as duly made.

Real Estate.—We have not been able to verify the amount of this item, and beg to recommend that all property due to come under this heading should be re-valued. We understand that the amount would thereby be substantially increased.

MISCELLANEOUS PROPERTY AND ROLLING MILLS ACCOUNT.

We submit herewith schedules of these items:.

Liabilities.—Among the Liabilities of the City should appear the item of $3,715, which is shown as an Asset of the Water Commissioners.

City's Borrowing Powers.—We beg to draw your attention to the Provisions of the Revised Statutes of Ontario, Sections 16, M. A., 1897, Chapter 23, 61 Vic. We are of opinion that the City exceeded the amount of its authorized limit during the year, included in the present audit. We find, also, that this has occurred during several previous years.

Sinking Fund Account.—This should be adjusted without delay. A reference to the Statement of this account herewith, shows $21,918.59 due this fund. In this statement no allowance has been made for any interest that would have accrued had the several sums comprising this gross amount been deposited at their several due dates.

Water Rates.—The list of unpaid accounts seems to be unnecessarily long. We notified the parties who are in arrears, and in answer received a number of complaints, all of which we have handed to the Treasurer of the Board of Commissioners. These matters should receive attention.

Cash Balance.—In order that the Annual Audit may be more complete, we suggest that the Chairman of Finance should count and verify "Cash on hand" at the close of business on December 31, each year. The City Auditors, not being appointed until several weeks after that date, have not the means of properly checking the amount of such item.

Treasurer's Bonds.—We are of opinion that the present bonds given by the City Treasurer do not cover his duties as Treasurer of the Board of Water Commissioners.

Police Court Accounts.—The records are kept by a very antiquated method, and are not sufficient for ready reference. We are informed that proper books are now being printed. When received, they cannot be put in use any too soon.

Board of Education Accounts.—The Treasurer should be provided with a new Ledger and Cash Book. The present Ledger has been in use over thirty years, and current entries, distributed over unused pages, are not readily located. The Cash Book at present in use does not allow of an itemized audit as to the several Schools. We append a sample sheet ruled for the purposes of such a Cash Book, which, we think, would be serviceable.

Respectfully submitted,
E. H. BIRD,
J. FRITH JEFFERS,
City Auditors.

SCOTCH MACHINISTS TRIED TO QUIT WORK

BUT KINGSTON LOCOMOTIVE WORKS HELD THEM TO THEIR CONTRACT.

Kingston, August 5.—Some of the Scotch mechanics at the locomotive works tried to get out of the country recently, but they were stopped by locomotive works officials.

The striking mechanics are said to have met the Scotchmen and induced three to accept $11 each to cross to Watertown, N.Y. They were taken aboard the steamer America and hid, but as other Scotchmen told the story it reached the manager's ears. He, with a lawyer and policeman, left by steamer for Clayton, N.Y., called out the hiders, and offered them a choice of arrest for jumping a contract or returning to work. They said they would return to work, and at Brophy's Point, a summer resort, the yacht Aberdeen, which had preceded the steamer, took up the Scotchmen for Channel Grove. They gave up the money they had received and took affidavit disclosing the terms, etc., on which they were to leave the employment of the Locomotive Company.

PEOPLE WITH BAD BREATH

Generally suffer from Catarrh and should use Catarrhozone Inhaler four times daily, and be cured. The pleasantly scented Catarrhozone vapor spreads through every air passage of the breathing organs, and reaches the very root of the disease at once; it kills the germs, purifies and cleanses the mucous surfaces, and eradicates every vestige of catarrh in a short time.

Pure, sweet breath, free from headache, sneezing and discharge are quickly derived from the use of Catarrhozone Inhaler. Complete outfit, guaranteed to cure, costs $1.00; trial size 25c. Druggists or N. C. Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

PRETTY HOME WEDDING

NUPTIALS OF MISS MATTIE M. KENYON AND MR. CHARLES W. KING.

A quiet but pretty home wedding occurred last evening at the residence of Mr. Harry Hampton, Isabel street, when Miss Mattie M. Kenyon, sister of Mrs. Hampton, became the wife of Mr. Charles W. King, of Gananoque. Only the immediate relatives of the contracting parties and a few invited friends were present to witness the ceremony, which was performed by the Rev. W. P. D. Wilson, of Canifton, with the Rev. J. H. Locke of the Tabernacle church as assistant. The bride was becomingly gowned in a dress of white organdie, appropriately trimmed, and was assisted by Miss Clara Sharp, who was similarly attired. The groomsman was Mr. Ernest T. Foster, of Lansdowne. Miss Marguerite Walmsley was flower girl and Miss Rita Hampton maid of honor. The drawing room, where the wedding took place, was very prettily decorated with plants and flowers.

After the nuptial knot had been tied the company partook of a richly prepared spread. The bride received a large array of presents which were not only pretty but many of an expensive nature.

Mr. and Mrs. King left this morning for a wedding trip in the eastern portion of the Province and upon their return intend to take up their residence at Lansdowne. Their many friends will unite with The Intelligencer in wishing them a happy and prosperous wedded life.

NEW CONNECTION BETWEEN NAPANEE AND DESERONTO.

(Napanee Express.)

The line has been surveyed between Napanee and Deseronto for the building of a piece of the Bay of Quinte railway, direct from Napanee station to Deseronto. This gives a direct and level road-bed between the business part of Deseronto and Napanee railway station, avoiding a grading which now exists of forty-one feet within about two miles, between Deseronto and Deseronto Junction. They purpose to do away with Deseronto Junction as a station and also the line between Deseronto and Deseronto Junction, and the rails and siding will be used in completing necessary yard room at Napanee and in the building of the new road. Napanee will become the only junction between the railway systems and Deseronto. It is proposed to continue a service between Napanee and Deseronto, similar to that which is now maintained between Deseronto and Deseronto Junction, a suburban train meeting and connecting with all passenger trains at Napanee, taking all passengers through to Deseronto. This will give twelve or thirteen trains a day between Napanee and Deseronto.

CAPE TOWN MEMORIAL FUND

His Excellency the Governor-General's Desires Published.

Militia Order Issued Calling For Subscriptions From the Soldier Boys of Canada—The Memorial Will Cost £30,000—Names of All Who Fell During the War Will Be Inscribed on the Walls.

Ottawa, Aug. 6.—A military order issued gives the following notice in reference to the Cape Town Cathedral memorial fund.

Patrons: His Majesty the King, Her Majesty Queen Alexandra, His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales.

The proposal is to erect at Cape Town a building which shall serve as a memorial to those who have fallen in the South African war and as a thank-offering for those whose lives have been spared.

It has been decided that the memorial shall take the form of the eastern portion of the new cathedral. This portion of the cathedral will cost at least £30,000. The names of all those who have fallen in the war will be preserved on the walls of the building so far as possible. Towards the adjacent portion of the building a sum of £20,000 has been subscribed, mainly from colonial sources.

His Excellency the Governor-General desires that the action of the memorial be brought to the notice of the militia of Canada, in order that those members of it wishing to do so might have an opportunity of subscribing towards the fund to be raised for the purpose of the memorial.

Donations may be paid, if desired, by annual instalments, extending over a period of years. Contributions should be remitted direct to the Secretary Cape Town Cathedral Memorial Fund, Church House, Westminster, S.W.

DR. CHRISTIE, M.P., DEAD.

Close of a Long and Active Career—Member For Argenteuil.

Ottawa, Aug. 6.—Dr. Christie, M. P. for Argentruil, died yesterday morning at his home in Lachute, Quebec. He was 78 years of age. He was first elected to the Commons in 1874.

Sketch of His Life.

Thomas Christie, M.D., was one of the Liberal old guard, and has been in the House of Commons with few intermissions since 1875. He was born in Glasgow, Scotland, in 1824. In 1827 he came to Canada with his parents and in 1848 graduated M. D. from McGill College, Montreal. Dr. Christie filled many local positions in the County of Argenteuil. When the ship fever scourge broke out in 1847 he was appointed assistant surgeon at Point St. Charles, in which capacity he did active and faithful work. Dr. Christie entered Parliament in December, 1875. He was re-elected in 1878, but was unseated. He was again returned in 1891, 1896 and 1900. He was an ardent Liberal, an earnest prohibitionist, and took an active interest in Sabbath observance.

MR. TARTE AT OWEN SOUND.

Assures Deputation That Harbor Improvements Will Be Made.

Owen Sound, Aug. 6.—Hon. Mr. Tarte arrived here at noon yesterday on the Lord Stanley, and received a deputation from the council and board of trade during the afternoon. After examining the harbor extension work he expressed himself as pleased and satisfied with the progress made. He assured the deputation that the improvements would be pushed until the harbor was made one of the best on the lakes, with at least twenty feet of water throughout from the entrance to the swing bridge. The question of a public building was left in abeyance as an appropriation for that purpose will be recommended at the next session of the House. The Minister left about 5 o'clock.

Tobacco Trade Inquiry.

Ottawa, Aug. 6.—Judge McTavish held the first sitting yesterday of his commission of enquiry into the charges referred against the Empire and American Tobacco Company for issuing contracts unfair to other manufacturers and to the tobacco trade. C. S. Campbell of Montreal, appeared for the Empire Tobacco Company, and J. M. Fortier and Goldstein of Montreal for the interests of those who preferred the complaints. An adjournment was made till Sept. 4. Sittings will be held at Toronto, Hamilton, London, Windsor, Kingston, Montreal, Quebec and St. John.

Lightning in St. Mary's.

St. Mary's, Aug. 6.—During an electric storm yesterday afternoon lightning struck the implement factory of David Maxwell & Sons and started a fire in the paint vats, but it was put out.

The dwelling house of Joseph Longhorne in the west ward was also struck and considerably damaged.

THE BRITISH HOUSE.

Discussion on the Naval Estimates—Mr. Arnold-Foster's Statement.

London, Aug. 6.—In the course of the consideration of the naval estimates in the House of Commons yesterday, Edmund Robertson (Liberal), alluding to the statement that J. Pierpont Morgan had offered the Government the right to utilize the vessels of the ship combine as British cruisers, said he hoped that neither the Admiralty nor the Government would make a conclusive bargain in so serious a matter without affording the House an opportunity to considering it.

Hugh O. Arnold-Forster, Secretary to the Admiralty, in reply said he was not in a position to make a statement on the subject, except to say that the Admiralty certainly was not relying on any pledge made by any foreigners. The subsidies to which the Admiralty was not committed, however, would be paid.

Continuing the Secretary to the Admiralty said he was not in a position to state what might be the ultimate decision of the Government on the larger question of subsidization, or in regard to contributions toward the establishment of new lines between the United Kingdom and the colonies.

Beresford to Visit America.

London, Aug. 6.—Rear Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, M.P., will visit the United States in the coming autumn to study the American navy and to inquire into the working of the Morgan shipping combination.

British-Canadian Combine.

Montreal, Aug. 6.—The Herald last night published a circumstantial but confirmed story that the Dominion Steel Company and the Nova Scotia Steel Company and a well known English corporation, which has works established in all the principal mining areas in England, would probably combine in the near future. This gigantic British and Canadian steel corporation will compete with the American Steel Trust not alone for the control of the steel markets of the world but for the production of manufactured steel products cheaper than they have ever been produced before.

The Colonial Premiers.

London, Aug. 6.—The conference of colonial Premiers with Colonial Secretary Chamberlain discussed army and navy supply contracts, the reduction of Imperial postage rates and the exclusion of Canadian live cattle from Great Britain yesterday. No definite conclusion was reached on the last mentioned question, which it is understood the Canadian Ministers will take up with Robert W. Hanbury, the president of the Board of Agriculture.

NEGOTIATIONS PROCEEDING.

Proposition For Establishment of Fast Service Regarded Favorably.

London, Aug. 6.—Replying to an inquiry in the House of Lords yesterday, the Earl of Onslow, Under Secretary of the Colonial Office, said the Government had no official information on the subject, but had reason to believe that negotiations were proceeding between the Canadian Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway. The British Government did not know whether these negotiations were likely to lead to a satisfactory conclusion, but it regarded favorably any project for the establishment of a fast steamship service between the United Kingdom and any of His Majesty's dominions.

Concerning the rivalry of ports in the United Kingdom ambitious to be made terminal ports for such service, the Earl of Onslow said the Government would be glad to form a ring to see the matter fought out fairly.

NUNS' SCHOOL BATTERED IN.

Crowds Witness Forcible Action of French Authorities.

Chambery, Aug. 6.—Crowds made demonstrations in two neighboring townships yesterday against commissaries of police who were closing up schools conducted by nuns.

The tocsin was rung and the sisters, who refused to open their doors to the commissaries, were cheered by the people.

The police were eventually obliged to make breeches in the walls of the buildings, whereupon the Sisters, amid the cheers of their sympathizers, left by the front doors.

Demanded An Inquest.

St. Thomas, Aug. 6.—Coroner Gustin yesterday afternoon commenced an investigation into the death of William Small of Willington street, who died early yesterday morning. The deceased was twice married, and members of the first family waited upon Crown Attorney Donohue and asked that the inquest be held. This he declined to do, unless the statuary declaration was made, which was done, and the inquest, therefore, had to be held.

Family of Octogenarians.

Sparta, Aug. 6.—J. Pound left here yesterday to attend a notable gathering on the farm of his brother, Samuel Pound, four miles from Ridgeway, on Thursday. That is the eightieth birthday of Mr. Pound, and his four sisters and one brother, all of whom are older than he is, will assemble at his house to help him celebrate the occasion.

Soo Canal Traffic.

Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., Aug. 6.—The tonnage of the Sault canals for July exceeded five million tons, or nearly equal to the entire tonnage of the season fifteen years ago. The increase over July, 1901, is 301,326 tons.

Adopts a Whole Asylum.

South Haven, Mich., Aug. 6.—Mr. and Mrs. John Shrandrow of South Haven have adopted a whole orphan asylum, 22 children in all.

Ambassador White Resigns.

Berlin, Aug. 6.—Andrew D. White, American Ambassador here, has resigned. He was appointed in 1897.

THE CITY OF VENICE SUNK

Result of Collision With the Sequin on Lake Erie.

Three Lives Lost and Several Persons Injured—The Sequin Now at Cleveland—Cause of the Disaster a Mystery—Frightful Panic on Board the Venice For a Time—Went Down in Deep Water in Less Than Fifteen Minutes.

Cleveland, O., Aug. 6.—As a result of a collision on Lake Erie between the City of Venice and the steamer Seguin, a steel lumber vessel, off Rondeau, Ont., Monday night just after midnight, the former vessel was sunk, and three lives were lost, while several other persons were more or less seriously injured.

Injured—John Sullivan, Chicago, contusion of back, will probably die; J. A. McDougal, Cheboygan, Mich., engineer, City of Venice, arm injured and body badly bruised; Louis Hubecker, Cheboygan, Mich., head and back badly bruised.

Cause of Collision a Mystery.

The cause of the collision is not known. There was no fog whatever, and the night was fairly clear. The lights of the City of Venice were burning brightly. The second mate of the Seguin, W. A. Lavigne, who was on watch, refuses absolutely to give any information about the accident. "The less said about it the better," was his only remark.

The City of Venice, laden with 3,600 tons of ore, was bound to Buffalo, while the Seguin was going north to Parry Sound from Ogdensburg. On board the Seguin all were asleep save Lavigne and a watchman with him in the pilot house. The first mate of the Venice, Sullivan, was on watch aboard that boat. He is now in the hospital. The Seguin struck the Venice fairly amidships and plowed her way half through the boat.

All on Board Panic-striken.

All those who were sleeping rushed out on deck, and there was a frightful panic for a time. The Venice was sinking rapidly. Captain Broderick ran on deck in his sleeping robes and called to the men to man the lifeboats. The members of the crew who had not been hurt rushed to his assistance, and in five minutes they had the boats in the water. Several of the men threw themselves overboard, but they were picked up by the lifeboats from the Seguin. The City of Venice went down in very deep water in less than fifteen minutes after the collision occurred. After standing by for an hour the Seguin headed for Cleveland with the survivors, arriving here early yesterday.

The City of Venice was a wooden vessel, 301 feet long and 42 feet beam. She was owned by the McGraw Transportation Company of Bay City, Mich., and valued at about $175,000. She was commanded by Captain Broderick. The Seguin is an iron vessel, 207 feet long and 34 feet beam. She is owned by J. B. Miller of Parry Sound and commanded by Captain J. B. Sims.

MRS. ADAMS MAY DIE.

Shock of Only Daughter's Death Overcomes Her—One Body Found.

Tonawanda, N.Y., Aug. 6. — The body of Dr. Grey was recovered at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, near the spot where he jumped in. About 50 boats are spread about the river in the vicinity, searching for the body of Miss Adams, whose mother is so grief-stricken she is not expected to survive.

Toronto, Aug. 6.—Miss Ruby Adams, who was drowned, was the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Adams, formerly of the Queen's Hotel, Port Hope. The family have been living in Toronto only a few months.

Has Typhoid Fever.

New York, Aug. 6. — R. B. Van Horne, son of Sir William Van Horne, sent to Swinburne Island, Monday from the steamer Curtiyba, from Cuba, is still very ill. Dr. Doty says the young man has developed typhoid fever. Arrangements are being made to transfer him to some hospital in Manhattan, where he can receive more exclusive care. This is done at his family's request.

Rome Hears Grave Rumor.

Rome, Aug. 6.—The Vatican regards the present situation in France arising from the closing of unauthorized congregationist schools as most grave, as it is now believed to be the intention of M. Combes, the French Premier, to denounce the Concordat, which is the agreement by which the relations between Church and State in France are regulated.

The Earth Still Quaking.

Lisbon, Portugal, Aug. 6.—Earthquake shocks were felt yesterday throughout central Portugal and along the coast. So far no damage has been reported.

Rome, Aug. 6.—There were earthquakes yesterday at Genoa and Pisa. The shocks lasted a few seconds and were accompanied by subterranean ramblings. No damage was done.

He Will Be Killed Yet.

London, Aug. 6.—Diavolo, the American bicyclist, sustained a terrible fall just after turning the loop in his act at the Aquarium last night. He was taken to the Westminster hospital unconscious and is believed to have concussion of the brain.

TRIED TO JUMP CONTRACT.

But Scotch Machinists Were Overhauled and Taken Back.

Kingston, Aug. 6.—An attempt to get some of the Scottish machinists out of the country has been frustrated by the alertness of the locomotive works management. The strikers are accused of the work. They are said to have met the Scotchmen and induced them to accept $11 each to go to Clayton, N.Y., to get work in Watertown, N.Y. They were taken aboard a vessel and secured. Meantime some Scotchmen told the story and it reached the management. Several of the heads, with an officer and lawyer, started in a steam yacht. Outside the harbor the Scotchmen were called out and given their chance of arrest for attempting to jump a contract or return to work. They choose the latter, and at Brophy's Point were taken off the vessel and put on board the yacht for Channel Grove. They gave the money received to Mr. Birmingham, and made affidavit of the circumstances leading up to their attempt to leave the country.

Attacked by Strikers.

South Manchester, Conn, Aug. 6.—The first acts of violence in the strike of the velvet weavers employed in the Cheney Bros. mill, occurred yesterday. Henry Leister, a non-union man, accompanied by a guard consisting of four members of the firm, was attacked by 15 strikers as he was on his way to work. He was knocked down by a large stone, and it is reported that he is severely injured. No one else was injured.

STORM HIT FONTHILL HARD.

St. Catharines, Aug. 6. — Word reached here yesterday from Fonthill through the postmaster, Mr. Fred Kinsman, that the most disastrous storm in years struck that village on Sunday afternoon, causing a loss of between $25,000 and $30,000. It struck the village at the same time as the cyclone struck this city, but the greater damage there was done by hail. Mr. Kinsman saw the storm coming when it was about two miles away and warned several of the danger approaching.

The different fruit and grain farms are badly damaged. Mr. A. Railton and Mr. Wm. Platts, fruit-growers, will lose to the amount of $2,000 each. The large vineyards were stripped of their fruit, and fully 50 per cent. of the peaches and plums were cut off. Morris Stone's and Wellington's nurseries were badly damaged, their loss amounting to several thousands of dollars. Fisher & Son, nurserymen, were heavy losers. Mr. Frank Muirhead's place was damaged and one cow killed.

VOLUNTEER FIREMEN ASSOCIATION.

Annual Convention Being Held a Stratford—Reports Presented.

Stratford, Ont., Aug. 6.—The annual session of the Ontario Volunteer Firemen's Association opened there yesterday afternoon. President E. F. Earl, of Milton, occupied the chair. About forty delegates were present and more are expected today.

A deputation from the city council, Mayor Stamp and Aldermen Davidson and Savage extended a welcome to the association.

The report of the secretary, W. J. Armstrong, of Milton, indicated the association to be in good shape financially and showed an increase of membership.

The report of the Committee on Laws showed the efforts, which had been put forth toward getting a bill through the Legislature to tax insurance companies with a view to establish a fund for the aid of volunteer firemen.

Women and South Africa.

London, Aug. 6.—The Government has taken up the scheme, started by private enterprise, for promoting the immigration of women to South Africa. Arrangements have been made for the despatch of the first party comprising fifty domestic servants and six dressmakers. The Government provides five pounds of the cost of each woman's passage, and free railway transportation in the Transvaal and Orange River Colonies. The current wage of domestic servants in South Africa is $25 a month.

Niagara Power Dispute.

Toronto, Aug. 6. — The Niagara Falls Park Commissioners met at the Falls on Saturday and considered the questions in dispute between the Canadian and Ontario Power Companies. The commissioners will recommend that their agreement with the Ontario company be ratified, subject to a provision that the company shall submit to the Commissioner of Public Works detailed plans of their proposed construction. Then the Commissioner of Public Works shall act as referee between the two companies.

DAIRY ANIMALS FOR SHOW.

Well Known Breeder Tells Something of Fitting Them for the Ring.

The modern tendency is to make the animal conform to an arbitrary standard of excellence, or scale of points, and its ability to win prizes varies directly as do the conceptions of the various judges who pass upon the conformity to that scale. One of the primary requisites of all dairy animals regardless of age or sex, is capacity. A judge likes an animal with a large paunch as it is very essential in economically converting a large amount of coarse feed into milk. How can we develop this capacity?

It is done by feeding coarse bulky food, in a manner best suited to the individual tastes of the animals. Many have had good success by giving cut or chaffed hay and straw, with a mixture of ground oats and bran, a little salt, and a handful of oil meal, a small amount of the concentrates, and all the coarse food she will eat. The principal object is to make her eat much to get a small amount of grain.

The next thing that appeals to the eye of the judge is the temperament of the animal, which indicates whether or not she is using in the right way the food she has consumed. All dairy cattle should be free from tendency to lay on flesh, thin, and under condition rather than too fleshy. A show animal should possess quality also, but this to a large extent is determined by nature, although we can assist by keeping her in perfect health, the hair well groomed and protected from the sun, which makes it harsh and dry. Kerosene should never be applied to the hair. Where great stress is laid on secretions dispense with the use of water for cleaning animals, as it makes the skin appear pale.

There is a great diversity of opinion among judges as to the importance of udder development. However, when a heifer is developing an udder we should help her on all we can, as the time to assist nature is when she is doing her best work. Many advocate increasing the grain ration of a heifer at this stage, even though she becomes fleshy, as she will soon milk it off again. All cattle should be handled and well broken to lead. It is also good practice to teach an animal to stand in a position that will show her to the best advantage.

Polishing of horns and hoofs, grooming, watering from pails, etc., should be practiced before leaving for the fairs, as there are enough new conditions to become accustomed to even when greatest care has been taken. This may seem a trivial affair, but many prizes have been lost by leading into the ring a shrunken animal which has refused to drink from a pail, or a strange tank.

I would commence feeding about six or eight weeks previous to starting for the fairs. Do not hurry or the stock will have reached their bloom before the exhibition. Avoid feeding corn to show animals, as it is heating to the blood, makes grease instead of bone and muscle, and upon the first exertion, the animal will wilt. A dairy animal should not be fed heavily on a grain ration, at any time, as she will be very easily upset.

Ticket-of-Leave Romance.

Ambrose Winterton, a ticket-of-leave man, was charged before the Torquay magistrates on Monday with failing to report himself to the police. The prisoner told the Bench a romantic story. It was because he wanted to bury the past and lead an upright life that he had not reported himself. Confinement in prison had seriously affected his health, and on his discharge on license he was ordered to the south of France to recuperate his strength. He, however, found that the French climate did not agree with him and he decided to return to England. On the way home he met a young lady of means, and they soon became on very friendly terms. Friendship ripened into love, and eventually they were married. Being anxious that his wife should not learn anything of his past career, he decided to settle in Torquay, believing the vigilance of the police would not penetrate so far. Mrs. Winterton, however, noticed that her husband was sometimes depressed, and came to the conclusion that something was weighing on his mind. She questioned him on the subject and a month ago he confessed to her that he was a ticket-of-leave man.— The Bench now sent him to prison for a month.—Lloyd's Weekly.

KIDNEY TROUBLES OF PAINTERS

ALL THE KIDNEY ILLS AND AILMENTS FROM WHICH PAINTERS SUFFER SO MUCH, RAPIDLY RELIEVED AND COMPLETELY CURED BY DR. PITCHER'S BACKACHE KIDNEY TABLETS.

Every painter knows the trouble his kidneys give him now and again. The white lead and turpentine are hard on these organs—inflame and irritate them and produce pain in the back, difficulty and pain in urination, scanty and high-colored urine and many other complications.

There is no other remedy can do so much for the kidney troubles of painters, as for all kidney ailments, as Dr. Pitcher's Backache Kidney Tablets. They soothe and heal the kidneys, and correct all urinary irregularities.

Mr. S. Harris, a painter by trade, living at 138 George St., Toronto, has this to say:

"For some time I suffered from a pain in the back and a stoppage of my water. I have taken one box of Dr. Pitcher's Backache Kidney Tablets, and they helped me promptly, and I feel confident they have cured me. I think the Kidney Tablets are a grand thing for the kidney troubles to which painters are subject, and I am pleased to recommend them."

MESSAGE TO THE OLD

"THEY SHALL BRING FORTH FRUIT IN OLD AGE."

OLD AGE A HAUNTING SPECTRE

In This Discourse Rev. Dr. Talmage Refutes the Popular Fallacy That Old Age for the Christian Is Merely a Time for Tears, for Physical and Mental Pains and Depressing Helplessness.

Chicago, Aug. 3.—A message of reverence and appreciation for people who have passed life's meridian is contained in this discourse by Rev. Frank De Witt Talmage on the text Psalm xcii, 14, "They shall bring forth fruit in old age."

Old age is a haunting spectre. It has terrorized the generations past more than even the fear of death. The most hated and feared of all the Grecian philosophers was he who used to stand upon the street corners of Athens frightening the passersby with these solemn words: "You will be an old man. You will be an old woman." He frightened the passersby because most people do not want to become old. They are afraid of coming to the time when they will be a burden to their children and their friends. They are afraid of the time when their earning capacity shall cease, for then, in the race of life, they will be jostled and left far behind by the speed and the strength of the younger generation. They are afraid of the years when they will have to walk with a cane or crutch or sit in an invalid chair waiting for the time when the coffin maker will finish their casket and the undertaker will order their grave to be dug. To show how depressed some people are over the fact of growing old I would read a letter which I received some time ago from one of my people:

> Dear Mr. Talmage.—Last night in your sermon you stated that this is the age for young men. You did not have time to speak one word in favor of the usefulness of the old people. I was sorry. I knew some sitting near to me who would be heavy hearted on account of their old age. This morning an aged member of your church called upon me. He said he was so depressed over your remarks last night that he could not sleep. With tears in his eyes, he said, "I wonder if old people will be wanted in heaven." Now, my dear pastor, I would like you, if possible, to preach a sermon upon the blessings of old age. I would like you to preach a sermon to cheer up those who have passed the zenith of their earthly life and are sliding down the other side and nearing the landing place of eternity. You will, will you not?

It is in answer to the request in this letter that I am going to speak this morning to the old folks. I will gladly try to refute the popular fallacy that old age for the Christian is merely a time for tears, for physical and mental pains, and for depressing helplessness. It was a true thing that an aged minister said to Jacob A. Riis, the New York reformer, "My son, I am on the sunshiny side of sixty, because I am near to the glories of heaven." The words of my text do not state that an aged Christian's twilight of life upon earth is a gloomy and a sullen sunset. They do emphatically imply that the last days of an aged Christian's earthly life should be among his happiest and most useful days. Those days should be compared to the time when the orchard's branches are bending under the heavy load of the ripened autumnal fruit.

The aged Christian is able from his own experience to testify of the protecting care of a divine Father's love. The difference between the testimony of an old man and a very young man is the difference between knowledge and supposition, between fact and surmise. It is the difference between the words of a veteran who carries the scars, the sword cuts and the bullet wounds of many battlefields and the words of the ruddy faced youth who has not yet won his shoulder straps or seen anything but the recruiting officer's papers. It is the difference between the experience of an old pilot of the Hugli river, the most dangerous navigable river in the world, who has for many years guided the boats up to the wharfs of Calcutta and the experience of the cabin boy who has not yet learned how to handle the wheel. It is the difference between the diagnosis of the old, gray haired physician who has prescribed for hundreds of fever patients and the diagnosis of the young medical graduate who has just received his diploma.

My aged Christian friend, there may be other brains just as keen as yours. There may be other hearts just as willing to make sacrifice for their Lord and Master as yours, but no Christian can as powerfully testify of the protecting care of a Heavenly Father as you can testify unless he can truly speak out of his own experience. The saint who is nearing the end of life has the clearer view of heaven. You can speak about the goodness of God from personal experience, as my father spoke to me a few years before his death by telling me this remarkable incident: When he was a young minister, he used to keep a diary, in which he made a record of all the requests he made to God concerning matters which were then weighing upon his heart. By some mishap he lost that diary, and he forgot about those prayers he had offered. Some twenty or thirty years later he found that diary. When he opened it and read the many requests that he had made nearly a quarter of a century before, he found out that God had answered every one of his prayers. God had answered them with better results than even his faith at that time had dared to hope. So the aged Christian opens the book of memory. As he fingers the many soiled leaves of that book he testifies how God cared for him when he was a young man. He testifies how God cared for him when he was middle aged, and he testifies how the love of God is protecting and caring for him now that he is an old man. He testifies just as the aged psalmist testified of God's goodness when he wrote, "I have been young and now am old, yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken nor his seed begging bread." He can testify, as did Joshua when he assembled the people together at the close of his long life and said, "Behold, this day I am going the way of all the earth; of all the good things which the Lord spake all are come to pass, and not one thing hath failed thereof." He testified as an honest witness carries conviction in a court-room because he tells of that which he has seen and personally experienced. He testifies as one having authority.

Never let any man tell you that the aged Christian's influence is a useless influence. The Bible distinctly says, "They shall still bear fruit in their old age." No better fruit can it bring than the personal testimony of God's faithfulness, which your children will never forget. When skeptics assail them with doubts, they will be able to say, "My father put God's promises to the proof, and he declared that he had found them true."

The aged Christian influences for good those who are near to him because he is able to lavish upon them a wealth of boundless, fervent, tender Christian affection. While we are young and even middle aged we spend most of our time in doing for others rather than in showing the sweet manifestation of our affections. We are like Martha, who went into the kitchen to cook Jesus a dinner, rather than like Mary, who sat at the feet of Christ.

While we are young or middle aged we are like the busy merchant, who spends most of his time in the store and the office in order to earn money enough to support his children, rather than like the old grandfather and the grandmother, who spend most of their time in spoiling their grandchildren until at last the married daughter turns and says: "Father and mother, I believe you love my children better than you ever loved me when I was young. Anyway, you pet them far more than you ever petted me." Many a mechanic has but little time to fondle or caress his own children. He has to leave home for work before the children are out of bed. He does not return until late at night, when the babies have been again tucked away in their cribs. Many a time have I heard a grownup woman say: "When I was young, I used to long for mother to take me up into her arms and have her love me and kiss me. But mother never had any time. We were a large family of children. After mother had bathed us and dressed us and started us off to school and cooked meals and finished the sewing she did not have a moment to spare. She had to work far into the night. Because mother had to work so hard and had such little time for affection I used sometimes to think she did not care for me."

The statement that the aged Christian can exercise a mighty influence for good over the lives of those who are nearest and dearest to him, is especially true if those dear ones in turn have children of their own. I do not believe a man ever fully appreciates the love of a parent until he himself is married and has babies about his own family table. It is only after a man who has had the worries and the anxieties of his own home troubling his heart, it is only after he has stood by the side of the cradle and nursed his baby boy through the awful sickness of diphtheria, it is only after he has got his own family burial plot and has dug therein a little grave for one of his own babies, that he begins to fully appreciate what his father and mother in their time have done for him.

So, my aged Christian friend, if you have children who have children of their own your work on earth is not yet done. Now that your own children feel so grateful to you on account of your past and present love, you can mould them and influence them and purify them by that same love better than ever before. Perhaps by that love you can influence them even more for Christ and eternity now than when they were young men and young women standing upon the threshold of life.

The aged Christian is able to inspire the spirit of reverence in the hearts of many with whom he comes in contact. This spirit is a growth, not an act. It is a germ seed which often takes years and years to develop, and not an entity which springs into being at a jump or a bound. It generally starts away back in the nursery. If the child learn to respect his mother, then it is very easy for him to learn as a boy to respect his teachers, then it is very easy for him as a young man to learn to respect his Christian employers. If a young man respects his Christian employers, then it is very easy for him as a middle aged man to learn to respect the aged Christian servants who for years have been living at the divine Master's feet. If the middle aged man respect God's aged Christian servants, then it is very easy for him to learn to respect the God whom those Christians serve and to communicate that respect to others.

Thus God uses your physical weaknesses and your mental helplessness for a purpose. When he sees you, an aged Christian parent, being tenderly cared for in your old age by a loving son; when he sees that son giving to you the best room in the house and the easiest arm chair and the softest bed; when he sees that son trying to make your last days upon earth happy and peaceful, then we can imagine him saying: "That young man who is caring so tenderly for his aged Christian parent is capable of great love for me and my children. The young man who is true to his old mother, by my grace will always be true to me. I will honor him, because he has honored one of my aged servants." Did not God say in his Ten Commandments, "Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee?" When the young minister respects the old minister and tries to honor the venerable, white haired missionary of Jesus Christ, then the Lord knows that the young man wants to honor him because the young minister has tried to honor God's aged disciple. When the young physician respects the Christian physician, then the Lord knows that the young man would like to be as the old physician is. What we admire in others, that we would generally like to reproduce in ourselves.

The aged Christian is a living evidence that for most of us earthly life is to be very short. Therefore what we are to do for Christ we must do soon or we shall never be able to do it at all. Sixty or seventy or eighty years are a long time to live, but most of us will never live so long. Aye, most of us will never reach even middle life. If you speak to an aged Christian, you will find that he is like a November leaf, hanging almost solitary and alone after the thousands and the tens of thousands of autumnal leaves have been torn from their branches by the equinoctial winds. You will find that most of his contemporaries died when he was comparatively young, that nearly all the rest died when he was in middle life and that only a very few companions of his youth are alive to walk by his side. The statisticians declare that a third of the human race die in infancy. At least one-third of the remainder die before twenty-one years of age have been reached, and only 6 or 7 per cent. of the human family live to be sixty years of age or over. So the mere presence in this world of an aged Christian, with 93 or 94 per cent. of his contemporaries gone, is a perpetual warning that we must be about our Father's business or the death summons shall come, and we shall find that we have accomplished nothing.

Perhaps this may be a chimerical fancy, but I believe that some of our aged Christians now living may be lingering upon this side of the river of death in order to carry to heaven to our departed loved ones the latest news about the dear ones on earth. You know the Bible declares that the celestial messengers are continually ascending and descending between earth and heaven. Jacob's dream was not at all a fanciful dream. The sleeping son of Isaac saw the angels ascending and descending the ladder which connected earth with heaven. So I believe that the aged Christians are lingering this side of Jordan awhile in order to carry the gospel news about ourselves to our beloved ones. I remember well when a dear old elder of Brooklyn Tabernacle was dying my father turned to him and said: "Well, Mr. Nichols, goodby for a little while. We shall soon meet again. But, as you are going ahead of me to the celestial land, will you hunt up my boy De Witt and give him my love?" And the old dying elder said. "Yes, Dr. Talmage, I will, I will." When the widower Bishop Haven was dying, he turned to his mother and said: "Mother, after I have first seen the Lord I shall want to hunt up my dear wife. I shall give to her your love. Then I shall want to rest for the first thousand years in the green pastures by the side of the still waters, with my head in the lap of my Mary."

And if some of our aged Christian friends are waiting for a little while in order to carry the latest gospel news to the dear ones on the other side of the Jordan, what will they be able to tell our fathers and mothers, our brothers and sisters, our wives and little children, who have gone beyond and are awaiting our coming? Will they be able to tell our beloved ones that they must keep a place by their side for us in one of their heavenly mansions? Oh, my brother and sister, I see by the tears in your eyes that you are anxious, in reference to the message our aged Christian friends will have to bear. Shall we plead with God that our dear friends may be allowed to live just a little while longer so that we all may, here and now, give our hearts to Jesus? Then, ye aged Christian friends, carry the news as soon as you might to that bright, and happy land. Carry the news that, by the blood of Christ, we have all been cleansed from sin. Tell them that we have all been purged with hyssop until we are clean, that we have been washed until we are whiter than snow.

And so, my aged Christian friends, I believe that you are the favored ones. You are the Christians who will carry the message to our dear ones as well as to your own. When you go, I want you personally to take to my mother and father my love, just as my father sent his love to his boy. Tell them for me that by the grace of God we all want to meet them soon.

Thus, ye aged Christians, I want you to realize that the words of my text were written for you. "They shall still bring forth fruit in their old age" means that your work and usefulness will not be finished until you draw your last breath, until you take your glorious departure. I want you to realize that your work in life is just the same kind of work as was that aged farmer's who was planting some young trees one day, when a neighbor came along and said: "What are you planting those trees for? You will never live long enough to see them grow up." "No," answered the old man; "I never expect to see them grow up, but my grandfather planted yonder aged trees so that I could play under them and pluck their fruit, and I want to plant these trees so that my children and my children's children can eat of their fruit after I am dead." So, aged Christians, as your aged parents sweetened your life when you were young, you, by the blessing of God, are sweetening ours. May your work be to you a happy work until at last the angel of the resurrection comes to call you to your eternal reward. May we be as faithful to our trust as you, who are still faithfully bearing fruit in your old age.

In the United Kingdom.

THE PUBLIC should bear in mind that Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil has nothing in common with the impure, deteriorating class of so-called medicinal oils. It is eminently pure and really efficacious—relieving pain and lameness, stiffness of the joints and muscles, and sores or hurts, besides being an excellent specific for rheumatism, coughs and bronchial complaints.

Many beds have the appearance of comfort, but no amount of clothing can warm a cold heart.

A WONDERFUL CURE.—Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly to cure the sore but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, so I got a bottle and when I had used about one-half, the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done, it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very bilious habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. But since using 3 bottles of the Vegetable Discovery, the biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 60 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know."

The Flagging Energies Revived.—Constant application to business is a tax upon the energies, and if there be not relaxation, lassitude and depression are sure to intervene. These come from stomachic troubles. The want of exercise brings on nervous irregularities, and the stomach ceases to assimilate food properly. In this condition Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will be found a recuperative of rare powder, restoring the organs to healthful action, dispelling depression, and reviving the flagging energies.

The man who can keep his mouth shut has the best of the argument with all women.

Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial is a speedy cure for dysentery, diarrhoea, cholera, summer complaint, sea sickness and complaints incidental to children teething. It gives immediate relief to those suffering from the effects of indiscretion in eating unripe fruit, cucumbers, etc. It acts with wonderful rapidity and never fails to conquer the disease. No one need fear cholera if they have a bottle of this medicine convenient.

Sometimes the most charitable view of others is that they ought to be in the insane asylum.

Sleeplessness.—When the nerves are unstrung and the whole body given up to wretchedness, when the mind is filled with gloom and dismal forebodings, the result of derangement of the digestive organs, sleeplessness comes to add to the distress. If only the subject could sleep, there would be the oblivion for a while and temporary relief. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will not only induce sleep, but will act so beneficially that the subject will wake refreshed and restored to happiness.

The wonder is there are not more kicking horses, since there are so many men who kick without discrimination.

These two desirable qualifications, pleasant to the taste and at the same time effectual, are to be found in Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator. Children like it.

A peppery temper is not a thing to be sneezed at.

When all other preparations fail, try Holloway's Corn Cure. No pain whatever, and no inconvenience in using it.

People who sleep with sin will not be able to wash away the marks of it.

To get relief from indigestion, biliousness, constipation or torpid liver without disturbing the stomach or purging the bowels, take a few doses of Carter's Little Liver Pills, they will please you.

In the British Army 129 officers are qualified as interpreters in French, 106 in Russian, 81 in German, but only one in Dutch.

That tired, languid feeling and dull headache is very disagreeable. Take two of Carter's Little Liver Pills before retiring, and you will find relief. They never fail to do good.

Icebergs in the North Atlantic usually appear about February 15 and are seen more or less frequently until about June 15.

They make one feel as though life was worth living. Take one of Carter's Little Liver Pills after eating; it will relieve dyspepsia, aid digestion, give tone and vigor to the system.

Up to the present slower progress is being made with the construction of the Edward VII. than of any warship built at Davenport.

Nothing so suddenly obstructs the perspiration as sudden transitions from heat to cold. Heat rarifies the blood, quickens the circulation and increases the perspiration, but when these are suddenly checked the consequences must be bad. The most common cause of disease is obstructed perspiration, or what commonly goes by the name of catching cold. Coughs, colds, sore throat, etc., if attended to in time are easily subdued, but if allowed to run their own course generally prove the fore-runner of more dangerous diseases. Nine-tenths of the consumptives date their afflictions from a neglected cold, and the diseases that are caused by wet feet, damp clothes, or exposure are more numerous than are generally supposed. One of the most efficacious medicines for all diseases of the throat and lungs is Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, which frees the lungs from viscid phlegm by changing the secretions from a diseased to a healthy state.

DIVIDING A LONG SERMON.

Dr. Samuel Buell of the last half of the eighteenth century, who used to preach two or three hours, like Isaac Barrows, was ingenious in detaining his congregation. On one occasion, after preaching nearly two hours—as long as he could feel secure in the presence of all his hearers—he remarked that he was done preaching to sinners and that they were at liberty to go. The rest of his discourse would be addressed to good people.

A gentleman who once went to hear him stated that when the hour glass was nearly ready to be turned a second time from the commencement of his sermon, he said, (much to the relief of the person who related it, "Once More." After going on some eight or ten minutes longer, he said, "To conclude," and after another about equal interval, he said "Lastly."

The gentleman added that he expected every moment to hear him say, "Everlastingly."

When Kaiser Wilhelm shuts his eyes
The world will get along somehow;
He's great, but even when he dies
The world will get along somehow.
Although he is God's special choice,
When men have ceased to hear his voice,
They'll still have triumphs, still rejoice;
The world will get along somehow—
Somehow, somehow—
The world will get along somehow.

When Pierpont Morgan quits his trust
The world will get along somehow;
When Morgan dies, as die he must,
The world will get along somehow.
He holds within his mighty hand
The commerce of the sea and land,
Yet when around his grave men stand,
The world will get along somehow—
Somehow, somehow—
The world will get along somehow.

When Solomon lay cold and dead,
The world still got along somehow;
When darkness fell o'er Caesar's head,
The world still got along somehow.
Perhaps you fancy that you know
Far more than others here below
But when God summons you to go
The world will get along somehow—
Somehow, somehow—
The world will get along somehow.

PREFERENTIAL TRADE — A DELUSION.

Those who have paid any attention to the trend of trade, as it affects Canada, have, from the adoption of what is boastingly called a preference in the tariff so far as it affects Great Britain, pronounced the whole scheme as illusory, likely to lead the casual student of our commercial and trade relations with different parts of the world, astray. The few years it has been in operation establishes the fact that instead of our import trade having been increased with Great Britain and lessened with countries which we ostensibly discriminate against, statistics show that the reverse has been the case; that in fact the arrangement of duties has been of such a character as practically to have the very opposite effect.

This view of the workings of the tariff is beginning to be fully understood and realized in England. An article appeared in the London Times a short time ago, which establishes this fact beyond peradventure. It is worthy of the careful study of the sceptics. We quote it;—

"It was, I understand, expected that the preference which was given to imports from the United Kingdom would result in a large increase in those imports—a relative as well as an actual increase. The percentage of Canadian imports which was supplied by Great Britain had fallen steadily from 58.5 per cent. in 1871-72 to 26.4 in 1896-97. The imports received from the United States had increased during the same period from 33.1 per cent. of the total to 55.4 per cent. But during the year 1897-98, in spite of the preference the British imports fell to 24.8 per cent. and those of the United States increased to 60.2 per cent. For the next two years there was little rebate from one-quarter to one-third of the duties, the British imports declined to 23.7 of the total imports and those from the United States advanced slightly to 60.9 per cent. All this while the actual trade of Canada was advancing rapidly and except during the year 1900-01 the actual value of British imports advanced year by year. There was an actual falling off in 1900-01, a year which also witnessed a considerable advance in the actual imports into Canada of U.S. goods. The contention of the Canadian naturally is that, if we have done relatively so badly with a preferential tariff, we should have done very much worse had there been no preference. After looking closely into the details of Canadian trade, I venture to think that Sir Michael Hicks-Beach was right when he said that, though we appreciated the friendly spirit shown by Canada in granting us a preferential tariff, yet it had not been of much material assistance to our trade. The reason why the preferential tariff has not done that of the United States very much harm, is quite simple. Of the British imports into Canada about three-quarters are dutiable and one-quarter are free; of the United States imports, about one-half are dutiable and one-half are free. It also happens that the majority of the British products are subject to a higher scale of ad valorem duty than are the United States products. Thus it follows that, in spite of the preferential rebate, the average ad valorem duty paid on British goods is almost exactly the same as that paid on United States goods. The increase in the trade of the United States with Canada has to a large extent been in free products, while our trade has largely remained in dutiable products. Even after allowance for the preferential tariff, most British imports pay an ad valorem duty of nearly 25 per cent. when they enter the Dominion. A revision of the present tariff scale in our favor would apparently do British trade much more good than the preferential treatment under the present scale."

Commenting upon this article the Halifax Herald truthfully says:—

"The British people are beginning to see that they got the apparent, paraded preference, while the United States producers got the real preference. If ever there were bunco men in politics, the Laurierite tariff tinkers were such; and if ever a whole people were goldbricked, it was the case of the British manufacturers with the Laurierite 'preference.'"

A WARM WEATHER ITEM.

The sensation of the season was sprung on the little village of Rossmore this morning, when, shortly after 4 o'clock, a violent commotion was observed in the water about 200 yards off the lee shore. (We don't know what that means, but it's a good nautical expression, and is always introduced in the best fish stories.) The men who were on the bay bridge rubbed their eyes when they saw a huge neck emerge from the water. After writhing for a minute or two the head attached to the neck was seen to emerge. It was a little bigger than the head of a Kingston newspaper man and not quite so large as a Saratoga trunk. The men knew at once they were gazing on the genuine sea serpent. The monster began to churn through the water, making a noise resembling the Annie Lake under full steam. Somebody on the bridge dropped a remark about this being the Wednesday half-holiday and probably the P. M. and Chief would be out fishing. It is supposed that the sea serpent heard this remark, for it uttered a loud snort and immediately started down the bay at full speed. It is much to be regretted that the monster became frightened before some photographic views could be taken of it. However, it shows that the fame of Belleville's dispensers of justice stands high even among the monsters of the deep.

This is the way the Chicago Record-Herald touches up our own J. Israel Tarte:

"Sir Israel Tarte, Canadian Minister of Marine, arrived in Chicago yesterday afternoon, on the steam yacht Lord Stanley, his official boat. . . . . Lord Tarte's steamer entered Chicago harbor yesterday afternoon in a blaze of color, flying the standards of Great Britain and the United States at her foremast, dependant from which was a string of pennants of the Canadian yacht clubs of which the Stanley is a member by compliment. She docked at the salt docks at the river's entrance, but later in the day removed to a private slip near the club-house of the Chicago Yacht Club, where Lord Tarte met a number of callers. His trip being one of pleasure, there were no official calls, neither on the part of the city nor federal officials, though the boat was visited by many persons, some of whom remained for a dinner aboard the craft last evening. . . . 'My trip through the great lakes,' said Mr. Tarte last evening, 'has been made with a view of familiarizing myself with their commerce as it relates to Canada.' . . . During the six years Lord Tarte has been Minister of Marine he has gained considerable prominence from his consistent work to build up the commerce of the great lakes from the Canadian standpoint. Recently he has come into public notice by reviving a plan to construct a canal from Georgian Bay through Ontario to Lake Ontario, thus shortening the route between the Atlantic and the head of the lakes. . . . . The canal, Lord Tarte estimates, would cost $100,000,000.'"

• • •

THE REASON WHY.

(Hamilton Spectator.)

Now what in the world makes Grit papers like the Hamilton Times oppose the proposed fast line of steamships? Is it because the idea originated with Conservatives? Alas! That seems to be the answer.—Belleville Intelligencer.

The Intelligencer hits the exact truth. The Times got into the habit of denouncing the proposed fast line when and because it was a Tory Government proposition, and will continue to denounce it until it becomes a settled fact under the present Government. The Times was compelled to swallow the National Policy, and will be able to swallow a little thing like a fast line of steamers when the time comes. It is true that it pretends that the protective essence has been eliminated from the old tariff; but it knows better, and when it accepts the 23-knot boats it will explain that it accepts them because they don't run 30 knots.

• • •

People who go fishing this afternoon should remember that the law prohibits anybody from taking more than twelve bass from the water in one day. This rule works great hardship to some of us newspaper men, but it must be observed.

"It is a common saying among the Boers now that they and the English together could beat any other nation in the world." So writes a British officer in a private letter, quoted in the London Daily Chronicle, from what was the seat of war. Is not this a good sign of the times?

• • •

It is pleasing to note that Belleville is going to celebrate the coronation of King Edward. The gentlemen who had arranged the celebration for June 26 were hit pretty hard, and no one would have blamed them very much if they had fought shy of things of that kind for some time to come. However, like loyal men, they thought the city should do something to mark the recovering and coronation of His Majesty. Of course, nobody expected anything would be done on Saturday. It was hardly in reason to ask our merchants to shut up their stores on the night of the busiest day of the week. But on Monday evening next there will be a demonstration on the Corby Driving Park, when the band will give a patriotic concert, and the grandest display of fireworks ever seen in Belleville will be shown under the personal supervision of Prof. Hand, of Hamilton, the man who makes 'em. Turn out and show your loyalty, join in the chorus of the National Anthem and let out a whoop or two for Good King Ned and the British Empire, which never took a back seat for anybody yet and doesn't mean to. See local in another column for particulars.

• • •

The above, it may be remarked, makes the nucleus of the demonstration. If the military, and the Veterans and the different societies don't march in procession to the park and do a little celebrating on their own account, well, we shall always think they might have done so.

• • •

Why not have the Wednesday half-holiday on Monday next week (there's a bull for you), and put out the flags and do things up in style. A little personal, hearty, spontaneous, individual effort would fittingly mark the great occasion and give us something to remember. All together, everybody.

• • •

The Tarte-Cote census is said to show only 16,496 persons of "unsound mind" in Canada; and the Montreal Gazette cannot believe that this number includes all those who voted for the Laurier-Tarte Government in 1900 "under the impression that it was a combination of statesmen." This then is another evidence of the untrustworthiness of the Tarte-Cote enumeration.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh), that can not be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

WE'RE GETTING BUSINESS RIGHT ALONG

In Wall Papers and Interior Decorations, despite the warm weather. The season makes some difference, but there's always something doing and we are doing it this summer.

OUR DECORATIVE IDEAS

Are being employed in the first homes of Belleville and in many of the better homes of Canada. We employ only skilled craftsmen to execute the work, designing and color schemes of our artist.

WE DO NOT CATER FOR OUTSIDE AND ORDINARY PAINTING.

We rather cater to Interior Decorative work. This we make a specialty of, can execute your work in superior style to the ordinary plans the "done to death" methods, giving you the newest ideas employed today in the larger cities of America in decorative interior work and the cost will be no greater than the ordinary old-fashioned way. The result will be both pleasing and lasting in its effectiveness.

OUR STOCK AND SELECTION

OF paper hangings is so replete that it would tire you to see the entire line during one day.

If you have a home to decorate take two days, get our decorator to study your rooms, to give you sketches of the rooms furnished and to suggest color schemes in harmony with the other furnishings and the surroundings. He can do it and the suggestions will cost you nothing.

ALL CLASS OF INTERIOR WORK.

Snails.

The popularity of the snail as an article of food is not confined to Paris, but extends throughout southern Europe and some parts of Africa. Dr. Edrard, a French writer, in a pamphlet says that 90,000 pounds of snails are sent daily to Paris from the gardens of Poitou, Burgundy, Champagne and Provence. Those reared in gardens are fed on aromatic herbs to improve their flavor. Their market price is from 2 francs 50 centimes to 3 francs 50 centimes a hundred, while those from the hedges, woods and forests bring only 2 francs to 2 francs 50 centimes. The proprietor of one snailery in the vicinity of Dijon nets over 7,000 francs annually.

The snail is reared and fattened with great care in some cantons of Switzerland as an article of luxury and is exported in a pickled state. It is also eaten as a relish and nutritious article of food in Austria, Spain, Italy and in some sections of the United States. The Ashantees and other African tribes smoke them and eat them as daily food all the year around. In Algeria in the markets large heaps of snails are sold by the bushel and the hundred as an article of food. Venders hawk them in the streets of Cairo. In modern Rome fresh gathered snails are hawked by women from door to door.

Centuries In Building.

Persons who are disposed to grumble at the length of time required to finish public buildings should take heart from the example of the Cathedral of St. Peter, in Cologne. That structure was 632 years in building. It was begun in 1248 and was pronounced completed in 1880. The great Cathedral of Milan was begun in 1386 and was not completed until 1805, 419 years later. Rostermel castle, in Cornwall, took ninety years to build, and one-third of that time was employed in excavating for the foundation. The late Lord Bute was engaged for over twenty years in building his great palace in the isle of Bute, and his successor is still at work on it. The palace of the Dukes of Atholl, in Scotland, has been building since 1830, and the work is still going on. In the cases of the other buildings mentioned, however, the money for their construction did not come entirely out of the pockets of the taxpayers, which, after all, makes a considerable difference as to the matter of looking at it.

For Diabetic Patients.

In a diet for diabetic patients milk is only occasionally allowed, yet eggs, cream, buttermilk and all kinds of cheese may be taken freely. Tart fruits are permitted, and peaches and strawberries may be eaten with cream, but without sugar. The sweet fruits—pears, plums, grapes, apples, bananas, etc.—are forbidden. Koumiss, coffee with cream, but no sugar, and cereal coffee are the drinks permitted, tea being excluded and no wines or liquors except claret, Rhine or other acid varieties. All vegetables containing sugar or starch are forbidden, which leaves cauliflower, lettuce, string beans, spinach, cucumbers, greens, young onions, etc., to be eaten. Olives are not forbidden. A moderate meat diet is recommended, particularly the fatty parts, and all kinds of fish are allowed.

Oddities of Color Blindness.

While the number of color blind persons is not very large, only about five in every hundred suffering from any defect in this respect and most of those being affected only in a minor degree, yet the phenomenon sometimes assumes very remarkable phases.

An oculist states that he found two persons who possessed monochromatic vision—that is to say, all colors appeared to them to be simply different shades of gray.

If the reader will look at a photograph of a landscape or, better, of a garden filled with brilliant flowers, he will be able to form an idea of the appearance which nature must present to one who suffers from the infliction called monochromatic vision.

A Kind Word.

Many a friendship, long, loyal and self sacrificing, rested at first on no thicker a foundation than a kind word. Two men were not likely to be friends. Perhaps each of them regarded the other with something of distrust. They had possibly been set against each other by the circulation of gossip or they had been looked upon as rivals, and the success of one was regarded as incompatible with the success of the other, but a kind word, perhaps a mere report of a kind word, has been enough to be the commencement of an enduring friendship.

The Sinecures.

Beeler—You are the last man I should have expected to find opposing the pensioning of government employees no longer able to work.

Heeler—When a man gets so helpless that he can't do what little work there is in a government job, he ought to be taken out and shot.—London Tit-Bits.

No Life There.

Little Dot—What's all this talk 'bout Mars? Does folks live there?

Little Johnny—They used to live there, but they is all dead long ago.

"How do you know?"

"I heard papa say the names of all the seas an' lakes an' islands an' things is from the dead languages."

Positive Proof.

Judge—What proof have we that this man is absentminded?

Attorney—Why, he actually stopped his automobile at a watering fountain.

PREHISTORIC EGYPT.

Prof. Flinders Petrie and Staff Have Had a Successful Season.

Professor Petrie and his companions have had a successful winter's work, as was seen from the exhibition at University College, London, just opened to the public. Dr. Grenfell and Dr. Hunt had been in the Fayum; the Professor, also on behalf of the Egypt Exploration Fund, continued work in Abydos, and Messrs. Caulfield and Christie investigated the Temple of Sety, at the same place, on behalf of the Egyptian Research account. Built by a Pharaoh who flourished about 13 centuries before the Christian era this temple was intended as a funerary chapel for the Kings of the First Dynasty, whose burial places are near at hand, for at Abydos we come in touch with the earliest age of Egyptian history. For the last two years Professor Petrie had been at work exploring the almost primeval site, and some of the results were in view. On the table are specimens of the sandstone grinders used by the workmen of that bygone age to hollow out their skillfully-wrought bowls and vases of ornamental stones; on another beads of ivory, shells, green glazed pottery, carnelian, and garnet.

Not the least interesting objects reproductions of two tombs belonging to the earlier half of the First Dynasty. They were cut in the made ground about the town, and lined with brickwork; the corpse was laid in the middle, possibly beneath an inner shelter of wood. Round this were placed jars of alabaster, vases of other stone, and earthenware vessels of various shapes, some of them blackish in color, but more usually of shapes of red. A common shape was that of the Roman amphora without its handle, all were well executed. The graves fortunately, had escaped rifling, and remained, allowing for natural decay, as they had been left by the mourners some 56 centuries ago—for the date of Menes, the founder of the dynasty, may be fixed, according to Professor Petrie, not many years later than 4800 B. C. Indeed, not a few of the relics which have been obtained from Abydos during the last three winters are anterior to the date fixed by Usher for the creation of the world.

Tombs of the Thirteenth Dynasty—some 2300 B.C.—proved especially fruitful. In one of these, a unique silver pilgrim bottle, with a hinged lid, two gold rings, a well-made little ivory tray, and many other relics were found. A large granite head of a king in the preceding dynasty was remarkable for its bold execution. Belonging to a much later date—about the Thirtieth Dynasty, or not long before the days of Alexander the Great, was a collection of Ushabti, little figures of glazed pottery which were placed in tombs, 400 being the regulation number. Two sets are exhibited, the older inferior in execution and with a dull greenish-blue glaze, the newer, though belonging only to the next generation, of much better workmanship, and with a brilliant blue and purple glaze.

Messrs. Grenfell and Hunt obtained a large collection of curious objects from the animal mummies—especially those of the sacred crocodile—belonging to the Ptolemaic and earlier Roman period. Among these were reeds giving the measurements of the deceased reptile — doubtless directions to the workmen who made the mummy case, and the wooden models of the creature, one of which had a moveable lower jaw. That, however, was not all. The mummy, whether animal or human, was wrapped in and padded with papyrus — "just as newspaper would be used"—before it was enclosed in the outer cloth. But papyrus, probably, was not cheap so that which had been written on was employed for the corpse, like perfumes and pepper in the days of Horace. Old documents served as a breast cloth or stuffed the feet-covering of the dead.

Bleeding Piles

TWO LETTERS FROM MR. WALKER EXPLAINING THE SEVERITY OF HIS CASE AND THE PERMANENCY OF HIS CURE BY USING

Some people seem to think that it is too much to claim that Dr. Chase's Ointment will cure every form of piles, but facts go to prove the truth of this claim. These are interesting letters from one who has suffered much and been cured.

In November, 1901, Mr. Sherwood Walker, a fireman on the Canada Atlantic Railway, living at Madawaska, Ont., writes: "I am a great sufferer from bleeding piles. Sometimes the protruding piles come down, causing much misery and uneasiness, and at other times I am subject to bleeding piles, and they bleed to such an extent as to make me quite weak. If Dr. Chase's Ointment will cure this awful ailment you will have my everlasting gratitude."

On March 1, 1902, we received the following letter from Mr. Walker, which speaks volumes for Dr. Chase's Ointment as a cure for piles of the most distressing form. He writes: "According to my promise, I now take pleasure in writing to you. If you remember, you sent me a box of Dr. Chase's Ointment for bleeding piles some three months ago. I used it faithfully, and can say that it proved a Godsend, for it has entirely cured me of bleeding piles.

"I would have written sooner, but I wanted to be able to tell you that it was a permanent cure. This you can use for the benefit of other suffering people. There are several people here who have been cured of very severe cases of protruding piles by using this great ointment."

So far as we know there is no other preparation extant which is so successful in curing piles of the most aggravated kind as Dr. Chase's Ointment. Its soothing, healing powers are marvellous, and its cures thorough and permanent. Sixty cents a box at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

KING'S RETURN TO LONDON

All Preparations Have Been Completed For To-Day.

Great Street Demonstration on the Way to Buckingham Palace—His Majesty Will Not Require Invalid Chair—Story of Second Operation For Appendicitis Denied—Race For King's Cup—King Saw the Start.

London, Aug. 6.—All preparations have been completed for the return of King Edward to London to-day. The Victoria Station has been brilliantly decorated. It is expected that his Majesty's return to the capital will be marked by a great street demonstration en route to Buckingham Palace. The trip to London will be made on a royal special train, but there will be no invalid chair or other special arrangement, for it is felt that his Majesty is fully equal to the fatigue of the journey.

Story of Second Operation Denied.

A story afloat for several days that a second operation for appendicitis will be performed on the King after the coronation, is denied here. According to all authoritative reports the King is making an excellent recovery and it is considered unlikely that his physicians would allow him to endure the fatigue of the coronation ceremonies if another operation was impending.

RACE FOR KING'S CUP.

The Meteor's Lead Not Maintained—King Saw the Start.

Cowes, Isle of Wight, Aug. 6.—The second day of the Royal Yacht Squadron's regatta was favored with beautiful weather, the sky was clear, but the wind was rather light. There were twelve starters in the race for the King's Cup, with the German Emperor's Meteor III. at the scratch. King Edward watched the start of the yachts in the race for the King's Cup with keen interest, and at 1 o'clock the Victoria and Albert steamed slowly in the direction of Ryde to meet the returning racers. At the finish the Bryn Hild led, with the Glory second, and the Meteor third.

Arrived in London.

London, Aug. 6.—The Canadian coronation contingent of thirteen non-commissioned officers and men, under command of Lieut.-Col. Turner, V.C., D.S.O., has arrived in London, and has been assigned quarters in the Alexandra Palace.

A Stock Exchange Tribute.

New York, Aug. 6.—The Governing Committee of the Stock Exchange decided yesterday to close the exchange next Saturday in honor of the coronation of King Edward.

CAPTAIN LEFT WRECKED SCHOONER

New York, Aug. 6.—The Italian steamer Sardegna arrived yesterday from Naples having in tow the two-masted schooner Notice of Providence, R.I. The schooner sailed from Brava, Cape Verde Islands, on June 27 with 65 persons but no cargo. On July 21 a sudden squall struck her, disabling her, and she drifted helplessly in the Gulf Stream. On June 27 the rudder was lost and the captain, Antonio Ramos disappeared, having evidently jumped overboard. When the Sardegna appeared on August 29 the Notice's provisions were running short.

Captain Lafferty's Appointment.

Ottawa, Aug. 6.—Capt. Frank Lafferty, who was in Africa with the first contingent and who is a graduate of the R.M.C., has been appointed district staff adjutant at Montreal. This appointment was provided for in the estimates passed last session.

Movements of the Druid.

Ottawa, Aug. 6.—The new Government steamer Druid is reported to have passed Belle Isle and will be in Sydney to coal to-day. She will leave Sydney on Thursday and will be in Quebec on Saturday.

Man Who Shot a Striker Acquitted.

New York, Aug. 6.—Martin McLane, Superintendent of the Bartlett Hayward Company of Baltimore, who shot and killed Patrick Anjeline, an iron worker last Saturday night, was acquitted yesterday by a coroner's jury on the ground of self-defense.

Bucket For Mounted Rifles.

Ottawa, Aug. 6.—A board of officers will assemble at Toronto on a date to be named by the president, to report on the best pattern of bucket for mounted rifles.

Fell Sixteen Feet.

Ingersoll, Aug. 6.—Hugh Ehalinger, music teacher at New Germany, fell 16 feet out of a window, and was seriously hurt.

Illness of Bishop Machray.

London, Aug. 6.—The disease from which His Grace Archbishop Machray, Primate of the Church of England in Canada, suffers affects the front of the spine. Hence the X rays failed to reveal the trouble. The prelate is able to write letters daily. Beyond the spinal affection his health is otherwise good.

Widow Drank Morphine.

Toronto, Aug. 6.—On account of domestic troubles, Mrs. Florence Atwell tried to end her life Tuesday morning. Although the attempt was not successful, she had a narrow escape, and is still lying dangerously ill at the Emergency Hospital.

May Use the Chinaman.

London, Aug. 6.—A Johannesburg correspondent says the scarcity of native labor has caused some mining houses to contemplate the introduction of Chinese.

Professional Envy.

An Italian philosopher has amused himself by constructing a scale of degrees for the measurement of professional envy. The highest point in this envy measurer is ten.

Architects are happily placed lowest on the scale. They register only 1; advocates and priests and military men are ranged at 2, and in the ascending scale he gives us professors of science and literature, 4; journalists, 5; authors, 8; physicians, 9; actors and actresses, 10. The small amount of envy among architects is held to be due to their precise, severe and rigid studies. The same thing applies to advocates.

Among the clergy envy is found mostly in preachers. In the military career envy is quiescent in time of peace, but can become acute in time of war. Envy makes men of science and literature lead solitary lives, diffident of each other. Among physicians envy is still more prevalent, and they do not spare their colleagues, often terming them charlatans. In the theatrical world envy reaches its acute form, vanity playing a great part in its production.

Crows as Weather Prophets.

The belief that two crows are a happy omen and that they appear to warn men from disaster is very ancient. Alexander the Great was thus saved in Egypt by two crows, and King Alonzo would assuredly have perished in 1147 had it not been for two crows, one of which perched on the prow and the other on the stern of his ship, so pointing the prow of the royal barge safely into port. Crows and rooks are very much alike. It is said that when rooks desert a rookery it forebodes the downfall of the family on whose property it is.

They are also credited with being good weather prognosticators. When the weather is about to be very bad, they stay as near home as possible, but when they foreknow that it will be set fair they start off in the morning right away to a distance where they have an instinct that the food they need is plentiful. Again, if the rooks are seen venturing into the streets of a town or village it is a sure sign of an approaching snowstorm.—All the Year Round.

Books and Bookshelves.

"Low bookshelves," says a furniture dealer, who is a lover of books as well, "have an origin in a reason besides the caprice of fashion. Heat is injurious to the binding of choice books, drying out the natural oil of the leather and making them warp and get out of shape. Most rooms are very warm in the upper parts, and these five and six foot bookcases are a necessity rather than a notion. Cold is as hard on books as overheating, and an atmosphere that is too damp or too dry also injures them. The sun pouring in directly on the shelves fades the bindings. You can have a cheerful, sunny library and yet keep the volumes out of the sun's full power."

Breaking Up "Chatter."

The famous painter Fuseli had a great contempt for "chatter." One afternoon a party of friends paid a visit to his studio, and after a few moments spent in looking at the pictures they seated themselves and proceeded to indulge in a long and purposeless talk. At last, in one of the slight pauses, Fuseli said earnestly, "I had pork for dinner today."

"Why, my dear Mr. Fuseli," exclaimed one of the startled group, "what an extremely odd remark!"

"Is it?" said the painter ingenuously. "Why, isn't it as interesting and important as anything that has been said for the last hour?"

Parliamentary Frontiers.

On either side of the commons chamber of our parliament house there is a distinct line along the floor, and any member who, when speaking, steps outside the line on his side is liable to be called to order. These lines are supposed to be scientific frontiers, and the neutral zone between is beyond the length of a sword thrust, and, although members no longer wear swords, except those who are selected to move and second addresses to the throne on certain occasions, the old precaution still lingers on.

Unhappy Youngster.

Kind Gentleman—Why are you crying, my little lad?

Urchin—Boo-ooh! Billy Wells hit me, an' feyther hit me because I let Billy hit me, an' Billy Wells hit me again because I told feyther, an' now feyther'll hit me again because Billy—(Exit kind gentleman.)—Chums.

At Any Rate He Aroused Discussion.

Lucille—Cholly is such an uninteresting person.

Helen—Oh, I don't know. He gave rise to an animated discussion last night as to whether a person can be considered absentminded when his mind is neither here nor elsewhere.

Scant Consolation.

The Pessimist—The longer I live in the world the worse it seems to get.

The Optimist—Oh, well, don't let a little thing like that worry you. Perhaps it will be better after you get out of it.

FAIRY GOLD

BY BERTHA M. CLAY

—Author of—

"A Woman's Vengeance," "Between Two Loves,"
"Her Second Love," "A Fatal Wedding," Etc.

"I don't understand you, madame!" the governess stammers, flushing crimson, and tears of wrath and terror welling up into her eyes. "My name is Gantier. You mistake, madame!"

"Gantier, and not Glover?" Lady Nora questions, showing her teeth in a malicious little smile. "You keep as close to the truth as ever, I see, mademoiselle. Chut!" For mademoiselle's visage is purple, and puckering up hysterically. "I have no wish to injure you; you shall tell me all about your good fortune, Mademoiselle—Gantier, by-and-by."

* * * * * * * *

"Well, chere maman," Dallas says, coming into his mother's room an hour later, and finding Lady Nora restoring exhausted nature with a dainty supper and one of Zola's novels, "have you spent a pleasant evening with your new friend? She has the merit of novelty in every respect, I should say. It must have been delightful!"

"Don't be absurd, Dallas!" Lady Nora responds a little crossly. "I am tired to death! Of course I went to spend the evening with those people for your sake."

"Best of mothers!" murmurs Dallas, helping himself to oysters and Chablis. "Was virtue its own reward, and did you enjoy 'the feast of reason and the flow of soul' with that good lady in the lilac-and-white shawl? I see you did, for you are yawning so."

"I am tired to death," repeats Lady Nora, with a smile which is very like a grin. "However, you shall profit by my experience, Dallas. Miss Dormer is an excellent person, for a cook," Lady Nora goes on deliberately. "She is a worthy, honest, deferential sort of woman, who knows a great deal about housekeeping and marketing. Her name is Keren-happuch—called 'Keren'—aunt Keren. Don't forget, Dallas."

The young fellow's dark chestnut eyebrows draw together with deep angry curves between, and his smooth cropped head droops sullenly.

"And Mr. Dormer—uncle Silas," pursues Lady Nora gaily—"is the very personification of the 'worthy old soul' of comedy-drama, without a scrap of polite education or savoir-faire, but full of sterling worth—isn't that the phrase?—most charmingly snobbish towards what he calls the 'haristocracy,' and with a flourishing business in London and Yarmouth. He is a drysalter. Why do they say 'dry,' Dallas? Who ever heard of wet salt being used?"

"Oh, Mademoiselle Yolande?" his mother goes on carelessly, with a good-natured smile. "She is a nonentity at present, a virgin page, white and unwritten, character, figure, and mind alike totally unformed. Poor dear child, we shall mould her into something very different by-and-by!"

"I dare say we shall," Dallas muttered under his moustache.

"Small bones?" repeats Dallas, staring.

"Yes," says Lady Nora, smiling, but speaking very seriously. "It's such a blessing to a girl of—well, the class of nouveaux riches—when she has small bones! She can be modelled and moulded into a good figure, taught to pose nicely, and never gets the horribly vulgar portly appearance that a big-boned, broad-shouldered woman is apt to get when past her first youth. I noticed our dear mademoiselle very closely, I assure you, Dallas," Lady Nora adds, with a self-congratulatory laugh. "She has small bones and long slender limbs, and good eyes and fine dark hair. I shouldn't wonder at all if in a year or two she was transformed into a most graceful symmetrical figure, with a face not handsome, you know, but peculiar, striking-looking—some people say that it is far better than the ordinary everyday sort of beauty," Lady Nora adds reassuringly; and a frown of scornful impatience darkens Dallas Glynne's clear gray-blue eyes.

"It is comforting to hear of such delightful possibilities," he rejoins frigidly; and Lady Nora, laughing nervously, discreetly decides to charge the subject.

"Of the family group there remains only mademoiselle the French governess to be accounted for," her ladyship adds.

"And, if I were Miss Dormer's confidential friend, as you appear to be, madre mia," Dallas says coolly, "I should make mademoiselle the French governess account for herself, and very closely too."

"Nonsense, Dallas!" responded Lady Nora, smiling maliciously. "What has the poor woman done? Have you been flirting with her, you bad boy?"

"No. But that is not mademoiselle's fault," Dallas retorts sourly; and Lady Nora laughs heartily.

All the troubles of her life—and they have been neither few nor light—have not spoiled the music of Lady Nora's gay sweet laugh.

"Poor Mademoiselle Glover — no, Gantier! I am so sorry you don't like her, Dallas!" she says gaily. "I am delighted with her. And she will be a most useful, agreeable person to me, I have not the slightest doubt."

CHAPTER IV.

At three o'clock on the following day, in the golden warmth of the fair autumn afternoon, Lady Nora Glynne and her party meet at the Pont de Naque. She is looking deliciously cool and fresh and wonderfully pretty in a dress of cream-hued mousseline de laine with a gleam of crimson satin here and there, and a big rustic chapeau of rough straw smothered in creamy lace and clusters of red currants. Her aide-de-camp, poor Mr. Dormer, is hot and anxious already, and his large white handkerchief comes into play every few minutes as he delightedly receives her ladyship's most radiant smiles and sweet little compliments, and trots about untiringly in her behalf. For Lady Nora has made up a little party of her own "set" to help to get through the afternoon with the Dormer "set," as she confidentially tells Dallas.

Mr. Dormer has entreated Lady Nora to allow him the pleasure of "sending on a few things for a little bit of a picnic luncheon," as he modestly phrases it; and Lady Nora has generously allowed him the pleasure. Consequently the worthy man has had a hot busy morning in giving directions to the hotel-keeper and orders to the servants, and in holding distracting conversations with shopkeepers who have not a word of English, as he has not a word of French except mercy—as he pronounces it—and Bong jour!

But he has succeeded in hiring a luncheon tent, and has sent on to the appointed rendezvous, in an old orchard by the mill, a hamper of wine and another of cold fowl, galantine, tongue, rolls, salad and pastry, enough for twenty people.

"I'll do the thing in style, Keren, while I'm about it," he says to his sister. "We'll show these grand folks we know what's what as well as they do."

So he has hired glass and silver, and damask and waiters, and gone to the expense of a dinner party for those whom, in his honest British toadyism, he calls "nobs."

"He is always so kind and attentive to his invalid brother's wife!" Lady Nora tells Miss Dormer, lest that simple old lady should see too clearly through her spectacles.

And there is a couple of military men as well.

"Brother officers of my 'boy's,'" Lady Nora exclaims, with her sweetly maternal air.

One of them, however, is a Colonel of fifty-five, and an old adorer of Lady Nora herself, the other a fortune-hunting Irishman, a Major of forty, who has a heavy bet on winning an heiress before the next spring meeting.

"So thoughtless of Dallas!" Lady Nora muses vexedly. "I dare say he angled for an invitation when he knew this Dormer girl was coming. All the same, it is very tiresome; and I shall have to look after the man all the afternoon, and then Colonel Majilton will be as sulky and jealous as he can possibly be!"

She has likewise a great many anxious moments watching to see that Dallas and Yolande Dormer pair off together safely, and has besides to reward Mr. Dormer for all his services with smiles and sweet thanks. So perhaps, after all, her share of the day's anxieties are not so disproportioned to Mr. Dormer's.

At last she is rewarded. "Events are on velvet," as Major Hutchinson says, with a sneer. The rendezvous is the moss-grown old bridge at the head of the valley, overhung by oak-trees above the rushing stream hurrying down the Moulin de Naque, a long way below. And here Lady Nora, with her very sweetest maternal air, introduces Dallas to the girlish heiress of "the drysalter people."

"My son Captain Glynne—Miss Yolande Dormer," she says, with a tender smile divided between them both, as Yolande, tall, slender, nunlike, in her clinging black grenadine and snowy India muslin scarf, acknowledges the introduction with a schoolgirl bow and a deep hot blush of schoolgirl consciousness. For in a moment she recognizes with a joyful rush and whirl of almost incredulous gladness the "courteous stranger" who opened the Cathedral doors for her last night, and whose face and figure she saw for a few minutes in the moonlight.

She hoped in the innermost shrine of her girlish heart—void and innocent of the mystery of love as it is—that she might one day meet with him again—perhaps know him, and be his friend.

He is her ideal of a hero—this broad-shouldered, stalwart, soldierly young fellow with the proud face and cold, gentle, refined voice and manner. He is something far different from her former heroes of imagination—shadowy creatures of romance and history.

She has not mentioned her brief adventure to Mademoiselle Gantier, confidential and affectionate as that amiable lively young lady is with her dear pupil.

And now, here, in this lovely place, in the golden afternoon, she has met him again—met him, spoken to him, and learned his name—Dallas Glynne—Captain Dallas Glynne! And he does not turn away coldly and distantly after his introduction to her, as she fancied—feared he would. On the contrary, he places himself at her side, and they walk on together.

"What on earth am I to begin to talk to her about?" Captain Glynne is thinking perplexedly. "I know! Of course—the old church! Well, that will do to begin on; but I can't spin out the Cathedral to last all the way down to the mill! Hum! I trust you got home safely last night?" he says, making a conversational plunge.

"Got home?" Yolande has almost forgotten where she is for the time being. She looks up, startled out of her reverie, blushing and smiling nervously. "Oh, yes, thank you! You saw me in the church last evening, didn't you?"

"Yes," he replies, smiling slightly, wondering if she is always shy and stupid as she is now. "Were you afraid you were locked in for the night? Suppose you had been?" he adds banteringly.

"I should have died or gone mad with terror before morning," she says excitedly, "shut in that great building with those ghostly white altars and pillars and all that funeral drapery!"

Captain Glynne shrugs his shoulders unsympathetically.

"Hysterical into the bargain!" he says between his teeth. "Unco' guid young women often are, I believe. Let us hope then that such a disagreeable catastrophe will never occur," he says aloud drily. "Do you go every evening to pray there? You are a Catholic, I presume?"

"Oh, no," Yolande answers. "I am a Protestant! We are Nonconformists indeed. Uncle and aunt are at least, and I go to chapel with them. They are Baptists."

"Oh, then you like going to Roman Catholic services as well?" he says, looking puzzled. "I shall be out of my depth in a minute," he thinks, dismayed, "if my little devotee gets me into a tangle of creeds and polemics. I thought Dissenters were—well, bigoted, you know," he goes on, stumbling over his words a little before the wondering innocent eyes, "and wouldn't go to pray in a Catholic church on any account. You are more liberal-minded, I see."

"But one can pray anywhere," rejoins Yolande seriously. "And why should I not pray in a Roman Catholic church, Captain Glynne? Aunt Keren and uncle Silas would not, I know," she admits, in a lower tone, looking up at him confidentially; "they don't like me even to go in and listen to the music. But I think that is rather bigoted, and I don't think it is right."

"Come," says Dallas to himself, rather amused—"we have opinions of our own and a will of our own, demure little nun though we look! I don't think it is right either. You and I quite agree," he says aloud, smiling slightly, and lowering his keen deep-set eyes to gaze into hers, which droop shyly, so that he is not able to get more than a glance at them.

"Do you often go to pray in the Cathedral while mademoiselle goes to her friend?" he asks again.

"When we go out to walk after dinner in that quiet old Haute-Ville, and mademoiselle leaves me for a few minutes," falters Yolande. "I go into the church. I am safe there, you know."

"So you are praying while she is flirting?" Dallas says, looking very stern, and thinking all the time what a good joke the whole thing will be to tell some of the fellows after mess.

"Oh, no, she isn't! Please don't tell of her!" she exclaims, tears of alarm rising to her eyes as she looks up beseechingly at Dallas, who preserves a stony aspect. "He is engaged to her—they have been engaged, I should say, for ever so long! And he is so poor, her friends won't let them be married; and she is so devoted to him—poor mademoiselle!—and, as he is going to Madagascar, she begged me to allow her to meet him a few times. Please don't tell any one, Captain Glynne!"

"Very well," briefly replies Captain Glynne. "But then, you see, you and I are fostering a clandestine attachment and sanctioning clandestine interviews and all sorts of improper things."

"Poor mademoiselle trusted me and I am silent for her sake," Yolande says humbly and simply.

"Then I must be silent for your sake," says Dallas, drawing closer to her; "and, as we are sharers in the same fault, you will have to pray for me as well as for yourself when you go into the Cathedral of an evening now. Will you?"

The front door of a business place on Front street was found unlocked last night by the police.

The police last night found an umbrella and a pair of pants outside of a business place, after it had been closed up.

A young lady named Miss Kemp, of Trenton, lost a gold watch whilst in the city last night. She reported it to the police, and at 2.50 this morning Officer Hayes found it on the park.

An excursion party from Trenton, and also one from Deseronto, were in the city last evening.

Mr. Sam Hibbard, painter, of this city, was badly injured at Cobourg this morning by a fall from a ladder. He was in the employ of the G.T.R. Mr. Hibbard, whose injuries are internal, was brought home on the noon train.

MAID OF ALL WORK.

In Mr. Dooley's new volume, "Mr. Dooley's Opinions," there is an entertaining chapter on "The Poet's Fate." Practically it is an essay about Mr. Kipling, and Mr. Dooley blossoms forth this time as Mr. Kipling's admirer.

"Roodyard Kipling is a diff'rint kind iv a pote. He didn't keep pothry f'r style so he can turn in behind it an' say 'Boys, what d'ye think iv that f'r high-steppin' verse!' Comfort and not display is his motto. Whin he asks what Hogan calls th' Muse f'r to come up an' spend a week with him he doesn't expect her to set all day on the hammock on the front stoop singin' about th' bur-rds. She's got to do the week's washin, clane the windows, cook th' meals, tune th' pianny, dust th' furniture, mend th' socks an' milk th' cow be day, an' be night she's got to set up an' balance th' books iv an empire. Whin this Muse has thrown up her job at Kipling's she'll be as good a second gurrl as any pote wud want to hire. So Roodyard Kipling's pom'es is in gr-reat demand. They're warranted not to tear or shrink or run in the wash an' guaranteed to fit all sizes an' ages.

GREAT ALTERATION SALE

For the last year we have been inconvenienced considerably for want of space to show our goods, that our business has grown no one will doubt, and in order to keep pace with its rapid growth we must have more room.

To-day the carpenters will remove our rear store and begin work in earnest. The plumbers are with us busy at their part of the job. We have had to remove all our goods in the rear of the cellar and the front part of our store is also to receive special up-to-date touches. What we ask is that the people of Belleville and vicinity will aid us in getting rid of our crowded stock, and for this end we will hold two weeks sale, goods will be sold so cheap that it will startle the whole community.

Come early. Goods sold out will not be replaced during alterations.

PAT HAYES CAUGHT HIM

A SUPPOSED COLBORNE THIEF CAPTURED IN BELLEVILLE LAST EVENING.

Police Officer Hayes has again demonstrated that he is ever on the lookout for law breakers. A week ago the local police received intimation from Colborne that a ladies' gold watch had been stolen, and a description of the supposed thief was given. Last evening, as Officer Hayes, was coming on duty, he saw a man on Front street who answered the description of the party wanted. He arrested the man, who gave his name as James Lawrence, and the evidence that he was the guilty party was conclusive, for the stolen article was found upon him.

Chief of Police W. H. Smith, of Colborne, was notified of the arrest and came to the city last night, and at an early hour this morning returned to Colborne with his prisoner.

THEIR SERVICES REWARDED

EMPLOYEES OF THE DREDGE NIPISSING RECEIVE A TIMELY PRESENT.

It will be remembered that on July 27th the yacht Hully Gee, of Hamilton, was upset in a storm off Newcastle, and Mr. W. Griffith, of Hamilton, was drowned. Members of the crew of the dredge Nipissing, which was at work near the scene of the accident, did all in their power to aid the unfortunate young man, and it was through their efforts his body was recovered. Relatives of the drowned man wished to reward the crew of the dredge, three of whom were Belleville boys, but they refused to accept any reward. The incident had almost passed from the boys' minds when, a day or two ago, they were gratified by receiving, from the relatives of the unfortunate Mr. Griffiths, two caddies of tobacco, one of smoking and the other chewing, a very acceptable present, indeed.

A "DEMON" DISEASE

Doctors prescriptions and strongest Liniments had no effect on Mr. Humphreys' Rheumatism.

Henry Humphrey, of London, Ont., expresses himself very strongly:—"I think Rheumatism is a demon from the lower regions, judging by my sufferings before I began using South American Rheumatic Cure. Doctors prescribed the strongest liniments with no more effect than water, but this great remedy had me up and about my work, and as well as ever, after taking only a couple of bottles." 44

THE NATIONAL ANTHEM.

God save our gracious King,
Long live our noble King,
God save the King.
Send him victorious,
Happy and glorious,
Long to reign over us,
God save the King.

Accept our thanks, O Lord,
For health and strength restored
To our good King;
When, filled with anxious care,
We cried, "In mercy, spare,"
Thou heard'st the Nation's pray'r—
God save the King.

Thy choicest gifts in store
On him be pleased to pour,
And on our Queen;
Through all their earthly way,
From this glad 'Crowning Day,'
Bless, we devoutly pray,
Our King and Queen.

With truth and righteousness
Our widespread Empire bless;
God save the King.
Through Britain's vast domain,
Sing we the bold refrain,
Long may King Edward reign,
God save the King.

DOES IT PAY TO BUY CHEAP?

A cheap remedy for coughs and colds is all right, but you want something that will relieve and cure the more severe and dangerous results of throat and lung troubles. What shall you do? Go to a warmer and more regular climate? Yes, if possible; if not possible for you, then in either case take the ONLY remedy that has been introduced in all civilized countries with success in severe throat and lung troubles, "Boschee's German Syrup." It not only heals and stimulates the tissues to destroy the germ disease, but allays inflammation, causes easy expectoration, gives a good night's rest and cures the patient. Try ONE bottle. Recommended many years by all druggists in the world. You can get this reliable remedy at R. Templeton & Co.'s.

Protective Appliances

Some days ago a young lady accidentally fell off the Rathbun dock into the bay, and would, no doubt, have lost her life had bot two young men promptly jumped in and rescued her. Since the accident the Rathbun Company have placed along the edge of the dock a looped chain just above the water's edge, which can be easily reached if any person should again have the misfortune to fall over the wharf. In addition to this protection, two life buoys have been secured.

King Is Very Well, Indeed

His Majesty, Standing Bareheaded in the Rain to Recognize the Cheers of Admiring Thousands, Appeared to be Himself Again—Quite Able to Go Through Ceremonies.

London, Aug. 7.—Judging by appearances the King not only will be able to go through the coronation ceremonies, but will be perfectly capable of performing all functions of the service without discomfort. His return to London from Cowes yesterday was accomplished without any ill-effects and his first public appearance since his operation delighted even those who had the most serious apprehensions with regard to the King's condition. The group of railway officials and a few court functionaries who awaited the train, exhibited many signs of uneasiness, which were not lacking among the crowds which jammed the approaches to the Victoria Station in which a squad of Life Guards had been placed.

King Stood Straight.

A four-horse royal carriage with red-coated outdrivers, was drawn up to await the arrival of the train. The King, accompanied by the Queen and Princess Victoria, stepped out of the car and walked across a crimson cloth on the platform some 20 yards to his carriage. The Queen and Princess Victoria entered the vehicle and the King followed, apparently without difficulty, and four royal servants placed rugs about his knees. The King stood up straight as if he had never had an illness in his life, took off his hat and bowed to friends on the platform and to the crowds behind the barriers. He seemed to be in the greatest good humor and evidently was delighted to get back.

In Spite of the Rain.

Despite a few drops of rain which fell, he drove out with the top of his carriage down. His face was perpetually lighted up with a smile of satisfaction and he looked anything but an invalid. The Prince and Princess of Wales and their children drove over to Buckingham Palace from York House and just before Their Majesties arrived, they appeared on the Palace balcony and were loudly cheered by the crowds outside. The demonstration increased as the King approached and after Their Majesties had entered the palace the crowd sang, "God Save the King," several times.

With Hat in Hand.

The admiring comments of the crowd along the King's route, from Victoria Station to Buckingham Palace, were mingled with expressions of amazement at the appearance of His Majesty riding in an open landau and much of the time bareheaded, he having removed his silk hat. The King kept continually bowing and smiling in response to the cheers of the people.

The following official statement was made at Buckingham Palace last night: "His Majesty has borne the journey excellently and is very well, indeed."

AFTER FIFTY YEARS

MR. BENJAMIN F. KETCHESON, FORMERLY OF THIS CITY, REVISITS HIS NATIVE PLACE.

Mr. Benjamin F. Ketcheson, an Oswego newspaper man of considerable repute, is in the city. Mr. Ketcheson is a son of the late Benjamin Ketcheson, for many years Police Magistrate of Belleville, after whom Ketcheson ward is named. He joined the majority years ago.

Speaking of him this morning Sir Mackenzie Bowell related, with evident enjoyment, the fact that the deceased Magistrate was the only one who ever fined him in a Police Court, and thereby hangs a tale—or tail, whichever you like. The coming Premier used to have a dog, which rejoiced in the name of "Printer" He had a beautiful tail. One day, as he lay sleeping on the sidewalk in front of the printing office, a young ruffian cut off his tail with an axe. Young Mackenzie Bowell, his fighting blood up, secured a horsewhip and committed a vigorous assault on the fellow who wielded the axe, the result being that he was summoned, haled before Police Magistrate Ketcheson and fined £1.10. The fine was paid, but the loss of "Printer's" tail was avenged.

Mr. B. F. Ketcheson is an old Intelligencer boy, and recalls the fact that he learned the Art Preservative in company with Sir Mackenzie Bowell. Yesterday afternoon the two gentlemen above named called on Mrs. Benjamin, wife of the first proprietor of The Intelligencer, and many pleasant memories of old times were recalled. Mr. Ketcheson has not lived in Belleville for fifty years, and says that, when he left, there were only two or three houses on Taylor's hill. He was located in Oswego during most of his absence, being for fifteen years city editor of the Oswego Times.

Accompanying Mr. Ketcheson is his son-in-law, Mr. John Ohde, a veteran of the Franco-Prussian war, who, as a German soldier, took part in the memorable campaign of 1870, and was at the siege and capitulation of Paris. Both gentlemen state they are enjoying their visit greatly.

FATAL ACCIDENT YESTERDAY MORNING

GEORGE S. MORTON, OF MOIRA, MET A TERRIBLE DEATH.

Mr. George S. Morton, who resided in the 1st concession of Huntingdon township, near Moira, was yesterday morning the victim of an accident which unfortunately proved fatal in its result.

He, in company with other farm laborers, were engaged in drawing in hay when the whiffle-tree attached to the wagon broke and Mr. Morton, who was near by, received a severe blow in the abdomen from one of the broken pieces of wood. The force of the blow was such as to cause a puncture of the abdomen. Medical aid was summoned as quickly as possible but the unfortunate man's life could not be saved, and last evening he passed away.

Mr. Morton was 54 years of age and was a yeoman who was widely known and highly respected. He was born upon the farm where he met his death. Deceased was a member of the Methodist Church and a member of the Orange Order, under whose auspices the funeral will take place at Moira to-morrow. A widow but no family survive. Four brothers and two sisters are still living.

The unfortunate affair has cast a gloom over that section of the community and the sympathy of a large circle of relatives and acquaintances will be extended to the bereaved relatives.

Successful Picnic.

The steamer Niagara yesterday took a good-sized crowd to 12 O'clock Point, there being two Sunday schools in attendance, namely, Emmanuel Reformed Episcopal and John Street Presbyterian. There were races and games for the children, a baseball match, John St. Church vs. Emmanuel, in which the former was victorious, and altogether a very pleasant day was spent.

A CAPITAL CURE FOR SORE THROAT

Is to use as a gargle a few drops of Polson's Nerviline in sweetened water, and before retiring rub the throat and chest vigorously with Nerviline. By morning the soreness and inflammation will have disappeared entirely. Nerviline drives away the pain and cures sore throat and hoarseness quickly, simply because that's what it's made for. DID SUDDEN FRIGHT KILL GEO. WHALLEY?

THIS IS THE LATEST THEORY ADVANCED IN TORONTO.

Toronto, August 7.—Theorists are still theorizing on the sudden and mysterious death of Geo. Whalley. Some people now believe he was set upon suddenly by a man in the dark cellar of Evans & Co., which was feared by all the employes owing to its evil reputation, the shock of which proved fatal. This would account for the dilation of the pupils of the eyes.

The police are still inclined to the opinion that both men were murdered, and expect to be in a position to bring forward evidence substantiating this at the resumed inquest on September 12th.

BLUE SERGE SUITS.

Blue serge is the fad, nearly everybody is wearing a suit of serge. The Oak Hall never do things by halves. All the new up-to-date lines of serge suits we have. Two good lines $10 and $12, we put strong faith in. You may go to the merchant tailor and pay $18 to $22, and not get as nice a suit.

DIED WITH HIS BOOTS ON

When Hope Was Gone Outlaw Tracy Ended His Own Life.

Rather Than Be Taken Alive He Killed Himself After a Desperate Fight With Eight Men at Long Range With Rifles—Wounded in Right Leg Between Knee and Thigh He Knew That Capture Was Certain.

Spokane, Wash., Aug. 7.—Harry Tracy, the notorious outlaw who escaped with David Merrill from the Oregon Penitentiary at Salem on June 9 after killing three prison guards, killed himself early yesterday morning after being wounded by the rifle of one of the posse in pursuit. Tracy was surrounded in a wheat field near Fellowes, a station on the Washington Central Railroad about 50 miles west of Spokane, last night. Word was sent back to Davenport, the county seat, and a large number of men hurried to the scene.

The posse, under Sheriff Gardener, opened fire on the outlaw and one bullet pierced his right leg between the knee and thigh. About 30 minutes after being wounded he shot himself with one of his revolvers and his body was found yesterday morning after daybreak. The revolver with which he killed himself was grasped tightly in his right hand. When surrounded Tracy engaged in a running battle with his pursuers. His leg was broken by a bullet and an artery bled profusely. He crept into a wheat field and tried to tie up the artery. Becoming desperate, he put a revolver to his head and fired a bullet into his brain. At daylight his body was found, already cold.

The Sheriff's Posse.

The posse that will share the reward was made up as follows: C. A. Starub, deputy sheriff; Dr. E. C. Lantnor, Maurice Smith, attorney; J. J. Morrison, railway section foreman; and Frank Lillengeg. These men, armed to the teeth, set out from Creston Tuesday afternoon. They were working on the information of the Goldfinch youth who had been forcibly made the companion of the Oregon convict for over 21 hours at the ranch of L. B. Eddy on Lake Creek, about three miles from Fellowes, a station on the Washington Central Railway. When within a few hundred yards of the farm they encountered Eddy mowing in one of his fields. While engaging in conversation with him they saw a man issue from the barn door.

Tracy Sighted.

"Is that Tracy?" asked one of the party.

"It surely is," replied Eddy. The party separated, Lantnor and Smith, accompanying Eddy in the direction of the barn, while the other two men swung around on the other side.

Two of the pursuers stepped behind the barn on a slight eminence, from which they could watch everything that went on, and Eddy went up to the door. Tracy came from the barn again and began helping his host to unhitch the horses. He carried no rifle, although he had his revolvers in place. The fugitive finally saw the men carrying rifles and turned sharply to Eddy, asking: "Who are those men?"

"I don't see any men," said Eddy.

Tracy pointed out the two men on the hill. Eddy informed his companion who the men were, and the outlaw made a leap for the barn door. The pursuers, stepping a bit closer, commanded: "Hold up your hands!"

The outlaw jumped behind Eddy and first placed the farmer and his horse between himself and his pursuers. He commanded the farmer to lead his horse to the barn and remained under cover, moving toward shelter.

Last Dash For Liberty.

When near the stable he broke and dashed inside. He quickly reappeared, rifle in hand, and started on a dead run.

Turning on the two men nearest, he fired two shots, but neither took effect. Without waiting, Tracy made a dash down the valley leading south from the barn and headed for the bush.

In an instant the pursuers were after him, firing as they ran. Coming to a rock, Tracy dodged behind it, and, resting his gun on it, he began a fusilade. Eight shots in all were fired by him, not one hitting its mark. Seeing that he was unsuccessful, he bolted for a wheat field near by. At the edge of the field he stumbled, falling on his face, and then crawled into the grain on his hands and knees.

It was growing dark and the pursuers decided to surround the place and wait until daylight.

Yesterday morning Tracy's corpse was found lying amid the grain with his face turned towards the sky. His left hand held the revolver with which he had inflicted the death wound. His right hand firmly grasped the barrel of the famous rifle.

Wild excitement prevails at Davenport, to where the body has been brought. Stores are closed and people are crowding round to get a glimpse of the dead body.

Tracy's Desperate Deeds.

Harry Tracy escaped from the Oregon State Penitentiary at Salem on June 9, with David Merrill, after killing four men, Frank W. Farrell, G. R. T. Jones and B. F. Tiffany, guards, and Frank Ingraham, a convict, who tried to prevent his flight. On June 28 Tracy killed Merrill near Napavine, Wash., by shooting him from behind. He left the body in the forest, where it was found on July 15. On July 3, near Seattle, in a fight with a posse, Tracy shot and killed Charles Raymond, a deputy sheriff, and E. E. Bresse, a policeman, and mortally wounded Neil Rawley, who died on the following day. He also wounded Carl Anderson and Louis Zafrite, newspaper reporters.

Tracy committed many feats of daring during his flight, in the course of which he eluded various posses when apparently surrounded. He held up numerous farmers whom he forced to furnish him with food and clothing. By threats to murder their families, he compelled them to cover up his tracks. Perhaps his greatest show of daring was on July 2 at South Bay, near Olympia, when he held up six men and forced four, including the captain of a large gasoline launch, to embark with him on Puget Sound and pilot him up stream for ten hours.

In 1897 Tracy murdered Valentine Hoge, a Colorado cattleman, and Wm. Strong, a boy, in the same State. A total reward of $5,600 was offered for his arrest, Governor McBride of Washington offering $2,500 for his capture, dead or alive. The State of Oregon offered $3,000, and a brother of one of the guards killed at the penitentiary offered $100.

The reward for Merrill's capture amounted to $1,500, which has been claimed by Mrs. Waggoner, a berry picker, and her son, who found the body near their home.

THE NEW STEEL TRUST.

Guest Keen & Co. the British Corporation to Combine With Canadians.

Montreal, Aug. 7.—It is ascertained that the name of the English corporation that conceived the idea of an amalgamation with the two Canadian steel companies is that of Guest Keen & Co. Under the executive control of this corporation are the great works established by Lord Winborne in Wales, the famous Dowlais Works, the Patent Nut and Bolt Company of the Midlands, and J. H. Nettleford Limited, widely known throughout the world as the Chamberlain firm.

The Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, was a leading member of the last named establishment, but he is not personally associated with the new combination, which it is proposed to form between Great Britain and Canada.

The importance of the announcement may be gauged by the fact that on the strength of it the Dominion Steel and Coal Company shares went up three points yesterday and that the extensive purchase of the first named stock was the feature of the market.

It is impossible as yet to obtain details of the nature of the proposals that are now the subject of negotiations.

G.T.R. Company Approves His Agreement to Build Elevator at Montreal.

Montreal, Aug. 7.—Mr. C. M. Hays, general manager of the Grand Trunk, who is now in England, has advised the head office in this city that the Board of Directors of the company has approved the agreement with the Harbor Commissioners concerning the construction of the big elevator at Windmill Point. The road will expend some $750,000 in making the improvements. The Harbor Commissioners have been officially informed to that effect by Mr. Wainwright.

Arbitrator Gives Up the Job.

Hamilton, Aug. 7.—Rev. C. E. Whitcombe, arbitrator for the Electrical Workers' Union, in connection with the trouble with the Cataract Power Company, threw up the job yesterday, saying, after hours of negotiation, he and the company's arbitrater, Alexander Bruce, were unable to agree on the third arbitrator. The union met last night, the session being a private one. It is understood, however, that a committee of three or four was appointed to wait on General Manager Hawkins this morning and offer to make a compromise. If the offer is not accepted a strike will be ordered tonight. The Railway Men's Union will also go out, it is thought.

Murdered Railway Watchman.

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Aug. 7.—Daniel J. Sweeney, a watchman in the employ of the Deleware and Western Company at their Bliss Colliery in Hanover Township, was found dead in a field yesterday morning. He quit work at midnight and was followed by a score of men. He took refuge in a saloon and waited there for some time. After he thought the crowd that followed him had disappeared he left for his home. This was the last seen of his alive. It is said the coal company will offer a reward of $1,000 for the arrest and conviction of the murderers.

Volunteer Firemen.

Stratford, Aug. 7.—The convention of the Ontario Volunteer Firemen's Association was brought to a conclusion yesterday afternoon. Trenton was chosen as the next place of meeting. W. Smith, Trenton, was elected president, and W. J. Armstrong, Milton, secretary.

Although the medicine business should, above all, be carried on with the utmost conscientiousness and sense of responsibility, the unfortunate fact is that in no other is there so much humbug and deception. The anxieties of the sick and their relatives are traded upon in the most shameful manner; impossible cures are promised; many preparations are also lutely worthless, and some are positively dangerous to health.

As a consequence, all proprietary remedies are regarded with suspicion by many people, and the good suffer for the bad.

GIFT OF 30,000 CHILDREN.

Ottawa, Aug. 7.—Between four and five thousand people last night witnessed the unveiling of the monument erected on City Hall Square by 30,000 school children of the Ottawa Valley in honor of the 13 soldiers from Ottawa who died in South Africa while fighting for the Empire.

It was the occasion of Lord Dundonald's first appearance in Canada, and was made an elaborate military affair, the Ottawa Brigade turning out as a guard of honor.

The unveiling was done by little Marjorie Cook, daughter of Mayor Cook. Mr. George S. May presided and introduced Lord Dundonald.

Lord Dundonald, who was surrounded by the headquartrs officers, arrayed in gorgeous costumes, spoke in splendid voice, which penetrated the outer limits of the vast crowd, and could be heard distinctly. He said:

"Your Worship, Ladies and Gentlemen,—It is now about two years and ten months ago that the Boer Government sent its dictatorial and insulting message to Great Britain. This message was flashed across the seas, and provoked among the British peoule an unparalelled indignation. The word was shortly followed by the blow, and Boer hosts invaded our peaceful colony of Natal and the Cape. I myself saw homesteads as peaceable and pretty as those surrounding your own beautiful city devastated and destroyed by the hand of a savage people. In this undisciplined host, every man was a law unto himself. If he was to steal, he called it commandeering. Our citizens of Natal and the Cape were thus subjected to the most cruel treatment.

"But a mighty wave of indignation was rising, not only in the Mother Country, but in Canada and every British colony. Men were laying down their tools, leaving their farms, leaving their business occupations, to don the khaki and take the rifle in hand. One can hardly realize what it is for a soldier to leave his business to the care of others to face the dangers and take the chances in the field. We honor them for it, and not only these, but others, who thronged in vain the recruiting offices.

"But we are here to-night not only to honor those who went to the front to fight the Empire's battles, but those who laid down their lives for that Empire on the South African veldt. I may say that it was the blood of these men which cemented our Empire with links of iron, and Canada may be assured that just as she sent her sons to help Natal and the Cape, their sons, if Canada ever needs assistance, will stream across the sea to her help.

"I can assure little Marjorie Cook, the daughter of your respected Mayor, who represents 30,000 children, that the friends of the fallen, the citizens of Ottawa, of the Dominion of Canada, of the whole Empire, thank them for the honor bestowed now on those 13 gallant men. It is an honor that no Parliament or no King could bestow for no one could bestow the spontaneous gift of 30,000 children, on behalf of those who fought in South Africa, from the militia of Canada. I thank them for this offering to our gallant comrades."

The string was then pulled by little Miss Cook, which caused the flag to unfold from off the monument and as the handsome bronze figure appeared the crowd gave three lusty cheers. The band then played the Dead March, after which Mayor Cook delivered an eloquent address and the gathering dispersed with the usual cheers. Lord Dundonald's reception was very gracious and enthusiastic.

Canada Needs More Ships.

Midland, Aug. 7.—The Hon. Mr. Tarte arrived here at 6 p.m. yesterday. He took a trip over the harbor. At 8 p.m. a public meeting was held in the town hall. W. H. Bennett, M.P., occupied the chair.

Mr. Tarte said that party politics must be excluded in the discussion of the transportation question, and money must of necessity be expended to such end. It is a question of necessity and it must be faced boldly or the Americans will over-reach us in the race. A question to be faced was the necessity for more Canadian vessels and it was now a debatable question if the building of ships by way of bonus should not be encouraged as in the iron business. Protection to our manufacturers was a necessity and we must follow the lead of the Americans with a tariff framed for Canadian purposes.

Mr. Tarte at Collingwood.

Collingwood, Aug. 7.—Hon. Mr. Tarte was feted here yesterday. He announced that he was about to create a new office in his department and put Mr. Coste at its head. It will deal with the transportation of the Great Lakes.

Winnipeg, Aug. 7.—The store and bank of Dixon Bros., Maple Creek, N.W.T., was robbed of $2,000 last night. No clue to the thieves, who went through two feet of brick wall to get at booty, which was in vault.

TO SUCCEED HICKS-BEACH

T. C. Ritchie's Appointment Is Definitely Settled.

At Least, So It Is Believed by the London Daily Telegraph—Right Hon. Mr. Ritchie Is at Present Home Secretary—Born at Dundee, He Will Reach His Sixty-Fourth Year in November—An Excellent Business Man.

London, Aug. 7.—The Daily Telegraph this morning says it believes it has been definitely settled that the Rt. Hon. C. T. Ritchie, Secretary of State for Home Affairs, will succeed Sir Michael Hicks-Beach as Chancellor of the Exchequer.

The New Chancellor.

The Rt. Hon. Charles Thomson Ritchie, at present Home Secretary, has been one of the chief working members of Lord Salisbury's administration since 1885. Sound, but not brilliant, would probably be the general estimate in which he is held by British politicians. His business qualities, however, are so highly valued that he was a trusted adviser of Queen Victoria, especially since the death of Lord Sydney.

He is a Scotsman by birth, having been born at Dundee in 1839, and reaches his 64th year in November. Both he and his brother are prominent in City of London financial circles, and as the Minister responsible for the drafting and carrying through Parliament of the act creating the London County Council when he was president of the Local Government Board he is closely identified with London's special interests. He entered the House of Commons in 1874, and was first given office as secretary to the Admiralty in 1885. He was president of the Board of Trade from 1885-1890, and was transferred to the Home Office at the beginning of the present Parliament.

EARL OF MARCH FOR IRELAND.

His Appointment as Lord-Lieutenant Is Reported.

Buffalo, N.Y., Aug. 7.—A morning paper yesterday prints the following special cable from London: "The Earl of March has been appointed Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, vice the Earl of Cadogan, resigned. The Earl of March is the eldest son of the Duke of Richmond, and was born December 27, 1845. He was educated at Eton, and entered the army. He was a member of Parliament from West Sussex from 1869-85 and from Southwest Sussex from 1885-88. He is an enthusiastic sportsman."

Another Guess.

London, Aug. 7.—It is considered probable that the Earl of Dudley will succeed Earl Cadogan as Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

BRITAIN'S FOREIGN POLICY.

Government Severely Criticized During Appropriation Bill Discussion.

London, Aug. 7.—In moving the appropriation bill in the House of Commons yesterday, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, explained that he thought that it was desirable to alter one clause of the bill, so as to enable the Chancellor to borrow funds when necessary in temporarily financing the Exchequer, pending the gathering in of the taxes, instead of borrowing on no better security than an "IOU" of the Chancellor as heretofore customary. Sir Michael Hicks-Beach added, that the Government expected to have to borrow £15,000,000 ($75,000,000) to meet a deficiency in the next quarter, and unless the suggested better security could be forthcoming the money market might be seriously discomposed.

During the discussion of the bill, the Government was severely criticized by various members regarding its policy in Europe and in China. It was alleged that Lord Salisbury had quarrelled with France and Spain, had alienated Turkey, had driven Italy into the arms of France, and had failed to resist Russia, while persistently courting Germany with obsequious compliances and one-sided secret treaties.

In the course of a general reply, Viscount Cranborne, Under Secretary of the Foreign Office, made an illuminative reference to the treaty with Germany by saying that if a secret existed it was secret, therefore it followed necessarily that the Government could not publish the terms thereof. He denied the alleged quarrels with European powers, declaring that the position of Great Britain was in no way insecure, and that her influence was high.

The Government was striving, said Viscount Cranborne, to restore a normal state of affairs in China as speedily as possible. He thought the sooner Shanghai was evacuated by the international forces the better, as there was no reason why they should stay. The Government had proposed evacuation to other powers but it was quite impossible for Great Britain to evacuate alone. In that, as in all other respects, Great Britain must have the most favored nation treatment. The Government had hoped that negotiations for a commercial treaty would be successfully concluded before now.

Geese That Lay Golden Eggs.

Once upon a time there was a promoter who owned a common, everyday goose who laid the usual, ordinary goose eggs. He conceived the scheme of syndicating the goose on a gold egg basis and proceeded to do so.

He informed the trusting public that soon his goose would lay an egg of gold each day and offered for sale stock in the Golden Goose Egg company, limited, at bedrock prices. There was a wild rush for the stock, and the promoter suddenly found himself wealthy.

He continued to sell the stock as long as there were buyers, for he did not want to kill the goose that laid the egg. His goose continued the same ordinary fowl as before.

Moral.—There are featherless geese that lay golden eggs.

Ministers' Maids.

"Are you a minister's wife?" was a query encountered so frequently by a young matron in search of a maid that she scented a story.

"Why this mania to live under the droppings of the sanctuary?" inquired the matron or words to that effect.

Then it appeared that the minister's family is considered a most desirable place because of the opportunities for witness fees in wedding cases. There are few bridegrooms who come without a witness to be married who will not bestow a generous tip upon the girl who furnishes this small but necessary feature of the ceremony.

Would Give Him a Lesson.

A reporter who is the father of a year old youngster met his pastor on Sunday afternoon.

"Why weren't you at church this morning?" was the first question of the spiritual adviser.

"I couldn't come," was the answer. "I had to stop at home and mind the baby. Our nurse is ill."

"That's no excuse," said the pastor.

"It isn't? Well, next Sunday I'll bring him to church with me and see how you like it."

Appropriate.

The professor of painting has just entered the classroom, where smoking is strictly prohibited. Here he finds an art student holding in his hand a newly filled cherry wood pipe.

Professor (ironically)—What a queer paint brush you have got there! What are you going to do with it?

Student—Oh, I'm going to make clouds with it!

Very Irritating.

"Once in awhile, even now," remarked the caller, "you hear of some Englishman who says our Revolutionary war was 'the most causeless rebellion in history.' Isn't is irritating?"

"Decidedly so," responded the Boston young woman. "If a thing is causeless, how can it be any more causeless?"

The Whole Thing.

"Bixby seems to think he's the whole thing as an expert authority on sporting matters."

"Yes; he appears to regard himself as pretty nearly big enough to wear golf links to fasten his shirt cuffs."

Russian Police Regulations.

One of the regulations of the Russian police refers to the censorship of price lists of goods, notes of invitation to parties and personal visiting cards; also for the censorship of seals, rubber stamps and business cards of individuals or corporations. Another order regulates the sale of soap, starch, toothbrushes and insect powder, and another controls the printing on the paper used in making cigarettes.

The Only Way.

"Ah, Reginald, dearest," she sighed, "but how can I be sure that you will not grow weary of me after we have been married a little while?"

"I don't know," he answered, "unless we get married and see."

A Possibility.

"So you refused him?" said Maud.

"Yes," replied Mabel. "I told him I shall send back any letters unopened."

"I wouldn't be so rude. There might be theater tickets in some of them!"

There is a wide difference in getting what we think we deserve and getting what is in store for us sometimes.—Pittsburg Gazette.

SWEATING OF THE FEET

"FOOT ELM" CHECKS THE EXCESSIVE PERSPIRATION AND DESTROYS THE DISAGREEABLE ODORS.

A good many people suffer from excessive perspiration of the feet, armpits and other parts of the body. Not only is the perspiration an inconvenience in itself, but on account of the musty and sour odor that results, it is a source of great distress and discomfort.

"Foot Elm" dusted in the shoes or wherever the perspiration is troublesome, allays the excessive activity of the sweat glands, prevents disagreeable odors—cools, soothes and sweetens.

Broke the Rule.

A Boston man recently regaled a party of friends with a story about a certain nameless club in Boston which has strict regulations against gambling.

A quartet of club members decided to break that rule by a game of poker for small stakes. So they adjourned to one of the small rooms of the club and called the old colored servant to bring a pack of cards. When he brought them, one of the members queried:

"John, I suppose it would be something utterly new in this club if we should do such a thing as play for money with these cards?"

The negro scratched his head and deliberated, finally answering:

"Boss, I'ze been wid dis club a long time and I'ze seen many things."

"Yes, but what have you seen?"

"I'ze seen ebry rule ob dis club vi'lated 'ceptin' one."

"What rule is that one?"

"De rule 'gainst gibbin' tips to de serbants."

And straightway that rule was relieved of its lonesomeness among its fellows.

A Concession In Price.

"People in frontier towns," said a Klondike pioneer, "get used to paying big money for trifles, and $2 for a box of sardines and $5 for a pound of bad coffee become reasonable prices. I kicked once upon a time because the price asked was too small. It was like this; I had a jumping toothache, was nearly wild with it, when I went to the shanty where I was told there was a dentist. A rough looking fellow told me that he was it, and I asked him to draw my tooth. He looked me over, got his forceps fastened on my tooth and yanked it out after a couple of hard twists.

"'How much?' I asked.

"'Well, $2, I guess,' said the dentist.

"I paid him, although my jaw still ached pretty badly.

"'That's the cheapest thing I've seen around here,' I said.

"'Well,' he said, 'I thought I'd make it low because, on account of the bad light, I pulled the wrong tooth.'

"I had to go the next day to have the bad tooth out, and he made matters square by charging me $10."

The Inventor of the Cork.

Don Perignon, a poor blind monk, first thought of cork for bottle stoppers. He was employed in a royal monastery as overseer of the extensive vineyards, being himself a manufacturer. Indeed, it is said he discovered by experimenting with wines and grape juices that highly effervescing beverage known as champange. Necessity in his case was doubtless the mother of his inventing the cork stopper, for his champagne must have needed a better stopper than was then used—merely a bunch of flax soaked in oil. If he was the first to put a cork into a bottle, the world is indebted to him, since its impermiability, elasticity and lightness render it invaluable for this use.

How Ney Faced Death.

Marshal Ney was the son of a hardworking cooper and had risen from the ranks of the army. He was a child of the people, and whatever may have been his vanities he threw them all aside in his last days.

When he was led out to death, an officer ordered a bandage tied over his eyes.

"Why should you do that?" said Ney. "Haven't I been accustomed for twenty-five years to look bullets and cannon balls in the face?"

He himself ordered the soldiers to fire, standing and facing them.

His career summed up in one life the spectacular heroism of the past.

Sippets.

Sippets, mentioned often in English stories, may be either of bread or of toast. Sippets of toast are thin oblongs of bread toasted to a golden brown, slightly battered and piled in one or two layers, log cabin fashion, without breaking, on a folded napkin; or the sippets are of untoasted bread arranged on a hot plate, the juice from roasted beef or mutton poured over.

A Weather Glass.

A simple weather glass is made thus: Obtain a glass jar, such as is used for pickles, and put some water into it; then get a bottle with a long neck, if possible, and put it in the jar, with the neck downward, till the mouth just touches the water. When the water rises in the bottle, it is going to rain, and when it is down fine weather prevails.

Expanded Them.

"What does this mean, daughter? Here is another lot of milliners' and dressmakers' bills. Don't you remember that I expressly ordered you not to contract any more debts without my knowledge?"

"Certainly, papa, but I haven't contracted any debts. On the contrary, I've expanded them."

He Found It Was.

Judge (to prisoner)—You are charged with having seriously injured your wife by inclosing her in a folding bed. What have you to say for yourself?

Prisoner—Your honor, I wished to see if it was possible to shut her up.

Unkind.

"I think," she said, "I should like to marry an imaginative man."

"Well," said her friend, speaking very sweetly, "what other kind of a man can you expect to marry, if he has a chance to see you in daylight?"

Do you roast people to their face or behind their backs? The last trick is cowardly, the other foolish.—Atchison Globe.

FACT AND RUMOR.

The Story of One Postponed Cabinet Council In England.

Cabinet councils give rise at times to rumors that dodge fact and mislead public expectancy. One of Lord Beaconsfield's supplies a case in point. Queen Victoria, so runs the tale, was anxious about the state of wind and wave in the mid-Atlantic, which the Princess Louise happened then to be crossing. A lord in waiting knew a professor who was a weather diviner, and to him he went with a message from her majesty, who sent also a message to Lord Beaconsfield. The lord in waiting was sent to a theatrical supper—it was Sunday night—in search of the professor. Him he found in this lively company and was himself constrained to listen to the game of words that was passing round. Which would they choose if they had to marry, Gladstone or Disraeli? All said "Disraeli" except one, and she said "Gladstone, so that I might elope with Disraeli and break his heart."

The lord in waiting, much diverted, went forth and, finding Disraeli in rather low spirits, told him this tale as an instance of his great popularity with all classes of the queen's subjects. The whimsicality of the thing was congenial to Disraeli, who was kept waiting next day at a cabinet council for the arrival of an important colleague. To pass the time he told the assembled ministers the story of the theatrical supper. Lord Cairns (absit omen), hearing, did not smile, and his solemnity put out of countenance the prime minister, who at once made the nonarrival of the colleague an excuse for postponing the council for a couple of hours. The "balance of power" was then unstable, and that afternoon the papers had headings: "War Imminent. A Second Cabinet Council Summoned." For once the ladies of the stage made history and staggered the Stock Exchange

TOWN HAD OFFSETS.

So His Claim For Damages Brought In Only $119.34.

"I had been knocking about a Kansas town in the evening," said a drummer with a limp, "and in heading for my hotel I walked plump into an open sewer which had no red light of warning.

"I had a bad fall and broke my hip, and I wasn't yet out of the sewer when I made up my mind to sue for $20,000 damages. I was taken to the hospital, and next day the city attorney called on me to know what I was going to do.

"'I am going to sue the town, of course,' I replied.

"'But what for?' he asked.

"'For personal damages. There should have been a railing or a light, but there was neither, and my injury will lay me up for weeks.'

"'But don't you know what you escaped by falling into the sewer?' he asked.

"'No.'

"'Then let me tell you that the roof of the hotel fell in last night and killed three men, and if you had been in your bed you would have been crushed to pulp. You really owe this town something instead of talking about damages.'

"When able to get out," continued the drummer, "I found that public opinion was against me and the people ready to stand a suit, and by advice of a lawyer I settled the case for $125.

"I didn't even get all that. In tumbling into the sewer I broke two planks and brought on a cavein, and the damages were assessed at $5.66 and taken out of the money."

Resourcefulness of Chinese Cooks.

If there is one sphere of European domestic life in which more than another, says a traveler, the Chinaman finds scope for the exercise of his own peculiar ingenuity, without doubt it is in the regions dedicated to the pursuit of the culinary art. Here he will allow no obstacle to daunt him, no unforeseen contingency to catch him unawares. Should you, having ordered two chops for the dinner of yourself and your wife, suddenly, all unthinking, bring in a friend to share your humble meal, you will find the cook out of two chops has miraculously created a third —created it so skillfully out of odds and ends of meat deftly strung together that only the practiced eye may discern the difference.

Beefsteak on the Gridiron.

Sitting on the balcony of the Anglo-American club, Brussels, a Yankee and an Englishman spent a lazy afternoon guying each other on racial and national foibles and traits. The conversation veered into flags. "Yours," drawled the Britisher, "reminds me of nothing so much as a gridiron, a deuced big gridiron, dontcherknow!" "And yours," was the quick come back from the American, "reminds me forcibly of a beefsteak—a darned big beefsteak, but not so big that we can't cook it on our gridiron!"

Inherited the Business.

"Oi'm descinded from Brian Born, ma'am, Oi'd hov ye know," declared the haughty Mrs Fitz Clancey.

"Is thot all indade?" replied Mrs. Casey, the humble lady of the corner fruit stand "Faith Oi'm a descindant of Eve the first apple woman!"

For No Living Man.

Examining Counsel—What do you for a living?

"Don't do anything for a living soul. I'm an undertaker."

The Difficult Part.

Husband—I don't believe you can keep account of the money you spend.

Wife—Oh, yes, I can. It's the money I cannot keep.

[illegible]

In Cardinal Wolsey's palace no less than 280 beds were provided for strangers, with superb canopies and curtains of silk or velvet. There were bedsteads of alabaster, quilts of down and pillowcases embroidered with silk and gold. The chairs of state were covered with cloth of gold; the tables and cabinets were of the most costly woods. Much of the splendid furniture was emblazoned with "my lord's arms." Everywhere was impressed the cardinal's hat. The same magnificence appeared in the decorations and ornaments of the chapel, but the forty-four gorgeous copes of one suit and the rest of the sacerdotal pomp displayed there were eclipsed by the majesty of Wolsey's secular equipment.

The annual expenses of his household exceeded £30,000, an immense sum for those days. His retinue of 500 persons, his kingly stud, his sumptuous open table, are mentioned in every history. When he rode to and from Westminster in his character of lord chancellor, his mule was attended by a long train of nobles and knights on horseback; his pursuivant, ushers and other officers led the way in rich liveries, while footmen with gilded poleaxes brought up the rear.

The Mississippi 400,000 Years Ago.

Did you ever figure on what was the probable condition of the great Mississippi river 10,000, 100,000 or even 400,000 years ago? Scientists suggest that the erosion of its bed was accomplished by a mighty cataract, which began far down the river, probably at the place where it then emptied into the gulf, and by gradual retrogression dug out the valleylike gorge through which it now flows. That this theory is tenable may be inferred from the high, wall-like bluffs, features so characteristic of the upper part of its course.

A wearing away of a monster cataract would of course necessarily leave high walls or bluffs on either side. These are the well known features of the father of meandering streams. It would seem, according to this theory, that St. Anthony's falls constitute the remnant of what was once the most stupendous cataract in the world. Geologists estimate that it has taken the river 400,000 years to carve out the mighty ditch through which it now flows.

Bones For Bread.

There is an interesting child's story called "Jack the Giant Killer," in which one of the giants is supposed to use the expression "fe-faw-fum," or something like it, when Jack has climbed a beanstalk and been hidden by the giant's wife, the rest of the growl being, "I smell the blood of an Englishman, but be he alive or be he dead I'll take his bones to make my bread." Possibly it has not occurred to many to ask where the idea of making bread out of bones originated, as we do not often seriously investigate fairy tales. It is a historical fact that during the siege of Paris by Henry IV., owing to famine, bread, which had been sold while any remained for more than $1 a pound, was made from the bones in the charnel house of the Holy Innocent This occurred in 1594.

Napoleon III. and His Cigarettes.

The most obstinate of cigarette smokers was the Emperor Napoleon III. It is an error to suppose that he was ambitious. A fatalist, he followed a plan which he imagined had been traced in advance. At Sedan, when the end came, he calmly lit a cigarette. Hugo's epic anger against him had a large element of irritation at the man's supreme calmness. Hugo was not a cigarette smoker. He never understood, he could not understand, him. Zola, who was a cigarette smoker and who ceased in order that he might become a great workman, understood and described Napoleon III. in "La Debacle" perfectly.

Usual Result.

Mrs. Gabb—Dear me! There comes my husband. There won't be a whole piece of furniture left in the house by midnight.

Mrs. Gadd—Horrors! Does he drink, and is that a case of whisky he is carrying?

Mrs. Gabb—No, he doesn't drink. That's a new box of tools.

Meant the Same.

Doctor—I found the patient to be suffering from abrasion of the cuticle, tumefaction, ecchymosis and extravasation in the integument and cellular tissue about the left orbit.

Judge—You mean he had a black eye?

Doctor—Yes.—Judge.

Its Value.

"What was the matter with Mrs. Scadds?" inquired the doctor's wife.

"Oh, a cold," he replied.

"Very bad?"

"Yes; disgustingly so—just one of those simple little things that you can't possibly get more than two visits out of."

Pat Definition.

In a Liverpool school lately a number of scholars were asked to explain the meaning of the term "righteous indignation."

One little chap replied:

"Being angry without cussing."

Nothing Doing.

"What is the matter with Bills?"

"Worrying over business affairs."

"I didn't know he had any business."

"That's it. He hasn't."

A Personal Reflection.

"I see villain in your face," said a judge to a prisoner.

"May it please you honor," said the latter, "that is a personal reflection."

THE PUBLIC should bear in mind that Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil has nothing in common with the impure, deteriorating class of so-called medicinal oils. It is eminently pure and really efficacious—relieving pain and lameness, stiffness of the joints and muscles, and sores or hurts, besides being an excellent specific for rheumatism, coughs and bronchial complaints.

Many beds have the appearance of comfort, but no amount of clothing can warm a cold heart.

A WONDERFUL CURE.—Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes; "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly to cure the sore but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, so I got a bottle and when I had used about one-half, the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done, it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very bilious habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. But since using 3 bottles of the Vegetable Discovery, the biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 60 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know."

The Flagging Energies Revived.—Constant application to business is a tax upon the energies, and if there be not relaxation, lassitude and depression are sure to intervene. These come from stomachic troubles. The want of exercise brings on nervous irregularities, and the stomach ceases to assimilate food properly. In this condition Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will be found a recuperative of rare powder, restoring the organs to healthful action, dispelling depression, and reviving the flagging energies.

The man who can keep his mouth shut has the best of the argument with all women.

Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial is a speedy cure for dysentery, diarrhoea, cholera, summer complaint, sea sickness and complaints incidental to children teething. It gives immediate relief to those suffering from the effects of indiscretion in eating unripe fruit, cucumbers, etc. It acts with wonderful rapidity and never fails to conquer the disease. No one need fear cholera if they have a bottle of this medicine convenient.

Sometimes the most charitable view of others is that they ought to be in the insane asylum.

Sleeplessness.—When the nerves are unstrung and the whole body given up to wretchedness, when the mind is filled with gloom and dismal forebodings, the result of derangement of the digestive organs, sleeplessness comes to add to the distress. If only the subject could sleep, there would be the oblivion for a while and temporary relief. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will not only induce sleep, but will act so beneficially that the subject will wake refreshed and restored to happiness.

The wonder is there are not more kicking horses, since there are so many men who kick without discrimination.

These two desirable qualifications, pleasant to the taste and at the same time effectual, are to be found in Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator, Children like it.

A peppery temper is not a thing to be sneezed at.

When all other preparations fail, try Holloway's Corn Cure. No pain whatever, and no inconvenience in using it.

People who sleep with sin will not be able to wash away the marks of it.

To get relief from indigestion, biliousness, constipation or torpid liver without disturbing the stomach or purging the bowels, take a few doses of Carter's Little Liver Pills, they will please you.

In the British Army 129 officers are qualified as interpreters in French, 106 in Russian, 81 in German, but only one in Dutch.

That tired, languid feeling and dull headache is very disagreeable. Take two of Carter's Little Liver Pills before retiring, and you will find relief. They never fail to do good.

Icebergs in the North Atlantic usually appear about February 15 and are seen more or less frequently until about June 15.

They make one feel as though life was worth living. Take one of Carter's Little Liver Pills after eating; it will relieve dyspepsia, aid digestion, give tone and vigor to the system.

Up to the present slower progress is being made with the construction of the Edward VII. than of any warship built at Davenport.

Nothing so suddenly obstructs the perspiration as sudden transitions from heat to cold. Heat rarifies the blood, quickens the circulation and increases the perspiration, but when these are suddenly checked the consequences must be bad. The most common cause of disease is obstructed perspiration, or what commonly goes by the name of catching cold. Coughs, colds, sore throat, etc., if attended to in time are easily subdued, but if allowed to run their own course generally prove the fore-runner of more dangerous diseases. Nine-tenths of the consumptives date their afflictions from a neglected cold, and the diseases that are caused by wet feet, damp clothes, or exposure are more numerous than are generally supposed. One of the most efficacious medicines for all diseases of the throat and lungs is Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, which frees the lungs from viscid phlegm by changing the secretions from a diseased to a healthy state.

HIS SUMMER VACATION.

Summer vacation is to a man the bright, particular pleasure spot of the year. But go prepared. Have the clothing to enjoy it properly; better see us before you start. There never were nicer summer suits than the kind we are now selling.

You Are Not So Warm

As you will be during the next few weeks. Why not be one of the comfortable people who wear our cool clothes? Can't even give a summary of the "summer things," but the store is full of them. Things that suggest cool, green fields, shady woods, babbling brooks, country lanes—and all the charming pictures that flit across the minds of a brain-weary and vacation-hungry man.

HIS OPPORTUNITY CAME.

(Chicago Tribune.)

A sudden gust of wind blew the hat from the head of the grey-haired passenger in the hindmost seat of the street car and carried it scurrying over the muddy road far in the rear. He rose to grasp the bell rope, but a prosperous-looking man sitting next to him grasped him by the coat tail.

"Don't do it," said the prosperous-looking man. "Let it go. It was a straw hat, wasn't it?"

"Yes," said the grey-haired passenger, "but great snakes, it's all I've got! What will I——"

"My friend," interrupted the other, whipping a small bundle from a side pocket and proceeding to open it out, "try this on."

"What is it?"

"It's a twenty-dollar Panama hat. How does it fit?"

"It fits well enough, but——"

"Then keep it, sir; keep it! Ever since my butler began to wear one like it I've been trying to give this one away, but nobody will have it. It'll do to wear till you get down town, where you can buy a decent straw hat. No, I don't want any thanks. I regard this as a providential opportunity to get rid of the thing. Does it go? All right. You have done me a great favor sir."

And the car sped on.

DOES IT PAY TO BUY CHEAP?

A cheap remedy for coughs and colds is all right, but you want something that will relieve and cure the more severe and dangerous results of throat and lung troubles. What shall you do? Go to a warmer and more regular climate? Yes, if possible; if not possible for you, then in either case take the ONLY remedy that has been introduced in all civilized countries with success in severe throat and lung troubles, "Boschee's German Syrup." It not only heals and stimulates the tissues to destroy the germ disease, but allays inflammation, causes easy expectoration, gives a good night's rest and cures the patient. Try ONE bottle. Recommended many years by all druggists in the world. You can get this reliable remedy at R. Templeton & Co's.

ROSS' POSITION.

"A Conservative newspaper," says the London Free Press, "is quoted as admitting the right of Premier Ross to dissolve the newly-elected Assembly before holding a session, according to the precedent of the Mackenzie Government of 1873."

If "a Conservative newspaper" made such an admission, or even suggestion, which we doubt, it proves that the writer was in utter ignorance of the facts. Sir John A. Macdonald in 1865, though having a majority in the House of Commons, resigned the Premiership and Alex. Mackenzie was called upon to form a Government. Having secured the granting of supplies, Mr. Mackenzie prorogued the House, and knowing he could not carry on the Government of the country with the House as then constituted, appealed to the people. This course was constitutional and proper.

To argue or state that the Hon. George Washington Ross' position is in any way analagous to that of Mr. Mackenzie's is to argue or state a falsity. Under the present circumstances Mr. Ross appealed to the people for support, and though having a supposed majority of one elected to support him, he had between 6000 and 7000 majority of votes recorded against him and his Government.

To grant him, under the circumstances, a second appeal to the country would be a gross abuse of the prerogative vested in the Lieutenant-Governor.

If Mr. Ross can carry on the Government of Ontario with a machine majority of one in the Legislature, and 7000 of the popular vote against him, he may do so, but it would bea most extraordinary position for any public man to hold. Nothing, however, that he or his party may do will surprise the people of Ontario. Mr. Ross' duty is clear, he should resign, and, if the incoming Government could not secure a majority in the Legislature to support its policy, an appeal to the people would be correct; a right which any constitutional Governor would give.

Hamilton Times: Salisbury left Balfour a legacy of evil in the Education Bill. It is a reversion to fifteenth century methods, and is not likely to be tamely submitted to by Englishmen.

The fact that the Times falls foul of the Bill in question convinces us that it must be a very excellent measure. Nothing of any real and lasting good was ever introduced in Canadian public affairs that was not opposed tooth and nail by the Grits. They opposed the C. P. R., and behold it built up Canada; they opposed the National Policy, yet they are now enforcing a tariff almost identical with its provisions; they opposed the proposed fast line of steamships, yet they are now negotiating for one on practically the same lines. A column could be filled with like instances. Taking into consideration, therefore, that Canadian Grit papers oppose the British Education Bill, we are forced to the conclusion that it must be a most excellent measure.

Belleville, August 6.—A Belleville dealer has received from an English house an order for a million barrels of Canadian apples, the largest order ever received in this country. In a season of comparative scarcity, such a large order would nearly equal the whole of the crop, but the indications are that this season's apple crop will be very heavy.

The Intelligencer this morning saw Mr. H. Ackerman, bookkeeper for R. J. Graham & Co., and learned from him that in all probability the report was a nonsensical canard. "In the first place," Mr. Ackerman said, "a man who would undertake to fill that order would need a million dollars' capital. I don't know anyone in Belleville who has that. We did receive an enquiry a few days ago in regard to filling an order for 100,000 barrels, but the contract was not closed. There is, however, a slight difference between a million barrels and one hundred thousand." Mr. Ackerman also expressed regret at seeing such an item in print, as it might very easily influence the trade.

"Loyal Canadian" writes: "I am entirely in sympathy with the ideas expressed in Timely Topics last night. I think we ought to do something spontaneous in the way of a procession on Monday night. I do not advocate going to any expense, but simply a procession by the military, Veterans and the different loyal societies. The procession might take place before the fireworks display at the Corby Driving Park, and need have no connection with it. I certainly think it would be a pity if something were not done to commemorate the crowning of our King. Surely our loyalty did not all evaporate because His Majesty fell ill and for a time lay at death's door. I, as a veteran, feel more like celebrating now than I did on the 26th of June. All that is needed is for somebody to start the ball rolling. Who will do it?

We don't know, but it seems to be up to the military and the Veterans. The former wear the King's uniform, the latter wear medals gained for gallant defence of their country. If anything looking to a display of loyalty is to be put under way it might very properly emanate from either of the above bodies.

"It's all very well to talk of municipal improvements and so on," said an Alderman this morning, "but the fact remains that if people would take the trouble to drive a nail in the sidewalks in front of their houses, cut down the weeds or fill up a small hole in the roadway before it got to be a big one, the City would look much better. Providence, you know helps those who help themselves. The present Council believes in following in the footsteps of Providence, and helping those who make a little personal effort, instead of sitting still and shouting for public works employees."

Ald. C. N. Sulman has set an excellent precedent for Belleville people, he having presented to the City a beautiful Union Jack to be flown on the City Hall. The flag will, we understand, be hoisted for the first time on Coronation day, and Ald. Sulman, in recognition of his generosity, will, at to-morrow night's Committee meeting, be requested to haul it up. This, as the Chairman of Markets naively remarks, shows what can be done when the City has an economical Council, backed up by a generous Alderman like Mr. Sulman.

Assay Office Notes

LABORATORY REPORT FOR JULY.

The laboratory report of the Ontario Government Assay Office, located at Belleville, and conducted by the Bureau of Mines for the assistance of prospectors and development of mineral lands, shows a total receipt of 112 samples sent in for examination during the month of July.

The assays and analytical determinations aggregated 335, each checked off by a duplicate in order to avoid errors before issuing certificates. Of these 90 were for gold, 62 silver, 18 nickel, 24 copper, etc.

Twelve samples of iron ores from different parts of Ontario were received for partial or complete examination as to smelting quality.

Eight samples of raw and briqueted peat were received for analysis as to quality for fuel purposes.

The Bureau of Mines required 90 determinations on which no fees were collected, 275 being done for private parties. The custom work for the public is done at about actual cost, fees collected from this source amounting to $212.30 for July.

Thirty-four samples for identification, or report as to probable commercial value, as well as for qualitative examinations, were received, on which fees amounting to $12.00 were collected. No charge is made for such examinations on samples brought personally to the laboratory.

Report for 7 Months of Current Year.

For the 7 months ending 31st July about 1500 samples have been received at the Assay Office for examination as to commercial value. Part of the samples were for preliminary examination while others were for complete report.

The assays and analytical determinations aggregated 2,034 each, done in duplicate. Of these 511 were ordered by the Bureau of Mines on reports which are on hand affecting the commercial and industrial value of several mineral deposits in different parts of the Province. 1512 were done for the public in Ontario on which nominal fees amounting to $1220 were collected, the fees only covering cost of making determinations.

Identifications and preliminary examinations were made aggregating 234, not including about 200 made for parties calling at the office of which no record is kept.

The cost of running the laboratory for the 7 months has been about $2,000. Machinery and new apparatus to the value of $1,000 has been added recently, increasing the efficiency of the office in many ways.

Laboratory assistants now number four, generally from technical schools.

The annual report of the Bureau of Mines for 1901 is in print and promises to be the largest and most useful report ever issued by this Bureau which was started 11 years ago.

Demand for Technical Knowledge in Canada.

During the past four years the Assay Office has employed students as assistants and former assistants are employed at present in different parts of the world as follows:

(1) A. F. Huffman, mining engineer, Dawson City, Yukon.

(3) C. C. Dickson, head assayer and mine surveyor, Le Roi Mine, Rossland, B.C.

(4) R. A. Cartwright, assistant mine foreman, Cripple Creek, Colorado.

(5) C. W. Dickson, post-graduate student, Columbia School of Mines, New York City, and holder of a scholarship giving him privilege, with expenses paid, and working out any scientific problem having an industrial bearing. This scholarship is given to each university throughout the British Empire by the creation of a fund at the Colonial Exhibition of 1851, held in London, Eng., and the result has been the discovery of many well known processes and engineering possibilities.

(6) G. C. Reid, South African Gold Fields.

(7) L. L. Bolton, geologist for Crown Lands Department, now in Hudson's Bay Territory, exploring unorganized territory.

(8) A. G. Burrows, engineer and geologist for Canada Corundum Co., Renfrew, Ont., the largest producing corundum mine in existence.

There is at present a remarkable demand for technically educated young men at present in Canada, due to the rapid expansion of manufacturing, exploration, mining enterprises, etc., together with utilization of water powers and electrical transportation.

THE REAL ENGLISHMAN.

HIS CHARACTERISTICS AS SEEN BY MAX O'RELL.

The Englishman does nothing by halves. His favorite adjective is the adjective thorough. The more difficulties he has to surmount the more he feels in his element. He is a curious mixture of lion, mule and octopus. We have some experience of him on the continent. If we take an Englishman to visit the ruins of some old castle or cathedral he will not rest until he has thrust his nose into every nook and cranny of the place and climbed the most crumbling walls at the risk of breaking his neck over and over again.

He has seen nothing if he has not seen the lot. And we consider ourselves lucky if he has not profited by our backs being turned for a moment to go and hoist the Union Jack on top of some lonely tower. That is his little weakness, and one which makes him somewhat inconvenient; but if you want to be successful in this world, the first thing you have got to learn is how to make yourself at home everywhere.

Truly a strange being, and always an interesting subject of study, is this same Englishman, with his eccentricities, his contradictions, his sterling qualities and his amazing fads. A man, capable of combining a thousand different personages, of playing all over the world a thousand different parts, of doing in Rome (to use his own words) as the Romans do; extreme in all his acts, presenting the most striking contrasts, but always guided by reason and by common sense. Fiery patriot, never admitting that he has been beaten, yet calmly bearing humiliations while awaiting the propitious moment for taking his innings.

In his Established Church, crying at the top of his voice that he is "a miserable sinner"! outside that church a man who, if you were to take him at his word, would knock you down on the spot. Worshipper of Mammon and Jehovah, a man most concerned in the interests of the next world and most wrapped up in the concerns of this.

In the singular, a man upon whose word you can rely as you would upon a trusty sword; in the plural, as a nation—well, let us say the shrewdest of diplomatists. The staunchest monarchist, yet the freest man in the world, from which we may conclude that liberty is not incompatible with a monarchical form of Government. Worshipping his old monarchy, devoted to his old institutions, but ravenous for justice and freedom, he would be ready again to-day to demolish both monarchy and constitution, as he did in the seventeenth century, if his liberty ran the least danger.

In politics possessing two virtues which are indispensable to the prosperity of a nation, the respect of the law and the respect of power clearly manifested. A man who is ever ready to listen to the other side of every question and invariably bows to the decision of a majority. Refusing to submit to despotism in any shape or form, he himself keeps in order and discipline all his paid guides and governors. To every one to whom he pays a salary, from the sovereign to the most humble citizen, he says: "Please to remember that you are not a master, but a servant of the people."

Big Loss to Photographers.

Some idea of the loss which falls on the photographic fraternity in England by the King's lamentable illness may be gathered by the consideration of the cinematographers. One firm alone secured in and at the Solent no less than 20 London "pitches" or locations. For only one of these no less than £150 was paid. Probably the total bill for special positions would not be far short of £1,000. In order to cope with a large and immediate demand the printing premises were enlarged to three times their ordinary size, and an equivalent addition of apparatus and skilled labor was contracted for. In connection with this cinematographer lantern displays were "billed" for a week in many of the large towns, in which the chief attractions were to have been cinematographs of the processions and of the naval review. Mr. J. Williamson affords another example. To keep abreast of the demand he had brought up his staff of specialists from Hove, and installed it in a London factory, where it would have worked night and day in the preparation of miles of film. On the morning preceding the day that was to have been, determined not to go away empty, Mr. Williamson perched a cinematograph on a motor-car, and, traversing the route, took a thousand feet of salient decorations and the never-ending crowds of sightseers.

Don't Judge by Appearances.

The gentleman who had looked on wine when it was red sat him down in the corner of the street car in Toronto the other day. His silk hat was pulled over his forehead at a Bacchanalian angle, his necktie was twisted and his coat collar was turned up. In one corner of his mouth he held a cigar which had long since ceased to burn. The conductor approached him.

"No smokin'," said the conductor briefly.

The man straightened himself and surveyed the conductor severely.

"Conduct," he said, thickly, "I ain't smokin'."

"Well, you've got a cigar in your mouth," urged the conductor.

"Conduct," asserted the intoxicated gentleman with dignity, "I've got pistol in pocket, but I ain't shootin'. Got money in purse, but I ain't spendin'. Got feet in shoes, but I ain't walkin'. Conduct', learn to look below the surface of things."

Permanent Fences.

Get permanent fences about the buildings, use good posts, set solid and some substantial woven wire fencing. Make the fence hog and bull proof and then you will have some satisfaction with it. A few acres fenced for hog pasture, seeded down to Brome grass, is a good investment.

Controlling Chrysanthemum Rust.

This disease has been very prevalent in some parts of the middle west, and Prof. J. C. Arthur in Bulletin 85, Indiana experiment station, discusses methods of controlling it. He calls attention to the fact that it is a fungous disease and has been known in this country for a number of years. It appears only upon a true chrysanthemum and not upon daisies, costmary or any of the allied species. It appears to be a native of Japan and was introduced through commercial agencies. In this country it does not spread rapidly and consequently ought to be easily controlled where ordinary care is given to the plants. Hand-picking with a total destruction of badly diseased plants when it does appear, should be effective and wholly eradicate the trouble within a year or two. Spray all plants frequently with Bordeaux mixture or sulphide of potash. This will assist in checking the fungus.

So Nervous Could Not Rest

HAD SPLITTING HEADACHES AND SYSTEM WAS WEAK AND RUN-DOWN.

DR. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD

Study these symptoms. They are for your guidance. You may not have them all, but if you have any of them your nervous system is not up to the mark, and a little extra expenditure of nerve force may bring the dreadful downfall.

Intolerance of motion, noise and light; twitching of the muscles of the face and eyelids; fatiguing sleep, sudden startings and jerkings of the limbs; dizziness and flashes of light before the eyes; irritability and restlessness in every part of the body; headache, indigestion, feelings of weariness and depression, and loss of interest in the affairs of life.

So long as the daily expenditure of nerve force is greater than the daily income, physical bankruptcy is certain to result sooner or later. Nerve force must be increased, and this can best be accomplished by the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, because it contains in concentrated form the very elements of nature which go directly to form nervous energy.

Mrs. G. Thompson, 240 Munroe St., Toronto, Ont., states: "I was very much run down in health, and whenever I exerted myself more than usual I had severe attacks of splitting headache, and was very nervous, so much so that I could not rest well at nights. After using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I found that my nerves were steadied; I could rest and sleep better than I have for a long time, and was entirely free of headaches. I can speak very highly of this preparation for nervous trouble."

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

THE GIRLS OF KASHMIR.

Why They Are Not as Beautiful as They Once Were.

The girls of Kashmir in former times were sold and carried away to the Punjab, in India. They commanded a large price, and parents in moderate circumstances for centuries past have been in the habit of parting with their daughters to place themselves in easier circumstances, and the daughters have generally been quite willing to escape from a life of penury and labor to one of opulence and ease.

A laboring man in this part of India cannot earn over $2 or $3 a month, while many receive for their daughters as high as $1,000. There are some cases where $5,000 was paid, but the usual price has been from $100 to $500.

The practice became so common as well as so damaging that a severe law was enacted prohibiting any one from removing any woman from the country, but it is said that the business goes on now as it has done for hundreds of years, and to that practice may be charged the fact that the women of Kashmir are not as beautiful as they once were.

The process of taking all the beautiful girls away, leaving only the ordinary and ugly ones to continue the race, has lowered the standard of beauty. Most of the women and girls perform field labor as much as the men, and their dress is of the coarsest and plainest materials, consisting of a garment like a nightgown made of white cotton. There is no effort to have it fit.

The condition of women in Kashmir is a very sad one, but one from which there does not seem to be any present escape. It is a constant struggle to live, without the least hope of any accumulation or of ever seeing better days.

The men only receive about 5 cents a day and the women generally about 3 cents, and that will provide only the coarsest food.

PICKINGS FROM FICTION.

There is nothing that is enough for a woman, but all.—"The Mississippi Bubble."

Overdone heartiness is nearly as nasty as underdone mutton.—"Comments of a Countess."

No man can be brave who considers pain the chief evil of life.—"The Heroine of the Strait."

We ought never to do wrong when people are looking.—"A Double Barreled Detective Story."

Occasion's everything, but the rub is to know an occasion when you see it.—"The Lady Paramount."

I'd be slow in advisin' anybody to go crooked, but when ye feel ye're in the hands of sharpers it's the only way.—"Rockhaven."

The master poets love to deal with the victory of the vanquished, which the world's thinkers know to be greater than the victory of the victorious.—"Nathan Hale."

Be sure, before you give your love and your trust, that you are giving them not only to one who deserves them, but to one who really wants them.

Useful Purposes of Rosin.

There are many useful purposes to which rosin can be applied outside of those of general practice. As a nonconductor of heat it is used in the protection of water pipes, particularly in crossing bridges, where the pipe is laid in the middle of a long box and the whole filled with melted rosin. Rosin is also used in supporting basement floors in machine shops, which may be laid over some dry material, as spent molding sand, which is carefully leveled off, and the planking laid upon temporary supports separating it about two inches above the sand.

Numerous holes about two inches in diameter being bored through these planks, melted rosin is forced through them by means of funnels until the whole space is solidly filled, and then the upper flooring is laid upon these planks. In case the floor is subjected to shocks sufficient to break the rosin it rapidly joins together again in much the same manner as the regelation of ice.

The Dragon Slayer.

At an English school a pompous youngster whose father, it was well known, had been a successful omnibus driver was one day fingering ostentatiously a large seal which he is in the habit of wearing, representing St. George and the dragon, and, having drawn the attention of a school companion to it, remarked carelessly:

"Ah, one of my ancestors is supposed to have killed the dragon, don't you know!"

"Good gracious!" inquired the other, somewhat anxiously "Did he run over it?"

Went Back on the Blue.

Gerald—My brother turned crimson the other day.

Geraldine—I never knew him to blush.

Gerald—I didn't say that he blushed.

Geraldine—What did he do?

Gerald—Left Yale and entered Harvard.

Ignoring Precedent.

Edmonia—Mrs. Topnotch is what I call impertinent.

Eudocia—In what way?

Edmonia—Why, she is not a Colonial Dame, but when she came to the colonial reception she had on a more elegant frock than any one of the Dames.

Fruitless.

Little Willie—Pa, what does this paper mean by saying it was a fruitless search?

Father—It probably applies, my son, to the quest of some man who was looking for pineapples on a pine tree.—Chicago News.

Deadly Prussic Acid.

Hydrocyanic acid, or, as it is most commonly called, prussic acid, is one of the most deadly poisons known to animal life. It is a volatile principle contained in numerous shrubs and trees, chiefly the wild cherry, bitter almond, sherry laurel, St. Ignatius bean and the peach tree. It is obtained by distillation from ferrocyanide of potassium by the action of sulphuric acid in the form of a light, colorless gas. The preparation kept in the drugstore is a dilute acid of a strength of 2 per cent of anhydrous acid in distilled water, a colorless liquid, with the odor of bitter almonds. The dose is from two to six drops. One-half grain of the anhydrous acid is sufficient to produce death. It is used in medicine in correcting diseases of the stomach, also in whooping cough and the last stages of consumption.

It is very volatile, and the fumes will destroy vegetable life, causing the stems of plants to wither and dry up. Its effect on the lower animals is similar to its action on man, with the exception of the horse and the hyena, upon whom it does not appear to produce any impression. In fatal doses it causes death quickly by paralyzing the heart's action. After death the rigor mortis sets in, and in a few moments the unfortunate subject is as stiff as a board.

Some Curious Book Titles.

In the sixteenth century we find the greatest extravagance displayed in the titles of books. These may be taken as examples: "The Spiritual Snuffbox, to Lead Devoted Souls to Christ," and "The Spiritual Seringa For Souls Steeped In Devotion." A work on Christian charity published in 1587 is entitled "Buttons and Buttonholes For Believers' Breeches." Another quaint publication is Father La Chaucle's work entitled "Bread Cooked on the Ashes; Brought by an Angel to the Prophet Eligiah (Elijah) to Comfort the Dying." Another was issued with the curious title of "The Lamp of S. Augustine and the Flies That Flit Around It."

The following very attractive title appeared in a book published at Newcastle in 1655: "Some Beautiful Biscuits Cooked In the Oven of Charity and Put Aside For the Fowls of the Church, the Sparrows of the Spirit and the Swallows of Salvation."

Rubber Foot Fever.

If a man has a corn, it can be removed, but if he is suffering from rubber foot fever no chiropodist can help him, and the only thing to prescribe is liberal bathing of the feet and removal of the cause. Rubbers should only be worn to keep wet out, and they should be removed the moment the wearer gets indoors. Failure to note this gives a man wet feet in a far worse sense than if he had waded through mud ankle deep.

It was the trouble resulting from forcing the perspiration to soak the stockings and keep the feet perpetually damp that drove rubber soled boots out of the market. Even loose rubbers are a source of danger and the cause of many more serious colds than they avert.

Tiffany's Big Day In 1837.

Mr. Charles L. Tiffany and his partner, Mr. Young, began business on a capital of $1,000 borrowed from Mr. Tiffany's father.

Their first stock of salable goods consisted of bric-a-brac, Chinese and Japanese wares, umbrellas, walking sticks, desks, dressing cases, cabinets, fans, fine stationery, pottery, fancy articles and curiosities. The total sales for the first three days are said to have amounted to only $4.98, but as the nature of the business became known the patronage increased, new features were added from time to time, and on the day before Christmas of the year 1837 the sales amounted to $236.—American Monthly Review of Reviews.

Dublin's Red Haired Club.

The Red Haired club of Dublin, which flourished years ago, was a society which barred out all whose hirsute covering was not of the most pronounced auburn. In order that no one could gain admission by false pretenses it was required at the initiation of each member that the applicant wash his hair and whiskers in hot soap and water. This effectually took out any "dye" that might have been used.

All Agreed.

Kranklelgh—Naw! I don't like my new neighborhood at all. Every man on the street's a cad.

Sharpe—You don't say?

Kranklelgh—Yes, and there's one man in particular who isn't fit to live there at all.

Sharpe—Strange; that's what all the other neighbors say.

Not So Tactless as That.

She—Mrs. Boreton called today, and I thought she would never go.

He—But you are so amiable I suppose you never gave her the slightest hint that you wanted her to go.

She—Indeed I did not. If I had, she'd be here now.

His Whole Business.

Tar water as a remedy many years ago in England became the universal nostrum. Horace Walpole tells that a man went into a chemist's shop and asked, "Do you sell tar water?" "Tar water!" replied the apothecary. "Why, I sell nothing else!"

A Fierce Threat.

Irish Maid—Do you want a good beating, Master Jimmy, or do you not, because if you don't behave yourself this minute you'll get both?

Whence Comes Electricity?

At a time when electricity is rapidly transforming the face of the globe, when it has already in great measure annihilated distance and bids fair to abolish darkness for us, it is curious to notice how completely ignorant "the plain man" remains as to the later developments of electrical theory. Some recent correspondence has led me to think that a vague notion that electricity is a fluid which in some mysterious way flows through a telegraph wire like water through a pipe is about as far as he has got, and if we add to this some knowledge of what he calls "electric shocks" we should probably exhaust his ideas on the subject. Yet this is not to be wondered at. Even the most instructed physicists can do nothing but guess as to what electricity is, and the only point on which they agree is as to what it is not. There is, in fact, a perfect consensus of opinion among scientific writers that it is not a fluid—i. e., a continuous stream of ponderable matter, as is a liquid or a gas—and that it is not a form of energy, as is heat. Outside this limit the scientific imagination is at liberty to roam where it listeth, and, although it has used this liberty to a considerable extent, no definite result has followed up to the present time.—Academy.

FAIRY GOLD

BY BERTHA M. CLAY

—Author of—
"A Woman's Vengeance," "Between Two Loves,"
"Her Second Love," "A Fatal Wedding," Etc.

The girl looks up at him suddenly, with a flash of anger and rebuke in her eyes at what she thinks is mockery. But Captain Glynne's bold-featured, handsome face is as immobile as marble.

"I am quite serious," he adds, in a very gentle tone; and the hand that holds a sapling at her back touches her shoulder either wilfully or accidentally; and Yolande trembles at the touch, which seems to thrill her through and through.

She looks up once more, meeting the gaze of his eyes full for the first time, with the gold of the sunlight on his close-cropped chestnut head and his white brow as he stands bareheaded beside her.

"Yes, I will," she says, answering him gravely.

There is a slight answering flush in Dallas Glynne's handsome face, a slight troubled shadow darkening his bold bright eyes.

"Thank you," he says very quietly.

Captain Glynee, steeped to the lips as he is in the doctrines of the selfish, sensuous school of life in which he has been brought up, is not altogether a bad or a selfish man. Though lacking all reverence for those who are of the sex of the mother that bore him, he yet has—all unknown to himself—a heart strong and true to give to a woman who loves him—a strong, true, passionate love which has never been awakened. He has too the reverence of a man of honor for the purity and simplicity of a woman; and a restless feeling that he may be doing something wrong and cruel disturbs him ere he can begin the flirtation with Yolande that he has half resolved upon "for the fun of the thing," as he says to himself.

"She looks as if she could fall desperately in love with me upon very slight provocation," he thinks, with cynical criticism, whilst he is gathering two or three purple-gray spires of the wild mint-blossoms and some slender green fern-fronds. "I suppose it is on the cards that I shall marry her if the money is all right. She seems amiable and virtuous-minded, and will be rather good-looking and elegant by-and-by when her figure develops and she is artistically dressed. But it would be a frightful bore to have a wife of her description madly and jealously in love with one!"

Captain Glynne involuntarily shudders at the bare idea of such a possible result of his marriage. And all the while he is artistically putting the flowers and leaves together, and Yolande is watching him with swift shy glances, feeling that the little bouquet is for her, and yet rebuking herself for the boldness of the thought.

At last it is finished, and Captain Glynne ties a long blade of grass about the stems and offers it to her with a frank smile.

"Will you have it?" he asks, in a pleasant friendly fashion that puts her quite at her ease. "Let me fasten it in your scarf," he says, and pins it in deftly, while Yolande submits in silence, admiring his firmly-knit sun-browned hands.

But, his task over, he steps back a pace and looks at her with a slight smile in his cold blue eyes.

"Now what will you give me?" he asks, in a low tone.

"I have nothing to give," answers Yolande, with her shy, burning schoolgirl blush, looking dreadfully frightened.

"That is a story, my little dear," Captain Glynne says to himself; "you have thirty thousand charming gifts to bestow." He says never a word aloud; but, taking her pink slender fingers in his, he stoops and touches them with his moustached lips—very respectfully and delicately, as if Yolande Dormer were his lady and his liege.

"I wonder if I ought to have allowed him to do that?" Yolande thinks, as they walk on once more together. "Why did he kiss my hand? It was very respectful. If I were a princess, he could not do more! What a handsome head he has, and what a beautiful smile—like sunshine!"

And, long before that pleasant ramble beneath the yellowing autumn trees is ended, Captain Glynne has won more than the kiss of homage from the girl who walks by his side. He has won Yolande's love—the first blossoming bud of the girlish heart, the first bloom and perfume of the young flower of life.

He is far too well-bred to embarrass her in the least with attentions; and they walk on, talking of scenery and pictures and places, until Yolande, grown quite at ease and friendly, has begun to answer and question him easily and confidentially.

"You have strong artistic tastes and perceptions and all that sort of thing," Captain Glynne is saying to her just as they reach the mill and the orchard beyond the mill, where Mr. Dormer's advanced guard of hotel waiters and porters are arranging the luncheon-tent and chairs and tables. "You ought to study under a thoroughly good master. You have not done so yet, I think you said?"

"Oh, no!" Yolande answers simply. "I had no money of my own until uncle Michael died and left us all our money." "Uncle Silas could not afford expensive masters for me. I can now have, of course, whatever lessons I like."

"Yes—you have plenty of money now, haven't you?" Dallas asks smilingly, as one asks a confiding child a question.

"Yes," Yolande answers, still looking very serious, not to say solemn; and the big velvety pupils look larger and darker than ever. "I have thirty thousand pounds, uncle Silas and aunt Keren say."

"That's a nice little sum!" Dallas observes curtly, with a touch of bitterness. "I wish I had half of it!"

For a moment or so he does not think of any second meaning to his words, as he stares straight before him, his thoughts traveling far away over land and sea to an old Scottish mansion and this time a year ago amongst the crimson-heathered moors and hillsides, with dainty, golden-haired Joyce Murray by his side. A short, unbidden sigh rises to his lips, and he looks down at the girl who walks beside him now. All her simple, loyal, generous soul is in her ardent, wistful, upward gaze, and it does not need the swiftly downcast eyelids and the flush and averted head to reveal to him her inmost thoughts.

He is poor! He is poor! She could sing aloud for joy. He is poor—this handsome soldier-aristocrat who is like a demi-god. He is poor, elegant, well-bred man of fashion as he looks, and she is rich. So her money brings her nearer to his level; her money at least is a desirable, enviable thing in his eyes.

"If there were notes for fifteen thousand pounds in a neat little bag in her pocket this minute, I should stand a fair chance of having them handed over to me," Dallas thinks, with good humored contemptuousness, but touched a little in spite of himself. "Foolish girl! She is just one of the class of silly creatures who fall a prey to the first mercenary scoundrel who pleases their ill-governed fancy! You ought to go to Italy and study there, Miss Dormer," he says aloud, with a iciness in his tone.

"Oh, I should so like that!" Yolande returns earnestly. "Cousin Wilmot has been to Italy for a whole winter, and I have been longing to go too, and see Venice and Naples and Pompeii and Rome."

"Perhaps you will go with 'cousin Wilmot,'" suggests Dallas curtly.

"Oh, no, I don't think so," Yolande says with a slight regretful laugh. "It isn't in the least likely. Cousin Wilmot was in Venice last autumn."

"Well, what is to prevent you and cousin Wilmot from going to Venice next autumn?" Dallas asks, growing cross. "I thought there would be some faithful cockney in the background!" is his mental exclamation.

And at this moment they come in sight of the luncheon-tent and the gipsy-fire blazing a little way off to boil the kettle for coffee, and the waiters nimbly tripping about, putting the finishing touches to the table set out with glass and silver and snowy serviettes and an array of dainty dishes.

"Oh, how pretty that looks—and I am so thirsty!" Yolande says, catching sight of the crystal-clear siphons of seltzer-water and the tall claret-bottles; and thinking gratefully how good and clever it is of dear old uncle Silas to have managed so well and been so generous. Men like nice things to eat and drink, and she hopes Captain Glynne will enjoy his luncheon.

"Good gracious!" Captain Glynne exclaims sourly. "Are we expected all to sit in that stifling tent and then drink hot coffee afterwards by the fireside?" An al-fresco feast with a vengeance!"

None of the party have assembled as [illegible] and there is no one but the waiters in sight, except a lady who is sitting at the foot of an apple-tree in a pensive attitude, shading herself from the hot rays of the sun with a black silk lilac-lined en-tout-cas.

"Oh, poor mademoiselle," Yolande says remorsefully, hurrying forward—"sitting there all by herself! She came on with uncle Silas, to help him, as he doesn't know a word of French; and now every one has gone away and left her! Oh, no—uncle Silas is at the other side of the tree, talking to her! No—it isn't uncle Silas! Who can it be?"

Mr. Silas Dormer's broad sturdy figure is certainly not like the figure of the person who rises deliberately at their approach and stands by the trunk of the apple-tree, with his hands loosely locked behind his narrow long back, surveying the advancing pair with a glimmering smile in his lack-lustre eyes.

"What a horrid, long-bodied, snaky-looking man!" Yolande mutters to herself instantly, with unreasoning youthful impulse of dislike.

And Dallas Glynne almost rubs his eyes in incredulous amazement when he recognizes in the strange gentleman who has been lounging about the tree, chatting confidentially with Miss Dormer's governess, his cousin Viscount Glynne!

CHAPTER V.

"Not that anything that that cadaverous humbug does ought to surprise me!" Dallas says contemptuously, when he and Lady Nora compare notes. "It was just a little startling to find his lordship, instead of being at a charity-bazaar, or a missionary meeting, or being smiled at or prayed for by a lot of pious old ladies in Exeter Hall, appear suddenly at a picnic in these 'rural wilds,' as your friend Mr. Silas Dormer describes the place, and improving the shining hours by flirting with the governess."

"Flirting, Dallas!" exclaims Lady Nora haughtily. "Your cousin is a gentleman, though a very disagreeable one. Do you know who and what that girl is?"

"I know she is louche," Dallas answers carelessly; "and I am quite sure she is not a lady by birth or education. But really, madre mia, it isn't my mission to disturb either the young woman or her employer with my suspicions."

"She is a servant!" Lady Nora declares, with angry emphasis. "She was Lilian Vavasor's waiting - woman! I believe she left the situation because she couldn't stand Lilian's vile temper and stinginess combined; but I have seen the girl trimming Lilian's tea-gowns myself."

"Anything particular iniquitous in that?" Dallas asks provokingly. "Seriously, I don't think any the worse of Mademoiselle——"

"She is English!" Lady Nora interrupts sharply. "Her name is Glover—Bella Glover. And she calls herself Isabelle Gantier now—so that poor old soul Miss Dormer told me."

"Well," responds Dallas imperturbably, "I don't think any the worse of Miss Bella Glover, otherwise Gantier, for being an honest waiting-maid or a dressmaker. But I suspect Mademoiselle Bella is somewhat accomplished in large and small deceptions. In fact, I think artful Miss Governess is almost as great a hypocrite as my cousin Glynne. They seem to fraternise notwithstanding your disclaimer."

"I believe he was trying to find out things from her—horrid creature!" Lady Nora says, in suppressed wrathful tones. "The idea of his following us out here from the town, and then sitting down for ever so long to chat with that girl, as if she were a friend of his!"

"Perhaps she is," calmly rejoins Dallas.

"I shouldn't wonder in the least," Lady Nora says spitefully. "And I know people who say that Lyulph Glynne is not altogether what he might be, though he does assume such a lofty moral tone with one."

"He is!" agrees Lady Nora, with unabated anger. "You are going back with him to Pentreath, of course, Dallas?"

"Not at all 'of course'!" Dallas says curtly. "I am not at the beck and call of my uncle Pentreath any more than of my cousin Glynne. I have accepted Lord Pentreath's invitation for the shooting for a fortnight, though the preserves aren't worth much, and it is horribly dull always at that damp old house in Wales, between my uncle's pompous old men and my cousin's pompous young men—ten degrees worse—and there isn't a nice girl or a jolly woman in their set."

"Hardly," Lady Nora agrees, with a little sneer, "when they are all either friends or relatives of that poor sickly Maria. She is horribly jealous of Lyulph too, I believe."

"There are not quite three weeks of my leave to expire," Dallas concludes; "and I shan't apply for any extension of it for Pentreath, you may be sure. Lyulph wants me to stay on for the election, and do the canvassing for him; but I don't intend to trouble myself for a fellow I don't like."

"Dallas," says his mother, in a low earnest tone, "I wish you would."

They are standing a little apart from the rest of their party under the orchard-trees, whilst the gipsy-tea is preparing under the auspices of Mr. Dormer and the ever-amiable and clever governess. Mademoiselle has pinned the daintiest of muslin embroidered aprons over her elegant gray cashmere gown, and, looking very French and picturesque and charming, has pressed Major Hutchinson into the service of bread-and-butter cutting, that gallant Irishman nothing loath.

Colonel Majilton is talking to Lady Jeannie behind her parasol as they sit together a little way off on a shady bank "where the wild thyme grows." George Ormond is trying vainly to keep up a desultory conversation with Viscount Glynne, who is holding forth fluently to old Miss Dormer on the latest missionary reports from Lapland. The old lady is listening with rapt reverential attention, disturbed only by mundane recollections of the rank and title of the pious young gentleman who is talking so sweetly of sanctified subjects, and distracted fears that the new bonnet she is wearing is crooked.

ST. LAWRENCE WRECKS.

Commander Spain Asked to Make a Searching Official Investigation.

Ottawa, Aug. 7.—The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has asked Commander Spain to look into a number of wrecks which have recently taken place with a view of their being thoroughly investigated. The Indiana was wrecked on June 26 on the Island of Mingan, the Sahara on June 10 at Brequette and the Mont Eagle on July 12 at Fame Point, all on the St. Lawrence route. The Baamenden was also wrecked at White Ledge Point, Canso, N.S., and Commander Spain has been asked to look into this also. Mr. Sutherland intends investigating all these, so that the facts may be brought out.

Czar Embraced Kaiser on Warship's Gangway, at Reval.

Reval, Russia, Aug. 7.— Emperor William of Germany, arrived in the roadstead yesterday.

The meeting of the Emperor and Czar on the gangway of the Standart was most cordial. They embraced and retired to a cabin for a private conference.

The Hohenzollern anchored among the Russian warships, and Emperor William went on board her again to receive formal visits from the Czar and the Grand Duke Alexis.

Rev. Dr. H. C. Riggs Dead.

Rochester, N.Y., Aug. 7.—Rev. Dr. Herman Camp Riggs, for many years pastor Emeritus of St. Peter's Presbyterian Church, died yesterday of a complication of diseases. Dr. Riggs was born October 2, 1832, in Groton, N.Y. In 1857 he was ordained to the ministry by the Presbytery of New York City, since which time he has held charges in St. Catharines, Ont., Potsdam, N.Y., and this city.

A ROSEATE PROSPECT.

Manitoba Wheat Is Beginning to Turn—Harvesting in Two Weeks.

Winnipeg, Aug 7.—Wheat is beginning to turn, and the warm, bright weather with occasional showers is filling the heads nicely. Prospects could not be better. Such is the tenor of the despatches received by the Canadian Northern Railway. Not a pessimistic word from any point in the province. Wheat, the finest crop in years, and so heavy there is danger of its drooping from its own weight. Corn and barley exceedingly heavy. Hay a phenomenal crop, with weather favorable. Roots a record-breaker. Two weeks at the outside is the date named for the commencement of harvest, and in many localities the wheat is turning now.

Mr. Kruger Visits Mr. Steyn.

The Hague, Aug. 7.—Ex-President Kruger of the former Transvaal Republic went to Scheveningen yesterday to visit ex-President Steyn of the Former Orange Free State. He was driven directly from the railway station to the house of A. D. W. Wolmarans.

The visit to ex-President Steyn lasted only two minutes, Mr. Steyn's physician forbidding a longer interview. Mr. Kruger shook hands with Mr. Steyn and expressed his sincerest hopes for his speedy recovery. Little more was said. Mr. Kruger remained at the house about a quarter of an hour in conversation with Mrs. Steyn. Abraham Fischer, the former Boer delegate, accompanied Mr. Kruger on his visit.

Lake Steamers Collide.

Kingston, Aug. 6.—Yesterday afternoon as the steamer Hamilton was entering alongside Swift's Wharf she crashed into the steamer Kingston, and her stern rail and bulwarks were broken, while the port upper works of the Hamilton were crushed in.

The passengers on the Hamilton became panic stricken as they heard the roaring steam from the broken ports of the steam steering gear of the Kingston. Some women fainted, while men jumped to the wharf. The Hamilton righted and drew out into the river and steamed eastward. The Kingston later left for Toronto with hand-steering apparatus.

Loss of One Million and a Half.

Shenandoah, Pa., Aug. 7.—William Stein, the State Mine Inspector for the Shenandoah region, yesterday announced that five collieries under his jurisdiction, which have an estimated value of $1,500,000, have been rendered useless by reason of having been flooded and have been permanently abandoned by the company owning them.

Cape Town, Aug. 6.—Cecil Rhodes' will has been proved.

How to Encourage Weeds.

Any cultivation, which merely breaks up the root stocks and leaves them in the ground, especially during wet weather, aids in their distribution and multiplication and is worse than useless unless the cultivation is continued so as to prevent any growth above ground. Plowing and fitting corn ground in April and May and cultivating at intervals until the last of June, then leaving the land uncultivated during the remainder of the season, is one of the best methods that could be pursued to encourage the growth of conch grass, Johnson grass and many other perennial weeds.

Employment for Wet Days.

Wet days can be utilized to good purpose by disinfecting and whitewashing the stables, pigpens and poultry houses, etc. Sulphur is a cheap and effective disinfectant; burn the sulphur in an iron vessel and keep doors and windows closed for some hours. A good coat of lime whitewash disinfects, purifies and makes the building lighter and more healthy.

Tough Flour.

Mrs. Youngbride—I've come to complain of that flour you sent me.

Grocer—What was the matter with it?

Mrs. Youngbride—It was tough. I made a pie with it, and it was as much as my husband could do to cut it.

Her Cooking.

She—You say she won three husbands by her cooking?

He—That's what she did.

"But how did she get rid of the husbands after she won them?"

"Oh, I believe her cooking had something to do with that too."

GREAT ALTERATION SALE

For the last year we have been inconvenienced considerably for want of space to show our goods, that our business has grown no one will doubt, and in order to keep pace with its rapid growth we must have more room.

To-day the carpenters will remove our rear store and begin work in earnest. The plumbers are with us busy at their part of the job. We have had to remove all our goods in the rear of the cellar and the front part of our store is also to receive special up-to-date touches. What we ask is that the people of Belleville and vicinity will aid us in getting rid of our crowded stock, and for this end we will hold two weeks sale, goods will be sold so cheap that it will startle the whole community.

Come early. Goods sold out will not be replaced during alterations.

EXCITING ARREST AT NOON TO-DAY

CHIEF NEWTON, A WILD INDIAN AND A REVOLVER WERE THE PARTICIPANTS.

Those who happened to be in the vicinity of the market square at noon to-day had the opportunity of witnessing an exciting arrest. It appears that an Indian named Joseph Hanavan, whose home is upon the Reserve near Brantford, was a member of the Canadian contingent which arrived here on Sunday last from South Africa. Hanavan went as far west as Toronto, but yesterday he came to this section of the country and went down to see some friends who reside on the Mohawk Reserve in Tyendinaga. During his visit he got outside of some fire water, and, perhaps imagining that he was still after the Boers, commenced firing off a revolver in all directions terrifying many people. Constable Steele was sent for, but before his arrival Hanavan had disappeared and made his way to this city.

The police here were notified to be on the look-out for him and at noon Chief Newton saw the man coming across the market square. The Chief went to arrest him and a lively tussle ensued, both at one time being upon the ground. Hanavan made an effort to secure possession of this revolver, but the Chief prevented this move. Constable Steele, who was also on the look-out, came upon the scene and assisted the Chief to take Hanavan to the police station, where he was locked up. He was subsequently brought before the Magistrate and remanded to jail until Saturday.

Hanavan had in his possession a large revolver, four chambers of which were loaded. Had he secured possession of this weapon it can only be surmised what the result would have been. The Indian is a young man, about 24 years of age, and well developed.

DROWNED AT TWEED

SORROWFUL ENDING OF A SUMMER VISIT.

A sad drowning accident occurred in the village of Tweed on Friday last, when Willie, the three-year-old son of Mrs. Slush, who was visiting in the village, fell in the Moira and lost his life. The news spread rapidly and in a few minutes hundreds of citizens were gathered at the river bank. Every possible effort was made to locate the body and although the search was kept up until nearly midnight no trace of it could be found. The search was again resumed early Saturday morning and about nine o'clock the body of the unfortunate little fellow was found floating between two logs a short distance from where the drowning took place.

Mrs. Slush, who was a daughter of the late Abijah Simmons, of Hungerford, came to Tweed with her little son two weeks ago Tuesday to visit her nephew, Mr. Archie Grier. On Friday afternoon the little fellow was out playing with Mr. Grier's little boy, and about six o'clock they were called for supper. Willie, however, did not go with his companion and when asked where he was Mr. Grier's little boy said he was playing by the river, which is quite near the house. One of the household immediately went to the river but could find no trace of the child. She at once gave the alarm, and shortly afterwards the little fellow's hat was found floating in the water.

The tail of the saw log drive is now within the city limits.

Three Hundred Dollars worth of Fire Works and the Best Band Concert of the season will entertain Belleville's citizens who visit the Driving Park on Monday evening next.

A Message From The King

Personal and Spontaneous Expression of His Feelings.

Heartfelt Appreciation of His Majesty's People's Sympathy During a Time in His Life of Such Imminent Danger—In Excellent Health.

London, Aug. 8.—The following message from King Edward to his people was made public last night:

"To My People:

"On the eve of my coronation, an event which I look upon as one of the most solemn and important of my life, I am anxious to express to my people at home and in the colonies and in India my heartfelt appreciation of the deep sympathy they have manifested toward me during a time in my life of such imminent danger. The postponement of the coronation ceremony, owing to my illness, has caused, I fear, much inconvenience and trouble to all who intended to celebrate it. But their disappointment has been borne by them with admirable patience and temper.

"The prayers of my people for recovery were broad and I now offer up my deepest gratitude to Divine Providence for having preserved my life and given me strength to fulfill the important duties which devolve upon me as a Sovereign of this great Empire.

(Signed) "Edward R. and I."

A Personal Expression.

Buckingham Palace, Aug. 8.—King Edward's proclamation is a personal and spontaneous expression of His majesty's feelings. It was conceived and written by himself in an autograph letter to the Home Secretary, C. T. Richie.

King in Excellent Health.

London, Aug. 8.—An official bulletin issued yesterday says: "King Edward bore the journey to London Wednesday without the least fatigue. His Majesty had a good night and is in excellent health. The wound practically is healed. A bulletin will be issued on Sunday next."

Sunday's bulletin will be the last and it will be issued only with the object of placing on record how the King bore the coronation ceremony.

Accused of Stealing a Watch

A man named Albert Dunkley, who was working in the township of Rawdon, was last evening brought to the city by High County Constable Duffin and placed in the County jail on a charge of stealing a watch. It is alleged that Dunkley stole the timepiece from Mr. Geo. Vandusen, of Rawdon, with whom he was working. The accused will on Monday next be tried for the offence.

Results, not criticism prove an advertising plan good or bad.

WOMAN'S NARROW ESCAPE

ALLEGED TO HAVE BEEN NEARLY SHOT BY THE WILD INDIAN ON WEDNESDAY.

The Indian, Joseph Hanavan, whose arrest here yesterday caused considerable excitement, appears to have a number of aliases. He goes by the name of Brant, Johns, and Hanavan. The latter name is probably correct as it appears upon his discharge papers which he received when leaving South Africa. It is said that a woman narrowly escaped being shot by him on Wednesday, near Shannonville. He will be tried before the Magistrate to-morrow.

BRIDGE ST. CHURCH NOTES

LEAVE OF ABSENCE GRANTED TO REV. DR. CROTHERS — DELEGATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.

A meeting of the Quarterly Official Board of Bridge St. Church was held last evening which was well attended by the members.

The financial statement presented showed that the church was in a flourishing condition.

The Board granted to the Pastor, Rev. Dr. Crothers, leave of absence for five weeks, during which period he will attend the General Conference of the Methodist Church which will be held in the City of Winnipeg, commencing next month. Ald. Chown and Mr. Wm. Johnson are also delegates to the Conference.

PEAT FUEL RIVAL OF ANTHRACITE

CAN BE SOLD AT $4 PER TON AND WILL YIELD BY-PRODUCTS WORTH $5 PER TON.

(Mail and Empire.)

Under the magic wand of science the brown peat of the bog is to be converted into fuel, wood spirit, acetic acid, ammonia, tar, fibre for papermaking, and a brown color for dye. This is what Prof. C. A. Sahlstrom, a Swedish chemist, who has resided for many years in London, told The Mail and Empire at the Queen's last night.

At a time when $7 a ton for hard coal is demanded of the worried householder his promises are particularly interesting, for he claims to be able to put peat fuel of greater heating capacity than anthracite on the market at $4 per ton.

Some years ago Prof. Sahlstrom was a partner of Nordenfeldt, the maker of the famous gun, and later was interested in the preparation of food extracts, but at present is devoting all his time to the production of peat as a commercially practicable fuel, and the working up of the bog products.

In a word, Prof. Sahlstrom's contention is that all previous attempts to carbonate peat for fuel have either destroyed valuable by-products or left them in the peat, where they reduced its value as a fuel, while by his process, which is no more expensive, these products are saved and the fuel left in a better condition. For instance, acetic acid and ammonia are chemicals used to put out fires, while fibre is of little use. The by-products extracted from a ton of dry peat are worth $5. A ton of compressed peat occupies 30 cubic feet of space, while a ton of coal occupies 45 feet. Putting it in another way, a ton of anthracite coal produces 14,200 units of heat, while a ton of compressed peat produces over 15,000 units.

The process is equally applicable to sawdust. At present thousands of dollars are spent in building destructors and in running them simply to get rid of a commodity which should be of great value. Soft coal treated this way would give off valuable by-products, would be reduced in bulk and would become a smokeless fuel.

One other important feature for Canada is that this peat product is non-sulphurous, and will therefore make iron equal to the best charcoal iron.

A plant is now working in Spain, and in Great Britain a company has been formed to operate plants in various parts.

As to the amount of peat available he states that should Great Britain's other supply of fuel be absolutely cut off and her consumption of fuel doubled, there is sufficient peat in the British Isles to last for 2,000 years. The supply in Canada is probably equally large.

LIBEL ON A TOMBSTONE

IT SAYS CHILD WAS KILLED BY COMPULSORY VACCINATION.

Buffalo, Aug. 7.—"Lucile Sturdevant died May 28th, 1902, aged six years. Vaccination poisoning at school 35." Whether this inscription will be removed from a tombstone in Forest Lawn cemetery will depend on the outcome of a lawsuit which Mr. and Mrs. Homer E. Sturdevant, of 128 Morgan street, have instructed Attorney Charles A. Dolson to bring against Drs. Beebe and Wright, of the local health department. The health departments wants the inscription removed, alleging that it is untruthful.

The parents assert that their child died from blood poisoning, caused by vaccination in the public school, and declare that they will not remove it. They intend to sue the health department doctors for $10,000 damages for causing the death of their child. The outcome of the lawsuit will be awaited with much interest by local physicians and the health authorities, because if a decision adverse to the doctors is given it is said the work of compulsory vaccination in the public schools will be stopped altogether.

Mount Etna is found by Professor Ricco to have been lowered 65 feet on the south since 1868 and twice as much on the north. The top is supposed to have been slowly blown away by the wind.

FIFTY-FIVE MILLION BUSHELS OF WHEAT

Estimate of Yield in Manitoba by the Immigration Agent.

This Estimate is Arrived at on the Conservative Basis of 27 Bushels to the Acre—The Territories Will, He Thinks, Have Fully One-Third More Than Last Year—Oats, Rye and Barley Increased Also.

Winnipeg, Man., Aug. 8.—J. J. Golden, Provincial Government Immigration Agent, who has been traveling over Manitoba to a considerable extent, estimates this season's wheat yield at 55 million bushels. This estimate is for Manitoba only and is arrived at on a basis of an average yield of 27 bushels to the acre.

In the territories he thinks there will be fully one third increase over last year in the output.

In the Manitoba wheat field, the wheat is growing much thicker this year than last and the number of straws to the square foot is almost double that of last year. The plants have headed out well and every head is full to the tip. The increase acreage under cultivation will also tend to increase the total output.

Mr. Golden looks for an increase in the other grains also and thinks yield of oats, rye and barley will average fully half as much more again than last year.

The Free Press will print to-day its annual crop edition for the current season. Its statistical table gives the probable crop of wheat in Manitoba and the Territories as 65,615,925 bushels, an increase of 3,000,000 bushels over the figures of last year.

THE COTTAGE SYSTEM.

Prisoners' Aid Association Wants Youthful Misdemeanants Classified.

Toronto, Aug. 8.—A deputation from the Prisoners' Aid Association waited upon the Provincial Government Thursday afternoon with the view of urging upon them the advisability of the greatest care being taken in the classification of boys in connection with the new reformatory to be erected to replace the one at Penetang. The members of the Government in attendance were: Hon. Richard Harcourt, acting Premier; Hon. J. R. Stratton, Provincial Secretary, and Hon. John Dryden, Minister of Agriculture. Those on the deputation included: Dr. Rosebrough, secretary of the association; Hamilton Cassells, James Massey, Hugh McMath, Warden Gilmour, Rev. Robert Hall and Finlay Spencer.

With the exception of James Massey, the deputation expressed their appreciation of the cottage plan in the matter of the accommodation for the boy prisoners, instead of the dormitory system at present in vogue.

On behalf of the Government, Hon. Mr. Harcourt thanked the deputation for the information given, assuring them that it would be seriously considered in completing the plans for the proposed institution.

It is not decided yet where the Institution is to be located.

WOE IN PATAGONIA.

Welsh Settlers Are Taking to the Hills Because of Floods.

Ottawa, Aug. 8.—W. L. Griffith, Canadian Government agent in Wales, has just returned from a visit to the Welsh Patagonian settlement at Saltcoats, N.W.T. When he arrived here he found a letter awaiting him from the Argentine Republic showing a sad state of affairs existing in the Welsh colony in Patagonia. The Chubut Valley is again flooded. The melting snows in the Andes, together with an unusually heavy rainfall, have created an overflow in the river, which has caused the capital of the colony, Rawson, to be flooded, and the towns of Trelew and Gaiman are under water, and the poor people are fiying to the hills for shelter and safety. There is a scarcity of the first necessaries of life and altogether the condition of the people is deplorable. The disposition of those remaining in the colony will no doubt be to follow their friends to Canada, but it is feared they will be, on account of the floods, in a more or less destitute condition and will require assistance. If Canada cannot assist no doubt South Africa will get these people.

Rain Spoiled Games.

Stratford, Aug. 8.—The demonstration held here yesterday in connection with the Ontario Volunteer Firemen's Association was quite a success up to the time the procession reached the Athletic Park. Shortly after the games were started, rain commenced to fall, and continued the rest of the day. Part of the program was gone through, with results as follows: Band competition, Milton 1; Seaforth, 2; hose reel race, Paris, 1; St. Mary's, 2; Thorold, 3; best dressed company, Thorold. The other events and attractions arranged for were of necessity called off.

AMY WILSON'S CAPER.

Masquerades as Man—Copetown Girl Located on a Brant County Farm Working as Farm Hand.

Paris, Aug. 8.—The queer escapade of Amy Wilson is exciting the people of this section. The girl has been several days in this part of the country working in the harvest fields as a man, under the name of Angus Gordon. The young woman disappeared from her home at Copetown, July 22, leaving a note saying she had been kidnapped. She arrived in the farming section west of here on July 24, evidently coming direct from her home.

She applied at the farm of George Snowden, on the Princeton road, 4 miles from Paris, for employment. She was meagrely clad, having nothing on her feet, and was attired in a shirt and trousers only. The farmer did no suspect her identity at the time, as her hair was cropped short and her figure was very masculine. She declared she was a farm hand, but had done no heavy work for some time. The farmer needed a man in the harvest field, and gave the new applicant work. She said her name was Angus Gordon.

Worked Like a Man.

The tramp farm hand worked well, and was liked by the farmer and his family. She said she had a valise in Paris, and last Thursday came to Paris, purchased a pair of slippers and returned to the farm. She became very communicative, and talked a great deal about the Amy Wilson case. She confided to a member of the family that she was a detective employed to locate the girl, but her story was ridiculed because of her poverty-stricken condition.

Betrayed by a Photograph.

Friday a paper was secured by the farmer with a picture of the girl. The members of the family were at once struck with the similarity between their farm hand and Amy Wilson. Mr. Snowden finally took Angus aside and questioned her closely, but she refused to admit her identity. The next morning the farm hand was missing. In her room was found a woman's night dress.

County Constable McCammon was notified, and went to the farm house with a photograph of Amy Wilson. The Snowdens instantly recognized the likeness as that of the farm hand who had just disappeared.

Amy Wilson, when she disappeared, had long curling red hair, and Angus Gordon had short, closely cropped red hair, parted in the middle, as the Wilson girl's was. Gordon was careful about occupying a room with other men employed on the farm, and this first provoked suspicion that there was something wrong with Gordon. She manifested a familiarity with the case of Amy Wilson and was talking of her constantly.

Traced Girl to Cathcart.

Constable McCammon traced the girl westward, until he found that she had been at Cathcart Saturday night and had begged a meal from a farmer near the town. She left Cathcart, going toward Woodstock. She told the farmer that she expected to get work on a farm near that place. She carried a valise at the time she was at Cathcart, and strapped to the bag was a lady's parasol.

There is no doubt that Amy Wilson is in this part of the country, and that she is disguised as a man.

Parents Are Distracted.

The relatives of the girl are nearly frantic over her extraordinary conduct, and the distracted parents are urging the officers to do what they can to capture the girl and put an end to her mad career.

Amherstburg Man Disappears.

Windsor, Aug. 8.—The people of Amherstburg are greatly stirred up over the mysterious disappearance in Cleveland, of their townsman, Capt. Edward Gatfield, master of the steamer V. H. Ketchum. It is ten days since the captain dropped out of sight and not a trace of him can be found. No satisfactory theory can be found to account for his disappearance. He is 29 years of age, and a son of Captain W. H. Gatfield of the firm of Duff & Gatfield, the well-known vessel agents and settlers at the Lime Kiln Crossing, Amherstburg.

Wants $7,000,000 Damages.

Ottawa, Aug. 8.—One of the biggest actions ever taken in Ottawa was entered by Taylor McVeity, in the High Court of Justice on behalf of the Saphine Corundum Company Limited, against B. A C. Craig of Toronto, for slander and libel. Damages to the extent of $2,000,000 are asked. The Sapphine Carudum Company is a concern organized within the year in London, England.

Let the Boy Drop.

Kingston, Aug. 8.—Frank Patterson, aged 11, was drowned at Wolfe Island Wednesday. He belonged to Vermont. They were repairing a water fence, standing on a wagon, when their horses bolted into deep water, and the two persons jumped. The uncle took the lad on his back, but to save himself had to drop his burden, and the lad was drowned.

Pleads For Colonials.

London, Aug. 8.—Because colonials gazetted into British regiments on account of distinguished service in the field are looked upon as outsiders even in corps whose officers are drawn from the ranks of the middle classes and lower, Earl Roberts recently issued a special memorandum pleading for better treatment for colonials.

May Remove Embargo.

London, Aug. 8.—There is a strong probability that the embargo against the landing of Canadian cattle at British ports will be removed when Parliament re-assembles in October.

Mr. Tarte at Parry Sound.

Parry Sound, Aug. 8.—Hon. Mr. Tarte called here yesterday, and was seen by a deputation, urging him to give a harbor appropriation.

SALT FAMINE THREATENED

Demand Exceeds the Supply—Call from Northwest the Cause.

A New Clue in the Alleged Gorn Murder in the Evans' Warehouse, Toronto—W. J. Develin Killed by a Street Car in London—Assistant Receiver General Barbeau Dead at Montreal—U.S. Government Sending Battleship to Halifax

The total number of bearing apple trees in the United States is 210,000,000.

Henry Barbeau, of Montreal, died Thursday evening, aged 70 years. He was assistant receiver-general.

Rt. Rev. W. C. Pinkham, D.D., Bishop of Saskatchewan and Calgary, is seriously ill in London.

Frank Hewitt, an employe of the John Bertram & Sons Co., Dundas, got his foot caught in an elevator, Thursday, and may lose it.

Thursday's developments show that fifteen persons were killed and forty injured in the freight wreck on the Milwaukee road Wednesday.

At Stratford, Conn., Captain Geo. Culliver, aged 55 years, and Miss Iva Miller, aged 23 years, were drowned in the Housatonic River Thursday by the capsizing of a skiff.

Consul-General Foster was notified at Montreal Thursday night that the United States Government is sending the battleship Indiana to Halifax for the coronation celebration on Saturday.

The tie-up of the system on the Fair Haven and Westville Street Railroad Company, resulting from the strike of the conductors and motormen was still complete Thursday morning.

W. J. Stoudley, a Canadian Pacific Railway section hand, fell from a train Thursday, and several cars passed over him, killing him instantly. He was 38 years of age, and leaves a wife and one child.

A salt famine threatens Toronto, and, as far as the salt jobbers can discern, there is no immediate relief. The extraordinary demands for the article in the Canadian Northwest is the alleged cause for the scarcity.

Broken-hearted because he was put out of his apartments on Thursday, William Vevers, a Toronto laborer, 65 years of age, ended his life by swallowing an ounce of carbolic acid in the sitting room of the City Arms Hotel.

Harry Scott, of Flavelle Bros. store, Lindsay, Thursday evening while examining a Mauser bullet brought from South Africa by a friend, had the misfortune to blow off a part of a finger by the bullet's exploding in his hand.

Bandmaster Peel, of St. Catharines, was met at the depot Thursday night, and escorted to the park, where he was presented with a purse of $100 by the citizens as a mark of their appreciation of his efforts in bringing the 19th Band up to its present state of efficiency.

A protest has been filed against the election of T. G. Carscallen of Lennox, Conservative, and a cross-petition has been entered asking for the disqualification of Captain Robson, East Middlesex. Lennox Conservatives say that a cross-petition will be made against the Liberal candidate, M. S. Madole.

W. J. Develin, who only went to London, Ont., last week, was riding up Richmond street when he failed to observe a street car that was bearing down on him, and was struck with great force. He was hit on the head and concussion of the brain resulted. Mr. Develin died Thursday evening without regaining consciousness.

TRACY'S BODY STRIPPED.

Relic Hunters Tear Hair From the Head of the Dead Outlaw.

Spokane, Wash., Aug. 8.—When the Sheriff, with the body of Tracy, drove through Davenport, hundreds of persons crowded about the wagon. By the time the wagon reached Stone's morgue the streets were crowded, and from every corner could be heard, "Three cheers for Lincoln county." The town was wild. The morgue doors had to be closed and the crowd was asked to stand back. Several persons were allowed to see the body, and then the trouble began. Everyone wanted a relic, and in a short time nothing was left but the body. Someone even picked up the blood-stained handkerchief which had been used by Tracy to keep from bleeding to death. Many locks of the desperado's hair were carried away, and in some places his head had been made bald. His trousers were cut into strips, and before they were divided they were cut into smaller pieces.

Fell Thirty Feet, May Die.

Otterville, Aug. 8.—Walter Howey met with a very serious accident yesterday morning. He fell from the roof of J. Mason's barn, some three miles north of the village, falling some 30 feet. He has lain unconsciousness ever since. No bones are broken, but the doctors are afraid of serious internal injuries.

They Killed Beddell.

Shenandoah, Aug. 8.—The coroner's jury which has been investigating the death of Joseph Beddell, who received his fatal injuries in the riot here last week, concluded its inquiry today, and rendered a verdict holding "Joseph Paluwicz, a butcher; Matthew Paulaskas, a one armed saloon keeper, and many other rioters unknown to the jury," responsible for the killing. The men named in the verdict are now locked up and other arrests will follow.

THREE CANADIANS DROWNED

George Ford, Walter Basham and Miss Thomas, Ottawa and Montreal.

Old Orchard, Maine, Aug. 8.—A strong undertow claimed the lives of three bathers here yesterday: George Ford, 70 years of age, of Ottawa, Ont., formerly member of the Board of Aldermen of that city; Walter Basham, aged 55, of Montreal, chief train despatcher of the Grand Trunk Railway, and Miss Florence J. Thomas, aged 20 years, of Montreal.

The three were the only bathers in that section of the beach at the time.

Their prolonged absence from the hotel worried Miss Hazel Ford, granddaughter of Mr. Ford, who had been in bathing with the others and had left them on a raft some distance out in the surf. She induced other hotel guests to go to the beach and Mr. Basham's body was seen in the surf. Later Miss Thomas' body was found. The belief is that all three were washed from the raft. Mr. Basham was an expert swimmer. Mr. Ford was spending the summer here with his wife and granddaughter.

Miss Thomas was an elocutionist, and was to have been married this autumn.

AMONG LARGEST IN WORLD.

Clergue's Charcoal Plant Will Be a Scientific Triumph.

Sault Ste. Marie, Aug. 8. — The charcoal plant which the Clergue Syndicate is building is nearing completion and will begin operations within a few weeks. It is one of the largest in the world. The initial capacity of the plant will be 250,000 cords of wood per day, and it will be in commission in time to supply the blast furnace, the first stack of which will be blown during the fall. The hardwood to be used will be procured along the line of the Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railroad, and for several months past hundreds of men have been engaged in cutting it. At the plant not only will charcoal be produced, but dye products, wood alcohol and acid, which ordinarily are wasted. In the manufacture of these secret processes the result of two years of experimenting will be used, and it is promised that another scientifiee triumph will be scored when the methods now being patented are divulged.

SIR WILFRID'S INTENTIONS.

Canadian Government Placated Police About Our Arch.

London, Aug. 8.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier is arranging to leave for Paris and Rome on Aug. 15, thus missing the naval reviews and Mr. Chamberlain's reception on the Elder-Dempster boat at Portsmouth.

The King will receive the Premiers at Buckingham Palace, probably on Monday or Tuesday next.

The Canadian arch is assuming a new dress, and is resplendent in crimson and purple, with the motto, "Canada, Free Homes for Millions." In order to leave a pleasant impression with the police, who, after Chamberlain's accident, objected to the arch as an obstruction, the Canadian Government has given $250 to the Police Orphanage.

STRIKERS SUED FOR $30,000.

Kingston Locomotive Works Issued Writs Against 28 Machinists.

Kingston, Aug. 8.—Writs have been served by Sheriff Dawson upon 28 strikers, making them defendants in a suit for $30,000 damages brought by the Canada Locomotive Works Company, which also asks for an injunction to restrain the strikers from further interfering with the company's employes. The strikers will defend the action. John Whiting, K. C., is the plaintiff's solicitor.

Cows Killed by Lightning.

Owen Sound, Aug. 8.—Lightning struck the barn on the dairy farm of George Sergent in Derby on Tuesday evening. Some half a dozen people were in the barn at the time engaged in milking thirty cows. All of the animals fell at the shock and one of the milkers had a leg crushed by a cow falling on him. Another man had his trousers slit from top to bottom on both sides of the body, but escaped scorching of the skin. All the animals regained their feet except two, which were killed by the shock. The building, fortunately, did not take fire and was but slightly damaged.

An Utter Failure.

THEY DROVE PIMPLES AWAY.—A face covered with pimples is unsightly. It tells of internal irregularities which should long since have been corrected. The liver and the kidneys are not performing their functions in the healthy way they should, and these pimples are to let you know that the blood protests. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will drive them all away, and will leave the skin clear and clean. Try them, and there will be another witness to their excellence.

HAD LA GRIPPE.—Mr. A. Nickeson, farmer, Dutton, writes: "Last winter I had La Grippe and it left me with a severe pain in the small of my back and hip that used to catch me whenever I tried to climb a fence. This lasted for about two months, when I bought a bottle of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil and used it both internally and externally, morning and evening, for three days, at the expiration of which time I was completely cured."

Their gentle action and good effect on the system really make them a perfect little pill. They please those who use them. Carter's Little Liver Pills may well be termed 'Perfection.'

A good illustration unconsciously conveys the idea that the article advertised is a good one.

AT DEATH'S DOOR.—DYSPEPSIA CONQUERED.—A GREAT MEDICAL TRIUMPH.—Gentlemen,—My medical adviser and others told me I could not possibly live when I commenced to use Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery for Dyspepsia. My case was one of the worst of its kind. For three years I could not eat meat and my weight decreased from 219 to 119 lbs. All the food I took for thirteen months previous to taking the Vegetable Discovery consisted of milk. I am now entirely cured and have regained my usual weight, can eat anything with a keen relish and feel like a new man. I have sold over thirty dozen Vegetable Discovery since it cured me, as I am well-known and people in this section know how low I was, and thought I could not possibly be cured. They are eager to try this grand medicine. It certainly saved my life as I never expected to recover when first I commenced using it. I am not exaggerating anything, but feel glad to be able to contribute this testimonial and trust it may be the means of convincing others of its merit as a certain cure for Dyspepsia.

Signed, JEAN VALCOURT,
Wotton, P.Q. General Merchant

It is better to have a light purse than a heavy heart, but more comfortable to have neither.

Very many persons die annually from cholera and kindred summer complaints, who might have been saved if proper remedies had been used. If attacked do not delay in getting a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial, the medicine that never fails to effect a cure. Those who have used it say it acts promptly, and thoroughly subdues the pain and disease.

Have you tried Holloway's Corn Cure? It has no equal for removing these troublesome excrescences, as many have testified who have tried it.

FOR INFLAMMATION OF THE EYES.—Among the many good qualities which Parmelee's Vegetable Pills possess, besides regulating the digestive organs, is their efficacy in reducing inflammation of the eyes. It has called forth many letters of recommendation from those who were afflicted with this complaint and found a cure in the pills. They affect the nerve centres and the blood in a surprisingly active way, and the result is almost immediately seen.

Ten per cent. of the population of India are widows.

If you have a cough or cold do not neglect it; many without a trace of that hereditary disease have drifted into a consumptive's grave by neglecting what was only a slight cold. Had they used Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup before it was too late, their lives would have been saved. Mr. A. W. Levy, Mitchell, writes; "I think Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup the best preparation on the market for coughs and severe colds. About six years ago I caught a severe cold which settled on my lungs, and for three months I had a cough. I had a physician attending me, but gradually grew worse until I was on the verge of Consumption, and had given up hopes of being cured, when I was induced to try Bickle's Syrup. Before I had taken one bottle I found myself greatly relieved, and by the time I had finished the second bottle I was completely cured. I always recommend it for severe colds and consumption."

WHILE WE SLEEP.

The Muscles and Organs of the Body Are Still Working.

If the organs of the body cannot be said to sleep, neither can the voluntary muscles. Witness the phenomena of sleepwalking, the postilions in stagecoach days who slept in their saddles and cavalrymen who do it today, infantry who have been known to sleep on forced marches, sentinels who walk their beats carrying their guns in a fixed position while they sleep. For all we know policemen may do it too. People who talk in their sleep are familiar to all of us. Experiments made by Speir, Armstrong and Child on 200 college students of both sexes showed that 47 per cent of the men and 37 per cent of the women talked in their sleep. A number of things might be proved by these statistics. Of these sleep talkers one-half of the women and one-third of the men are able to answer questions while asleep. More women than men could answer questions on any subject, not alone that of which they had been talking. It has also been found that most sleep talkers are under twenty-five years of age.

Evidently, then, with the muscles and organs of the body all working, it is the brain only that sleeps, and by no means all of the brain. The senses of sight, hearing, touch, smell and taste may be very much awake while the subject sleeps. A sleeping person hears and answers questions, rearranges his bedclothing, covers his eyes to keep out the light, draws away his hand when the experimenter tickles it. A child is broken of the habit of sucking his thumb while asleep by putting aloes on it. He is conscious of the bitter taste and dreams of wormwood. The nerves, then, and the brain centers corresponding to them are awake. A busy lawyer, exhausted by overwork, one night went out to supper with some friends, ate, talked and walked with them, and the next day remembered absolutely nothing of the occurrence. He had not been drinking. The man was simply asleep during the whole evening. His conscious memory—that is, consciousness itself.

FLOWER AND TREE.

Fruit trees and fruit require potash for their best development.

With house plants all extreme changes of temperature should be avoided.

Too many trees prevent rapid growth and extend the time when a grove is well shaded.

Grapevines like their roots to be near the surface, and the food for them should not be placed at too great a depth.

Small growth and too much small fruit go together. Thrifty growth furnishes a few large and fine specimens of fruit.

There is no use in growing a tree very tall. The top limbs are apt to become slender and break if fruit is produced on them.

All members of the poppy family are hard to transplant. By choosing a rainy day and not exposing the roots one can sometimes manage a transference.

Avoid straight lines as much as possible. There is no straight line in nature. It is for this reason that groups and masses are so much better than formal or set beds.

What Puzzled Louis.

Louis Philippe was a wit. What he specially excelled in was the clinching of an argument, such as, for instance, his final remark on the death of Talleyrand. He had paid him a visit the day before. When the news of the prince's death was brought to him, he said, "Are you sure he is dead?" "Very sure, sire," was the answer. "Why, did not your majesty himself notice yesterday that he was dying?" "I did, but there is no judging from appearances with Talleyrand, and I have been asking myself for the last four and twenty hours what interest he could possibly have in departing at this particular moment."

A Queer Library.

A curious collection of books is contained in the library of Warstentein, near Cassel, in Germany. The books appear at first sight to be logs of wood, but each volume is really a complete history of the tree it represents. The back shows the bark, in which a small place is cut to write the scientific and common name as a title. One side shows the tree trunk in its natural state, and the other is polished and varnished. Inside are shown the leaves, fruit, fiber and insect parasites, to which is added a full description of the tree and its products.

A Matter of Fact.

"Do you see the horizon yonder, where the sky seems to meet the earth?"

"Yes, uncle."

"Boy, I have journeyed so near there that I couldn't put a sixpence between my head and the sky!"

"Why, uncle, what a whopper!"

"It's a fact, my lad. I hadn't one to put."—London Tit-Bits.

Excellent Explanation.

"Why is a woman—honest, now—why is a wife cross?"

"Before marriage she was an I. After marriage she leaned on another I, and they formed an X. Of course she's cross, and so are you, I'll bet."

CATCH PHRASES.

Their Utility In Advancing the Interests of Business Men.

There are many instances of where a suitable catch line well drilled into people has been of great value in building business. The best catch line is one that fits your business best, and the discoverer of such a line is apt to be due more to inspiration than to effort. Pick the distinctive feature of your stock or business methods and endeavor to express it in a breath.

If you can coin a phrase that expresses your central business idea or emphasizes some feature that marks your store alone, you can make good use of it. It puts into condensed form an idea that will get hold of people and influence them if persistently presented to them. One fact about your business well lodged in the heads of people is as good as a score that do not penetrate.

You can make people believe about what you like if you go about it properly. If a man comes to you today and tells you there will be a panic inside of six months, you will pay no attention to him. If another comes tomorrow with the same story, he will get no attention, but you will idly wonder what is getting into folks. The third man you will argue the matter with. The fourth will get more of a hearing, and you will begin to see signs of disaster yourself. By the time the tenth man has made the statement you will be ready to tell folks the same story yourself.

Probably you yourself could not be influenced in such a manner, but the common run of people are built that way and will believe what they are told often enough. That is why an expressive catch phrase does good. It comes to stand for you and your methods and of necessity is remembered when goods in your line are wanted.

As ordinarily used such a phrase is of little value, because it is not properly hammered into people. Such a line should go on letter heads, billheads, stationery, envelopes, should go into every ad. or circular, should be seen about the store and should appear on labels. Put it on a sticker to attach to goods and packages. Let people see it everywhere. If it means what it says, people are going to respond to it.

His Grim Ambition.

"Why do you allow your love of money to carry you so far in forcing up prices?"

THE GIRLS OF KASHMIR.

Why They Are Not as Beautiful as They Once Were.

The girls of Kashmir in former times were sold and carried away to the Punjab, in India. They commanded a large price, and parents in moderate circumstances for centuries past have been in the habit of parting with their daughters to place themselves in easier circumstances, and the daughters have generally been quite willing to escape from a life of penury and labor to one of opulence and ease.

A laboring man in this part of India cannot earn over $2 or $3 a month, while many receive for their daughters as high as $1,000. There are some cases where $5,000 was paid, but the usual price has been from $100 to $500.

The practice became so common as well as so damaging that a severe law was enacted prohibiting any one from removing any woman from the country, but it is said that the business goes on now as it has done for hundreds of years, and to that practice may be charged the fact that the women of Kashmir are not as beautiful as they once were.

The process of taking all the beautiful girls away, leaving only the ordinary and ugly ones to continue the race, has lowered the standard of beauty. Most of the women and girls perform field labor as much as the men, and their dress is of the coarsest and plainest materials, consisting of a garment like a nightgown made of white cotton. There is no effort to have it fit.

The condition of women in Kashmir is a very sad one, but one from which there does not seem to be any present escape. It is a constant struggle to live, without the least hope of any accumulation or of ever seeing better days.

The men only receive about 5 cents a day and the women generally about 3 cents, and that will provide only the coarsest food.

Useful Purposes of Rosin.

There are many useful purposes to which rosin can be applied outside of those of general practice. As a nonconductor of heat it is used in the protection of water pipes, particularly in crossing bridges, where the pipe is laid in the middle of a long box and the whole filled with melted rosin. Rosin is also used in supporting basement floors in machine shops, which may be laid over some dry material, as spent molding sand, which is carefully leveled off, and the planking laid upon temporary supports separating it about two inches above the sand.

Numerous holes about two inches in diameter being bored through these planks, melted rosin is forced through them by means of funnels until the whole space is solidly filled, and then the upper flooring is laid upon these planks. In case the floor is subjected to shocks sufficient to break the rosin it rapidly joins together again in much the same manner as the regelation of ice.

The Dragon Slayer.

At an English school a pompous youngster whose father, it was well known, had been a successful omnibus driver was one day fingering ostentatiously a large seal which he is in the habit of wearing, representing St. George and the dragon, and, having drawn the attention of a school companion to it, remarked carelessly:

"Ah, one of my ancestors is supposed to have killed the dragon, don't you know!"

"Good gracious!" inquired the other, somewhat anxiously "Did he run over it?"

Father—It probably applies, my son, to the quest of some man who was looking for pineapples on a pine tree.—Chicago News.

THE PUBLIC should bear in mind that Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil has nothing in common with the impure, deteriorating class of so-called medicinal oils. It is eminently pure and really efficacious—relieving pain and lameness, stiffness of the joints and muscles, and sores or hurts, besides being an excellent specific for rheumatism, coughs and bronchial complaints.

Many beds have the appearance of comfort, but no amount of clothing can warm a cold heart.

A WONDERFUL CURE.—Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes; "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly to cure the sore but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, so I got a bottle and when I had used about one-half, the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done, it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very bilious habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. But since using 3 bottles of the Vegetable Discovery, the biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 60 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know."

The Flagging Energies Revived.—Constant application to business is a tax upon the energies, and if there be not relaxation, lassitude and depression are sure to intervene. These comes from stomachic troubles. The want of exercise brings on nervous irregularities, and the stomach ceases to assimilate food properly. In this condition Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will be found a recuperative of rare powder, restoring the organs to healthful action, dispelling depression, and reviving the flagging energies.

The man who can keep his mouth shut has the best of the argument with all women.

Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial is a speedy cure for dysentery, diarrhoea, cholera, summer complaint, sea sickness and complaints incidental to children teething. It gives immediate relief to those suffering from the effects of indiscretion in eating unripe fruit, cucumbers, etc. It acts with wonderful rapidity and never fails to conquer the disease. No one need fear cholera if they have a bottle of this medicine convenient.

Sometimes the most charitable view of others is that they ought to be in the insane asylum.

Sleeplessness.—When the nerves are unstrung and the whole body given up to wretchedness, when the mind is filled with gloom and dismal forebodings, the result of derangement of the digestive organs, sleeplessness comes to add to the distress. If only the subject could sleep, there would be the oblivion for a while and temporary relief. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will not only induce sleep, but will act so beneficially that the subject will wake refreshed and restored to happiness.

The wonder is there are not more kicking horses, since there are so many men who kick without discrimination.

These two desirable qualifications, pleasant to the taste and at the same time effectual, are to be found in Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator, Children like it.

A peppery temper is not a thing to be sneezed at.

When all other preparations fail, try Holloway's Corn Cure. No pain whatever, and no inconvenience in using it.

People who sleep with sin will not be able to wash away the marks of it.

To get relief from indigestion, biliousness, constipation or torpid liver without disturbing the stomach or purging the bowels, take a few doses of Carter's Little Liver Pills, they will please you.

In the British Army 129 officers are qualified as interpreters in French, 100 in Russian, 81 in German, but only one in Dutch.

That tired, languid feeling and dull headache is very disagreeable. Take two of Carter's Little Liver Pills before retiring, and you will find relief. They never fail to do good.

Icebergs in the North Atlantic usually appear about February 15 and are seen more or less frequently until about June 15.

They make one feel as though life was worth living. Take one of Carter's Little Liver Pills after eating; it will relieve dyspepsia, aid digestion, give tone and vigor to the system.

Up to the present slower progress is being made with the construction of the Edward VII. than of any warship built at Davenport.

Nothing so suddenly obstructs the perspiration as sudden transitions from heat to cold. Heat rarifies the blood, quickens the circulation and increases the perspiration, but when these are suddenly checked the consequences must be bad. The most common cause of disease is obstructed perspiration, or what commonly goes by the name of catching cold. Coughs, colds, sore throat, etc., if attended to in time are easily subdued, but if allowed to run their own course generally prove the fore-runner of more dangerous diseases. Nine-tenths of the consumptives date their afflictions from a neglected cold, and the diseases that are caused by wet feet, damp clothes, or exposure are more numerous than are generally supposed. One of the most efficacious medicines for all diseases of the throat and lungs is Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, which frees the lungs from viscid phlegm by changing the secretions from a diseased to a healthy state.

BANDSMEN DRUMMED OUT

MUTINY IN A CORPS OF SCOTTISH VOLUNTEERS—REFUSED TO GO ON PARADE.

London, Aug. 7.—A painful incident occurred recently at the Gailes Camp, Ayrshire, containing between seven and eight thousand Scottish volunteers. In the morning the band of the 4th Lanark, a Glasgow corps, refused twice when ordered to accompany the regiment to the scene of the day's manoeuvres, and they were placed under arrest in their tents, with the exception of the buglers. Half a dozen men mounted guard over the mutineers, who numbered about twenty-five.

The act of insubordination was due to a belief on the part of the bandsmen that they were receiving an inadequate allowance.

On the return of the regiment from manoeuvres at lunch time the bandsmen were drummed out of the camp and dismissed the service by Lieut. Col. Smith, the officer commanding, in the presence of the whole brigade. In a scathing speech Col. Smith remarked, that the band refused to parade because they seemed to have discovered that bands in other regiments were receiving more remuneration for their services in camp. The band joined as volunteers, and were not entitled to be paid any more than any other member of the battalion. As he had intimated in the morning, he intended now to dismiss them with ignominy. It was most painful to him personally. Such a thing had never happened before in the annals of the regiment, but he could not show any clemency. It had been a most disgraceful exhibition, and he could not overlook it for the good name of the whole battalion.

Bandmaster Jarvis having called out the names of the offenders, the men's facings were cut off, and the Colonel dismissed them "as a disgrace to the regiment" and to the uniform they wore."

Daily Intelligencer.

THE PRESENT PROSPEROUS STATE OF IRELAND.

The world is surfeited with tales of the wrongs of Ireland, emanating from professional agitators, most of whom live and exist upon the contributions of honest men and women who are duped, in too many instances, by designing knaves, whose occupation, like Othello's, would be gone if this cry of "poor Ireland" no longer existed.

That Ireland to-day is socially and commercially as well to do as any part of the Kingdom is proven by a reference to figures.

That her population, principally through emigration, has materially fallen off is true, but her social state is wonderfully improved. We commend the following facts and figures to the attentive perusal and study of those who are ever bewailing Ireland's sad condition, as an integral part of the Empire, from which state, of what they call bondage, they wish her severed:

The fact that the population of Ireland, which was 8,175,121 in 1841, was only 4,456,546 in 1901, is sometimes noted to give emphasis to the sad story of the decline of a fine country and a fine people; but it would be a great mistake to judge of Ireland, its people and affairs, merely by reference to the census of population. It is true that the population is now not much more than half what it was sixty years ago; but it might not be amiss to remember that three-fourths of that decline took place in the former half of that period, and but one-fourth in the latter half; and it is important not to ignore the fact that the smaller population of to-day seems to possess and enjoy considerably more property and prosperity than did the larger population of former years.

Between the years 1874 and 1901 the population declined by nearly three-quarters of a million, but the farm stock in Ireland was actually greater in the latter year than in the former, as appears by the following table:—

Horses	468,069	491,380
Cattle	4,118,113	4,672,035
Sheep	4,437,613	4,378,645
Pigs	1,096,494	1,219,046

Here there is an increase of about 600,000 mostly cattle, in spite of the smaller number of people, from which it must appear that those who remain are considerably richer in flocks and herds than were their predecessors of a quarter century ago.

In recent years the Irish people have also been both buying more and selling more than formerly, the imports and exports for the years 1896 and 1900 being given as follows:

Imports	£9,366,000	£12,015,000
Exports	316,000	1,312,000

In 1879 the number of letters delivered in Ireland was 76,000,000; by last year the number had nearly doubled, being 144,000,000; and during the same period the telegraphic messages had over trebled, having increased from 1,559,854 to 4,903,075. This indicates progress, in both business and other ways.

During the last fifteen years, or thereabouts, the deposits in the joint stock banks increased from 33 million pounds odd, to 48 millions pounds odd, and the deposits in the post office savings banks from £2,438,172 to £8,058,153, and the deposits in the Trustees' savings banks from £2,018,387 to £2,333,083. The preference for the Government savings bank is, perhaps, worthy of note; and in all cases there is a substantial increase notwithstanding the smaller population.

These facts confirm the favorable impression recently published concerning the state of affairs in Ireland.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Before to-morrow's sun has set, our Sovereign Lord the King will have been crowned, thus officially marking his succession to the throne vacated by Good Queen Victoria. His Majesty's recent illness and the deplorable and vexatious postponement robbed the event of most of its glamor and theatrical effect. However, mingled with the interest attached to the coronation will be gratification and thankfulness for His Majesty's recovery.

• • •

The King's popularity as a man and a sovereign was amply evidenced by the innumerable messages of sympathy and condolence which were borne from every civilized land to the stricken monarch and his gracious helpmate, Queen Alexandra, There was not one discordant note. From every quarter of the globe arose the prayer, "God Save the King," and the prayer so universally expressed was not uttered in vain.

• • •

The feeling of thankfulness at His Majesty's recovery will nowhere be more heartily shown than in Canada, the brightest jewel in the British Crown. Right cheerfully her gallant sons responded to the Empire's call; right manfully they bore the task committed to them. As an integral part of the greatest Empire the world has ever seen, Canada has every reason to proudly fly her flags to-morrow and join in the universal chorus which will roll round the King's dominions:

God save our gracious King
Long live our noble King
God save the King.
Send him victorious
Happy and glorious
Long to reign over us
God save the King.

No wonder they have cyclones up in western Ontario sometimes. John Smith, a youthful farmer of Stratford, Ont., purchased a bottle of effervescent salts at a drug store recently, and after returning home and reading the directions found that they should be taken in tepid water. He immediately hitched up and hurried back to the store and asked the druggist for a quart of tepid water. The druggist, in his usual pleasant manner, picked up a bottle, filled it with pure water, and handed it to the customer, cautioning him to warm it a little before using, charged him 25 cents, and took a snapshot of him as he passed out of the door.

A PERTINENT QUESTION.

(Colborne Express.)

When asked for a two cent postage rate Sir Adolphe Caron said it could not be done as the decrease in revenues could not be met. When Sir Wm. Mulock was asked he said it could be done and attempted to do it. Now the country is paying double rates on everything else to make up the deficit from his branch. Which of them knew the most?

Messrs. Jaffray Bros., proprietors of the Galt Reporter, have sent us a copy of their handsome publication, "Picturesque and Industrial Galt," which is a highly creditable work, indeed. The object of the publication, the promoters say, is to do justice to the town pictorially and industrially. That the object has been attained no one who reads the book can deny. The Messrs. Jaffray are to be heartily congratulated on the excellence of their work, both as regards topography and literary composition.

A doctor in Hamilton, in making his report of deaths during the month of July, gave as the cause of death in one case "Methodist." This causes the Spectator to soliloquize in this wise: "In what class of diseases should this peculiar form be rated? It certainly can not be in the contagious department, for Methodism, or any other religious denomination, does not seem to be contagious in Hamilton just now. The ministers and the elders of the churches are off in the enjoyment of their summer vacations, and things are running in a sort of go-as-you-please way; but when the cool days come and the church once more gets down to work then look out for revivals. When Methodism really becomes contagious if it is of the old-fashioned kind."

A patriotic citizen suggests that, when the news reaches us tomorrow that the King has been crowned, every church bell and fire bell and all the steam whistles make the glad news known and the welkin ring. Good idea, that, which can be carried out whether the stores are open or closed.

A gentleman prominent in religious circles writes: "When you hear the sonorous tones of Bridge St. Methodist Church bell peal out to-morrow morning at 10.30, you will know that it is an invitation to all our citizens to meet to pray for our King and to hear some patriotic sentences that will help us all to be better citizens of our mighty Empire. God save the King!"

Mining Notes

(Marmora Herald.)

The Buffalo capitalists who visited the Demas property in Marmora township last week, have decided to work the property and a number of men are already busy at work. Mr. McMaster, of Bancroft, is the mining engineer in charge of the work. It is reported that a vein of good paying ore is in sight.

Encouraging reports have been received from the prospect being worked by Mr. Jamieson on the Madoc Road near Moira River. A rich vein of mispickle has been found of good width and of high assay value.

DOES IT PAY TO BUY CHEAP?

A cheap remedy for coughs and colds is all right, but you want something that will relieve and cure the more severe and dangerous results of throat and lung troubles. What shall you do? Go to a warmer and more regular climate? Yes, if possible; if not possible for you, then in either case take the ONLY remedy that has been introduced in all civilized countries with success in severe throat and lung troubles, "Boschee's German Syrup." It not only heals and stimulates the tissues to destroy the germ disease, but allays inflammation, causes easy expectoration, gives a good night's rest and cures the patient. Try ONE bottle. Recommended many years by all druggists in the world. You can get this reliable remedy at R. Templeton & Co.'s.

Some men are so busy looking for a position that they have no time to work.

FIRST DEAF LAWYER IN THE WORLD

A. L. MacLellan, of Trenton, is dead. The Trenton News publishes the following obituary notice:

We regret to hear of the death of A. L. MacLellan, Esq. We will miss his familiar figure in the street here. He was the elder son of the late John MacLellan, Jr. Esq., of Messrs. John MacLellan & Co., East India merchants and shipowners, Greenock and Glasgow, Scotland, who had a fleet of 33 East Indiamen (ships) plying between the Clyde, Liverpool and London and Calcutta—also ships that sailed to the West Indies and Belize, Honduras, where he owned a mahogany forest.

He left two sons, of whom the deceased was one, and the other Duncan, and two daughters, Catherine, who died here three years ago and Margaret, who was married to W. B. Socley, of Messrs. Socley & Phillips, Bankers, Galveston, Texas, and left children there. The deceased and his brother Duncan and sisters were born at Finnart House, on the bank of the Clyde, between Greenock and Gourock Bay, where their father had two yachts at anchor.

The deceased and his brother Duncan both finished their legal studies for the profession of lawyers at Belleville. The deceased had the honor of being the first deaf lawyer since the beginning of the world, when he passed through the Law Society at Toronto. His brother Duncan was afterwards admitted to practise by the Law Society and he is of course the second first deaf lawyer.

It has often been remarked that these clever gentlemen had their names immortalized in the annals of the deaf, as being the first deaf lawyers practising in the world, seeing that a deaf lawyer was unknown for thousands of years until they appeared on the stage of this world.

They at once formed a partnership under the name of "MacLellan & MacLellan" both at Belleville and Madoc. They excelled in equity, of which they made a specialty, although they were also well up in common law, especially in the branch of Ejectment. During the late gold excitement in the Madoc gold regions they had a very large practise in Chancery and were very successful in all their chancery suits and also won quite a number of defences. The other side used to bring the best Chancery lawyers from Toronto to oppose them, but they held their own. When the gold excitement went down the deceased removed his law office to Campbellford, where he had a very lucrative practice, and since came here where his brother was.

The funeral took place yesterday from the residence of his brother to Mount Evergreen cemetery. The pall bearers were all local lawyers, who laid his remains beside those of his sister Catherine.

WILL NOT SUBMIT TO BRITISH RULE

SENSATIONAL STATEMENT BY EX-SECRETARY REITZ — WAR AGAIN IN THREE YEARS.

Naples, Aug. 7.—Mr. Reitz, formerly State Secretary of the Transvaal, arrived here to-day on the German steamer Kanzler. He said that nearly everything the English newspapers said about the Transvaal should be denied. He added:—

"We were not beaten by British soldiers, but by abject misery."

"We will have war again in three or four years. Nearly all the young Boers will emigrate rather than submit to British rule."

"My brother and I and many other Boers are going to Madagascar."

METHODIST STATISTICS

AN INCREASE OF 84 CHURCHES OVER LAST YEAR.

Returns to the Rev. George H. Cornish, General Conference statistician of the Methodist church, show that there are 3,314 churches, an increase of 84 over last year. The number of parsonages is 1 208, an increase of 75. The value of the churches and furnishings is $11,836,410, an increase of $539,609; value of parsonages and furnishings $2 173,544, increase, $148,833; value of burial grounds, $180,949, increase, $29,801; total value of church property, $14,190,903, increase, $717,522. The total church and parsonage debt amounts to $2 230,840, which is $380,171 less than in 1901.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh), that can not be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

CURES FOR TOOTHACHE.

Remedies That Do Not Appeal to the Ordinary Man Today.

The man in dental anguish sometimes curses with Burns "the venomed stang that shoots his tortured gums alang." Sometimes, on the other hand, he prays. St. Augustine in his "Confessions" relates how he once suffered from "dolor dentium" (toothache), apparently in an aggravated form, for he could not speak. Thereupon he wrote on wax a prayer to God for the other brethren to repeat, and as soon as all were on their knees the pain went. "But what a pain!" he says. "Never since my tender age had I experienced the like." Southey in his "Life of John Wesley" tells of that eminent preacher that when his own tooth ached he prayed and the pain left him.

Unfortunately ordinary men do not seem to have such efficacious faith. When the excruciation begins, they must bear it philosophically, and on Shakespeare's authority toothache finds out just the weak place in the philosopher's armor of patience. In the middle ages the devout who were racked with pain had a special patron to whom they could call for deliverance. St. Apollonia, a martyr under the emperor Philip, among other cruel indignities had her teeth pulled out. In consequence she became toothache's tutelary saint, as her emblems—one of which is "holding a tooth in pinchers"—sufficiently testify.

And there would seem to have been yet another martyr, St. Blaize, who took cognizance of the disease. He was honored in the little town of St. Blazey, in Cornwall, where candles offered upon his altar were supposed to be an infallible cure for toothache.

KISSING THE HAND.

The Practice Was Instituted by the Early Roman Rulers.

The practice of kissing the hands was instituted by the early Roman rulers as a mark of subjection as much as one of respect, and under the first Cæsar the custom was kept up, but only for a time.

These worthies conceived the idea that the proper homage due to their exalted station called for less familiar modes of obeisance, so the privilege of kissing the emperor's hand was reserved as a special mark of condescension or distinction for officers of high rank.

No such restriction, however, was placed on the emperors themselves, who, if they wished to confer signal honor on any of their subjects, kissed either the mouths or the eyes of those they wished specially to favor, the kiss generally intimating some promotion or personal satisfaction for some achievement.

Roman fathers considered the practice of kissing of so delicate a nature that they never kissed their wives in the presence of their daughters.

Then, too, only the nearest relatives were allowed to kiss their kindred of the gentler sex on the mouth, for in those days, as now, kissing was not a mere arbitrary sign, but it was the spontaneous language of the affections, especially that of love.

Under the Romans if a lover kissed his betrothed before marriage she inherited half of his worldly goods in the event of his death before the marriage ceremony, and if she died her heritage descended to her nearest relatives.

The Policeman's Evidence

REGARDING THE THOROUGH CURE OF CHRONIC CONSTIPATION BY THE USE OF

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Nearly every occupation has considerable influence on the health. While outdoor work is usually most healthy, there are circumstances, as in the case of policemen, which cause special ailments.

The greatest enemy to the policeman's health is constipation Owing to his duties on his beat he is led to frequently neglect the call of nature, and as a natural consequence his bowels become irregular and he suffers from intestinal indigestion.

The letter quoted below is the unsolicited testimonial of a policeman, who believes that his fellows on the police force, as well as all people who suffer as he did, should know of the excellence of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Policeman Peter C. Morris, 10 Wascana avenue, Toronto, states: "For years I was troubled with habitual constipation, which, I believe, is the most common ailment of all policemen. I had spent considerable money in trying all sorts of so-called remedies for constipation, and was always disappointed, as the relief was only temporary.

"I now gladly state that I have been completely cured by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and shall be pleased to personally recommend them to any person who wishes to interview me. I have already advised many friends to use them."

Constipation probably causes more distress and discomfort than any other derangement of the bodily organs, and is undoubtedly responsible for a majority of other human ills. You can be cured of constipation by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They are more generally used in Canada than any other medicine, and their sale is increasing all the time. Most people can refer you to cases of serious diseases being cured by this great medicine. One pill a dose; 25 cents a box. At all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

When Moore Sang.

In singing his own songs Moore altered the arrangement of the airs and sang the first part of each verse twice over at the beginning instead of as a refrain at the end. In that glorious song of his, "Oh, the Light Entrancing!" Moore's own singing of it was a matchless treat. With head upraised, he seemed almost to revel in the fresh morning light as he gazed on the "sight entrancing," and his eye sparkled as "files arrayed with helm and blade" seemed to pass before him, while a deeper feeling awoke as the passion of the song came upon him.

His voice, one of infinite modulation, but of small compass, rose clear and thrilling to its highest pitch as he sang:

> Go ask yon despot whether
> His armed bands could bring such hands
> And hearts as ours together.

His song was an inspired recitative, and he seemed to improvise as he ran his fingers over the notes, and as the tide of thought came over him it was poured forth in harmonious cadences of exquisite variety. Had he been tied to a chair, with the added doom of a prosy companion, he would have exploded and gone off like a rocket or a bottle of sparkling champagne.

Moorish Slavery.

It would do those good who write passionate articles on Moorish slavery to see the well fed, lazy slave of Wazan lounging in the sun, kiff pipe in mouth and scarcely doing a stroke of work from week's end to week's end. The most ordinary English kitchenmaid would accomplish in a couple of hours what a Wazan slave does in a week. All are free to come and go as they please, but none avails himself of this freedom. The reason is not far to seek. In Wazan they are fed and clothed by the shereefs and on holidays and feast days receive presents of money.

Thus all the necessities of life are found them without their having to work for them, which otherwise they would be obliged to do. Nor is it only the necessities of life that are thus supplied to them free, but they are given each his room to live in and married at the expense of the shereefs to slave women. Their children, by law slaves, are not necessarily so and are often apprenticed to workmen to learn some trade or if they wish are free to seek their fortune in other lands.

A Lucky Escape.

An elephant hunt on the Muar river is described in the Straits Times of Singapore. The beast turned hunter, and the man, fleeing, caught his foot in a rattan creeper and fell. He discharged his rifle, however, and that fortunately frightened the animal away. The Times continues: "It is not every man who has the good luck when pursued by an elephant to be crossing a swamp, so that when the animal has carefully kneaded his prostrate foe and passed along thinking him completely pulverized the said man should come up smiling behind the elephant none the worse for his massage treatment. This actually happened to a well known man in the Straits Settlements."

A Unique Home.

In Sweden and Norway there are several homes for spinsters. One of these at least is as attractive as it is unique. It is a monument to the memory of an exceedingly wealthy old man, who, dying more than 200 years ago, left the major part of his fortune to the old maids among his descendants. A superb home was built, furnished and managed by salaried trustees. It flourished and has continued. Any unmarried woman who can prove blood relationship to the founder of the institution is entitled to admission to the home. She is given a suit of rooms, a servant, private meals and is subject to no rules save such as ordinary good behavior demands.

Music's Power.

Grimes—Yes, I'm fond of music. There's Tinnerman, for instance—

Brady—You don't call his horn blowing music?

Grimes—It has been very enjoyable to me. I got Tinnerman to keep at it night and day, and the result was that I bought the house next door for a thousand dollars less than the man who lived in it asked a week or two before.

Two Sinners.

"It is very wrong to tell a falsehood," said his mother to little Jimmie, who had caught him in one.

"Then we're both offul sinners, ain't we, maw?" queried Jimmie.

"Both! What do you mean?"

"Why, you told Missus Smith yesterday that you hoped she'd call again, an' after she wuz gone you said you wished she'd never come again."

A Money Saver.

"But you are taking considerable risk in letting your young men owe two or three weeks' board."

"Yes, there is some risk," answered the boarding house keeper. "But then, you see, they worry over it so that they lose their appetites, so I save money in the long run."

Earned.

She—He was desperately in love with her. Why, he sent her costly flowers and presents nearly every day for two years.

He—Did he finally win her?

She—No; he earned her.

The Truth Too Much.

"Jedze," said the colored prisoner, "is I expected ter tell de truth?"

"Of course you are."

"Well, then, des go ahead en sentence me fust."

SELECTIONS

GREAT LAKE CITIES.

Built From Industries of the Lake Region.

"The story of the development of the industries of the lake region and the growth of interlake commerce is written in the histories of the great cities of commercial and manufacturing importance which line the American shore of all the lakes," says Richard Linthicum in Ainslee's.

"Chicago, the mistress of these inland seas, is the food market of the world and the commercial center of the American nation.

"The great lakes have made Buffalo the second city of importance in the Empire State, the greatest point of exchange between rail and water traffic on the globe and the fourth port of the world in the volume of its tonnage.

"They have made Cleveland, near the midshore of Lake Erie, an iron and steel center of manufacture second only to Pittsburg.

"Detroit, the oldest city on the lakes and most closely associated with their history, is also the most beautiful. With nine miles of water frontage and a magnificent city park on one of the large islands in the river, it is even more picturesque in its aproaches than Cleveland on the bluffs. It has grown so steadily in commercial importance that its business characteristics now possess a greater interest than either its scenic features or historic localities.

"Milwaukee, the second city of importance on Lake Michigan, is the brewing center of the world, but it manufactures more iron than beer and nearly half as much flour and does an immense business in meats and leather.

"Duluth, the commercial ruler of Lake Superior, has achieved a greatness almost equal to that predicted in the hyperbolic ridicule of Proctor Knott.

"All of the cities of established commercial importance on the great lakes except Duluth have large shipyards equipped for the construction of even the largest types of ocean vessels—Buffalo, Cleveland, Toledo, Chicago, Milwaukee and Bay City, at the head of Saginaw bay.

"Just across the St. Louis river from Duluth her sister city of West Superior also has large shipyards, and it is there that the whalebacks, the curious craft that look like a huge boiler afloat, are built."

Appendicitis Is Not New.

"Why is it," asked a man of a physician, "that so many people are suffering these days with appendicitis and have to be operated upon when there didn't use to be any of them?"

"My young friend," the doctor answered, "this disease has been in the world ever since Adam was. Perhaps that story of his losing a rib may have arisen because he was operated on for appendicitis. When your grandfather was a boy, his neighbors had it all around him, and so they did when you were a boy, but they called it inflammation of the bowels, stomach ache, acute indigestion, liver trouble or something of that sort. The patient got well or he died, but no one ever opened him when living to see what the matter was. Perhaps it is as well that they did not, for much of the surgery of those days was more dangerous than any disease."

The Shad Movement.

One of the unexplained phenomena of the movements of shad is that, coincident with their disappearance from Connecticut waters, where the schools are perceptibly diminishing, they are appearing in large numbers in the Ohio river. The first shad caught in the latter stream was in 1876. It was considered such a rarity that it was sent to the Smithsonian institution. During the past five years the fish has been multiplying there at an extraordinary rate, and it is now caught in quantities within five miles of Cincinnati. If the shad schools are migrating from the Connecticut river to the Ohio, they must be doing it by the way of New Orleans, as it is impossible for them to cross the Alleghanies.

What Is It Worth?

What is the value of an acre of land which will produce fifty bushels of corn, worth $25, and a ton and a half of cornstalks worth $6, at an expense for labor of only $7? But such land will not do this every year, and not every year is corn so high, says one. True, the field should have the benefit of a crop rotation, but the fifty bushels should be obtained almost any year by properly converting the crop into some animal food product. We should say that such land is worth $100 per acre if it is worth anything. So do not be foolish and sell it for $50 for $60 if you have such land.

His Idea.

Teacher—What do you mean by a "quietus?"

Pupil—A blow in the solar plexus.

Remember, Girls!

'Tis wrong for any maid to be
Abroad at night alone;
A chaperon she needs till she
Can call some chap her own.

Suspicious.

Husband—I've just bought your mother an automobile.

Wife—Oh, John, how could you be so cruel?

All For Her Sake.

He carried lunch to sylvan scenes;
He made the old swing go;
He hacked his knife to ope sardines,
Because he loved her so.

GOUGH'S QUICK WIT.

A Retort That Silenced an Interruption in the Audience.

An effort of one of John B. Gough's tours of the west was to arouse his converts to a political movement in favor of prohibition, and in several states the politicians began to give consideration to the cry. The distillers and liquor dealers are said to have been so frightened that they employed men to follow the lecturer, sit among the audience and endeavor to confound him with questions. He had worked a Topeka (Kan.) audience up to a fine pitch of excitement and in his effective manner cried:

"Temperance! Temperance! Temperance! It will mean money in your pocket, clothes on your back, happiness in your home and God in your heart!"

Up leaped one of the paid interrupters and shouted to the audience:

"Money in your pockets! Why, fellow citizens, follow this man's ideas and we'll be all in the poorhouse! Think of the fields of tasseled corn that stretch on every side! Whisky is made from corn. We sell millions of dollars' worth of corn to the whisky makers. Stop the manufacture of whisky, and what'll we do?"

Then, turning to Gough, he went on: "You, Mr. Smarty—what'll we do? Tell us, if prohibition comes, what'll we do with our corn?"

"Raise more hogs, my friend," replied Gough without a second's hesitation—"raise more hogs!"

FAIRY GOLD

BY BERTHA M. CLAY

—Author of—

"A Woman's Vengeance," "Between Two Loves,"
"Her Second Love," "A Fatal Wedding," Etc.

Only Yolande is alone and companionless, and she is keeping near her uncle and her governess, who are both too much absorbed to notice her. Ever and anon she casts a swift wistful glance at Lady Nora and Dallas, who are standing at the other side of the orchard, by the brook, talking together. A vague chill shadow has fallen over the glory and brightness of the pleasant afternoon for her, ever since the luncheon, two hours ago, when Captain Glynne met his cousin—that unpleasant-looking, sallow-faced Viscount—and they walked up and down together by the stream. Ever since then the shadow has fallen, and the wild mint-blossoms have faded on her breast with the fading day.

"Why, mother, do you wish me to canvass for Lyulph?" Dallas asks very coldly.

He never calls her "mother" except when displeased with her or very seriously in earnest, knowing she dislikes it so.

"Because it would be so much better for us both — you know it would," Lady Nora replies agitatedly—"if we could keep on a friendly footing with the Pentreath people. I have no chance," Lady Nora says, flushing angrily and biting her lip, "between that horrid Glynne and that poor miserable Lady Maria. I simply can't endure to stay in the room with her and her awful aches and pains and ailments, and her wretched little dying babies. And Glynne tyrannises over me so insolently, and misrepresents me so to his father. Pentreath was quite amiable and good-natured to me always until his son set him against me."

"Tyrannises over you?" Dallas echoes questioningly.

"Yes—about debts and—and all sorts of things," Lady Nora answers hurriedly—"reads me lectures, and advises me, and tries to spy into everything I do or say."

"Do you owe him money, mother?" Dallas asks.

"Of course I owe him money!" Lady Nora answers sharply, impatient at the absurdity of the question. I asked him to help me when I was in difficulties about that house in Seymour Street. Whom ought he to have helped if he didn't help his uncle's widow, left destitute as I was, too? Of course he thinks a great deal of his money," she adds contemptuously. "He is richer than ever he was since he went in for those City speculations, and meaner, if possible!"

"He is mean and hypocritical, and he is a man for whom I have neither liking nor respect; and I am not going to toady Lyulph Glynne for the sake of trying to get into a corner of my uncle's good graces," Dallas declares. "Lord Pentreath sees people only through his son's eyes."

"You needn't toady him," Lady Nora says eagerly. "You need only let Pentreath see you, Dallas, for him to like you." There are real maternal love and pride in her glance as she speaks. "He hasn't seen you for years—since you were a mere schoolboy. You are sure to be popular with every one of their set—and they are a good set, though pompous and dull, as you say," she continues more eagerly. "And, if you do canvass for Lyulph, and he is successful, he can not but feel under a deep obligation to you; and his father too will feel the obligation. Dallas, dear, it is a chance—you must not neglect it!" she urges.

"I thought you used not to care whether the Pentreaths were friends with us or not?" remarks Dallas coldly. "And only yesterday I understood we were both to seek 'fresh woods and pastures new' in the shape of these people you picked up at the hotel."

"The drysalter people?" questions Lady Nora coldly.

"Yes—quite right. I do not mean to drop them on any account. I am sure they are worthy, useful people to know."

"But that is no reason why you should devote yourself to them, Dallas," Lady Nora says decisively. "I will watch your interests there if need be. The girl is a sentimental, impressionable little thing, I fancy, and you could very easily reinstate yourself at any time in the place in her estimation which I have no doubt you hold at present:" and Lady Nora smiles an ugly cunning little smile. "I found out from the old uncle that the money—this girl Yolande's money, at all events—is strictly settled on herself—her own sole and separate use and all that sort of thing, he gave me very plainly to understand; and it is carefully invested and in the trusteeship of himself and her aunt and a whole posse of relatives—cousins or something of that kind—jam and pickle makers."

"What?" Dallas asks.

"Jam and pickle makers," Lady Nora repeats airily — "sardine importers and so forth, you know — people called Sarjent, or Wilmot, or some such name."

"Oh, ay—I heard her speak of cousin Wilmot!" Dallas says, with a slight sardonic smile. "I thought there were 'sweet' associations with the name."

"So in that case, you know, with any of their vulgar trustees set over you, and any hampering restrictions, and without proper settlements, you could not think of the girl," Lady Nora declares decisively. "She is not very presentable either—a mere raw schoolgirl. I told the old uncle plainly that to fit Yolande to appear in good society she would need at least a thousand pounds to be spent upon her. He looked thunderstruck," her ladyship adds, laughing, "and asked me, 'What for?' And I replied quietly, 'To polish her mind, manners, and appearance, to teach her fashionable accomplishments, and give her the tone of thoroughly well-bred people—a work of time in itself.' One has to put one's foot down on the prejudices and ideas of that class of people," continues Lady Nora, daintily pushing aside the dead leaves with her parasol as she walked along.

The evening air is cool, the golden light of the setting sun is making long deep shadows, the wind is whispering amongst the osiers on the river banks, as Dallas and Yolande walk back to the waiting carriages.

"This has been a very pleasant afternoon, has it not?" he says, in his tenderest manner.

"Yes—very," she replies timidly.

"You might give me a bit of that mint-blossom as a souvenir. Will you?" he asks, entreatingly. "Have you the bit I gave you? Yes, I see you have. Are you constant then to any thing or person you like?"

"I hope so," Yolande answers, her voice husky with nervousness, her face flushing hotly with shame and happiness, as she stoops and gathers a blossom of the mint for him.

"Thank you, Yolande," he says softly, and presses the hand that tenders him the flower, which he puts away in his pocket-book and forgets, until he tumbles it out one day and thinks how horribly suggestive of peppermint lozenges the perfume is, and so tosses it into the fire.

But the happy hours extend into the happy night for Yolande. They have a dance and a supper at the hotel when they return, and, when it is near midnight, and Dallas is feeling sleepy and inclined to yawn, he resolves to bid his little partner who waltzes so very badly good night and good-bye, and tell her that he is going back to England the next morning with his cousin Viscount Glynne, and that in all probability they shall not meet again.

"Poor little girl, I dare say she will be disappointed!" he says rather pityingly to himself; for Captain Glynne is good-natured, and would rather draw a smile than a sigh, especially from a woman.

So, to make the telling of the news pleasanter to her, he takes Yolande down into the entrance hall, which is a cool, dimly-lit promenade, with a few twinkling gas-lamps and tubs of myrtles and laurels along its whole length, with shady seats between. And there the man and the girl sit down side by side. A fleeting recollection occurs to him oddly enough just at this moment of the scene in Vanity Fair, when George Osborne's stern old father tells him he shall not marry Amelia unless her fortune is satisfactory; and the shallow heart of the vain selfish young officer is stirred into tenderness and compassion for the girl who adores him, who grows precious to him when he thinks he may have to put her and his love away from him for ever.

"I want to say good-bye to you here, Yolande," Captain Glynne says softly.

CHAPTER VI.

"I am going to England to-morrow with my cousin, Viscount Glynne," Dallas explains to Yolande, after a pause. "The boat leaves early, so I suppose I shall not see you again for some time."

And the girl's foolish heart sinks like a leaden weight.

"I don't suppose you will ever see me again," she responds unsteadily, with the ghost of a little careless laugh.

"That depends on you," he returns, in a low tone, with the lightest touch of his fingers on her wrist to adjust the jet bangles that have slipped down too far.

She trembles perceptibly at his touch, and he draws a little closer to her, as he asks—

"Would you like to see me again?"

He, Dallas Glynne, is a man among men to the simple ardent soul which is aflame with passionate womanly admiration of him, a demi-god in evening dress. Cousin Wilmot Sarjent and Cousin Wilmot's friends — dashing young City men, whom she has hitherto thought so fashionable and elegant—she sees now in the glaring light of vulgarity—expensively-clad plebeians, even with their superfine silk-faced dress-coats and flashing diamond rings, in the presence of this pale-faced chestnut-haired aristocrat, with the cold calm eyes and proud firm mouth.

"Would you like to see me again?" he persists, and the blood tingles in her veins beneath the magnetic pressure of the fingers laid gently on her arm.

"Yes," whispers Yolande.

"Then you shall," Dallas says, and his strong sinewy hand clasps hers. "You won't forget this pleasant afternoon, will you, Yolande?"

His very pronunciation of her name is as it were, in a different tongue from the pronunciation she has hitherto heard, her friends and relatives laying a fine British accent on the first syllable.

"No," she answers nearly inaudibly; and Dallas Glynne's lips draw very near to the girl's dark glossy head.

"What!" he murmurs, his moustache almost touching her little pink ear. "Won't you tell me, Yolande?"

"No—I shall never forget it," Yolande answers a little louder, though her voice trembles with emotion, and the broken words have a passionate emphasis that almost disconcerts her.

"Then it is not to be good-bye, but au revoir?" he says softly.

His voice is as clear as ever, and as perfect in its modulation, Yolande thinks, with almost sorrowful admiration.

"Yes—if you like," she falters shyly, dreadfully ashamed of her unsteady tones.

"Certainly I should like," Dallas says warmly. "Then good-bye for the present, Yolande dear."

"Good-bye for the present, Captain Glynne," she responds, trying gently to draw away her hand from his close clasp.

"Is that a rebuke to me?" he asks reproachfully. "Can't you address me more kindly than that?"

"No, no, I can't!" she answers hurriedly, with a bashful frightened little laugh.

And here Captain Dallas Glynne thinks it just as well that he should stop. He has had half a mind to make a very tender farewell of it; but something in the look of the girlish profile, the innocent parted lips, the pure trustful curves of the young upturned face, checks him with a throb of compunction which is almost shame.

"Good-bye then once more," he says, with both her hands clasped in his; and then, for the second time that day, he stoops and touches her fingers with his lips. "Here is your governess coming to look for you," he adds aloud, seeing that mademoiselle, with dainty mincing gait, is gliding softly up to them.

"Pardon, mademoiselle," she begins with an exaggerated air of humility, glancing affectedly upwards from beneath her long lashes at Dallas Glynne while she speaks: "but madame your aunt sent me to look for you. She is very tired, and has gone to her room."

"And it is quite time I went to mine," Yolande rejoins nervously, laughing. "Thank you, mademoiselle; I am sorry you had the trouble of looking for me." Then turning to the young man, she says, "Good night and good-bye once more, Captain Glynne."

"Good night and good-bye—for the present," he responds, in soft low tones, looking into her eyes with a half-veiled smile.

And then he stands and looks after her as she goes down the long hall, with mademoiselle following very slowly. She has bowed deferentially to Captain Glynne, with another of her keen quick glances, and he has returned the bow very gravely and courteously, without even looking at her.

At the foot of the staircase mademoiselle glances back, and sees that Captain Glynne has gone out into the court-yard to enjoy a cigar in the moonlight.

Half way down the bewildering corridor that leads to their rooms mademoiselle pauses with a gesture of dismay.

"I have dropped my mouchoir," she exclaims—"my one only Valenciennes mouchoir! Oh, mademoiselle I must run back and look for it! I think I dropped it on the stairs."

"Oh, yes! Run, mademoiselle! Shall I come and help you to search for it?" Yolande asks sympathetically.

"No, cherie. I am sure you are too tired to do anything of the kind," mademoiselle replies, with affectionate determination, as she runs off fleetly and gracefully, giving a look at herself in a mirror she passes and adjusting her coiffure.

She keeps very close to the open door in the moonlight whilst she dives behind the tubs of myrtle and laurels and moves the cane-seated chairs, until Dallas, quietly smoking and pacing up and down beneath the rustling vine-leaves, perforce has his attention arrested.

"Can I assist you? Have you lost anything?" he asks, removing his cigar, and standing in the doorway. "I think I know a 'plant' when I see one," he mutters to himself.

CHEESE MARKETS.

Tweed, Aug. 7.—There were 850 cheese boarded here to-day, all white; sales, 680 sold at 9 7-16c, balance unsold.

Vankleek Hill, Aug. 7.—There were 1153 boxes of cheese sold here to-day; there were 18 salesmen and six buyers. Four buyers bid 9½c and, after an absolute refusal of the salesmen to accept this price, Weegar bid 9 9-16c for selections. At this price he secured 517 boxes. Fraser then followed with 9 9-16c and secured 415. Welsh then bid 9 9-16c for the balance unsold and got 146 boxes. Only three buyers would touch this price. The quality of the cheese is practically the same as during June and July.

Brockville, Aug. 7.—There were 3362 cheese offered on our board to-day. Salesmen wanted 9⅝c, but the highest bid was 9 9-16c, and no business was done on the board.

The Sault Freight.

Ottawa, Aug. 7.—The total freight handled by the Soo canal for July was 5,082,398 tons, compared with 4,781,072 tons in the same month last year, or an increase of 310,326. During July the American Soo handled 4,558,462 and the Canadian canal 523,963 tons.

SQUANDERED $100,000,000.

English Financiers Floated 40 Companies and They All Went Up

London, Aug. 8.—The official receiver announces that he has issued summonses against Whitaker Wright and Robert Leman to recover $750,000 in connection with share transactions between the British-America Corporation and the failed London & Globe Finance Corporation, Limited. In the same report the receiver says that for the present it is not proposed to prosecute the directors of the London & Globe Company for misfeasance.

Probably the full extent of the money lost to the public by the company will never be known, but financial experts now estimate it at upwards of $100,000,000. The flotations for which Wright was responsible aggregated 41, with the enormous capital of $111,775,000, and with few exceptions all these companies are either in liquidation, have been absorbed or are defunct. What the shareholders will recover from the crash may be imagined from the announcement that the creditors of the London & Globe will receive only 5 per cent., and that nothing remains for the shareholders.

Cataract Company Culpable.

St. Catharines, Aug. 8.—The coroner's jury which has been investigating the circumstances connected with the death of Dexter Griffiths, who was shocked to death by electricity in the power house of the Cataract Power Company at DeCew Falls, has given a verdict finding the company culpable of neglect, in employing ordinary laborers to do the work, of the danger attending which they were ignorant, and in not employing competent electricians to do such work, or at least to be constantly present while it was being done, and recommending that such changes be made in the power house as will afford greater protection to the employes.

Kaiser and Czar Friendly

Reval, Aug. 8. — Yesterday afternoon Emperor William and the Czar witnessed the operation of landing a force on the Island of Carloe. This manoeuvre ended by the entire force marching past the sovereigns, who had followed the operations by boat and foot ashore. Upon leaving the island their Majesties responded heartily to the cheers of the crews of the warships. During the day the Czar and the Emperor exchanged aiguillettes, as a token of friendship.

The Diagnosis.

He had seen a hundred doctors,
A hundred, yes, and more,
And each told a different tale
From the one just before.

From diseases unpronounceable
To ordinary chills—
Well, they gave him all the ailments,
Presented him with bills,

Until he reached the limit.
The man was almost dead
Broke; but, mustering his courage
Up, this is what he said:

"I'll make a diagnosis, doc,
If you'll listen ter the p'int;
'Pears to me, considerin',
Your head's plum out of j'int!"

The Marrying Man's View.

The hot advent of old summer has brought back a last year's comer—
The girl who lofts the spheroid and who blossoms out in "pinks."
Woe to brother, pa or lover who neglects

When her strong biceps swat the ball around the grassy links.

With a brand new panama.

"Why, she learned to speak in four, but she can be understood only in one."

Drowned at Delta.

Delta, Aug. 8.—The six-year-old son of Rev. G. P. Williams, a Methodist Episcopal minister, was drowned Wednesday evening about six o'clock. The family were spending the day with Mr. and Mrs. Sterns Ransom, at their summer resort on the island. They were just about ready to leave for home, when they missed the little fellow. After a thorough search the body was found by Mrs. S. W. Seamen.

GUADALUPE SHRINE.

THE MOST DEARLY BELOVED SPOT IN OLD MEXICO.

Thousands From All Over the Country Make Pilgrimages to the Little Village Each Year—The Story That Is Handed Down by Tradition.

There is no spot in all Mexico as dearly beloved as the little town of Guadalupe, which is two and a half miles north of the City of Mexico.

The little village has only 3,000 souls, but many more thousands visit the place on certain days in the year when pilgrimages are made to the holy shrine of Guadalupe.

The 1st of January and the 12th of each month the faithful visit this place and toil up the hill on which it is said that the virgin Guadalupe appeared to Juan Diego, an Indian boy.

According to tradition, Juan was trudging over the hill of Tepeyac on his way to the city on the morning of Dec. 9, 1531, and as he reached the eastern slope of the hill he heard sounds like music. He stopped to listen, and at that moment a cloud appeared and in the midst of it a beautiful lady. She told him to go to the bishop in her name and to tell him that it was her wish that a church should be built on that spot, where she would always be found to give aid to all in trouble. Juan Diego hurried to the bishop with the story of the virgin, but no attention was paid to it. Upon his return home the lady appeared again in the same spot and urged Juan to go again to the bishop.

The following day was the Sabbath, and after mass Juan found the bishop and repeated the message once more. The bishop told him to bring a sign from the virgin. Juan saw the virgin again upon his return home, and she promised to give him a sign, which she did on Dec. 12 as he was going to confession. He passed this time near the foot of the hill, where she appeared once more, and while in conversation with Juan she stamped her foot by way of emphasis, and water flowed at once from the dry, barren hillside, and two holy wells mark that spot today.

The virgin then told Juan to climb to the summit of that barren rocky hill and he would find roses growing there, which he was to gather and carry in his "tilma" to the bishop. Juan did as he was told and found the loveliest roses growing just where she had told him to search for them. He gathered them all and placed them in his "tilma," a sort of blanket.

When he arrived at the house of the bishop and opened the blanket, the roses fell to the floor, and a picture in colors appeared on the blanket representing the virgin as she had appeared to Juan. The bishop fell on his knees in prayer and arose with a promise to build a chapel on the spot the virgin had designated.

Bishop Zumarraga set about to build the church, and when it was completed the "tilma" was placed above the altar in a frame of gold and silver.

That little chapel has since been replaced by the magnificent church to be seen today. There are also two other churches to mark the spot on which the roses were gathered on the summit and at the holy well where the virgin last appeared to Juan. This miracle was recognized in 1663, and in 1754 it was fully sanctioned and confirmed by a papal bull. Later, in 1824, congress decreed Dec. 12 to be a national holiday.

Hidalgo took a picture of Guadalupe for his standard, around which rallied the first army of the revolutionists, and the happy issue that her assistance gave to that war endeared her still more to the people. This picture on the "tilma" is a wonderful piece of work. Artists from all over the world have examined it and have testified that it is of no known style of painting. The Indian garment of ixtil fiber is of a coarse weave. The picture appears on both sides of the cloth and is as bright as new, although said to be over 300 years old. The Church of Nuestra Senora de Guadalupe, in which this marvelous picture hangs, is said by experts to be one of the richest and handsomest on earth today. Its treasures can be counted by millions. It was dedicated May 1, 1709, and is 184 feet long by 122 feet wide. It has a vaulted roof, supported by Corinthian columns. The whole is surmounted by a dome, the lantern of which is 125 feet above the floor. The building cost $1,181,000. The jewels, gold and silver plate and other rich belongings nearly all belong to the government and are estimated at $2,000,000 more.

The church possesses a very costly crown for the virgin. It is of solid gold and weighs many pounds. There are six shields on the crown for the six archbishops of Mexico, and they are all surrounded by diamonds. There are a number of angels, each having an immense ruby on the breast, while the rest of the surface of the crown is covered with sapphires and emeralds. This crown is surmounted by the Mexican eagle, holding aloft a large diamond cross.

The poor pilgrims are not able, many of them, to form an idea of the richness of this church, with its communion rail and balustrades from the sanctuary to the choir of solid silver. They are three feet high, with a top molding a foot wide and a still more massive base. The sacred vessels are all of pure gold embedded with precious stones. The choir has some fine carvings done in ebony and mahogany. The finest is a basso relievo above the stalls, illustrating the litany of the virgin.

Artists were brought from France to paint the frescoes on the walls, and the paintings and statues were the work of the best European artists and sculptors. The organ in itself represents a small fortune.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

GREAT ALTERATION SALE

For the last year we have been inconvenienced considerably for want of space to show our goods, that our business has grown no one will doubt, and in order to keep pace with its rapid growth we must have more room.

To-day the carpenters will remove our rear store and begin work in earnest. The plumbers are with us busy at their part of the job. We have had to remove all our goods in the rear of the cellar and the front part of our store is also to receive special up-to-date touches. What we ask is that the people of Belleville and vicinity will aid us in getting rid of our crowded stock, and for this end we will hold two weeks sale, goods will be sold so cheap that it will startle the whole community.

Montreal, Que., Aug. 7.—Trident, the Canadian defender, in the first race in the Seawanhaka Cup contest, on Lake St. Louis this afternoon, won a victory from Tecumseh, the American challenger, in a very easy way. The race was three times around a windward and return course, 12 miles in all, from Pointe Claire to Beaconsfield. The challenging yacht was outsailed in every way, and proved herself vastly Trident's inferior in a heavy breeze. She lost 3 1-2 minutes on the first leg, fell steadily behind, and was defeated by 14 minutes and 52 seconds.

SHORT MEETING OF CIVIC COMMITTEES

Electric Lights for Clock and City Buildings—The Grading of Victoria Avenue.

Dr. McKeown Declines to Act as Health Officer—Dogs on the Park.

At the meeting of Civic Committees last evening the following members of the Council were in attendance: Ald. Chown, McFee, Price, Sulman, Gibraith, Pope, Wills and Panter.

The work before the various committees was not of such a nature as to cause lengthy discussions, and, as a result, the session was not a prolonged one.

PUBLIC WORKS.

Ald. Panter, chairman, presided over this Committee.

The accounts passed were as follows:

Pay Sheet No. 16	$750.43
J. W. Walker	120.34
J. W. Walker	21.93
J. Weir	40.00

A discussion of considerable length took place as to the advisability of continuing the grading and repairing of Victoria Avenue.

A number of the Aldermen expressed their opinion that the work could not be completed from Front street to Foster avenue, as the appropriation would not permit.

The Street Surveyor said it would cost about $400 more to complete Victoria avenue to Church street.

It was decided to finish the work to Church street.

A motion prevailed that six street gullies on Victoria avenue be changed and two others raised.

A motion passed that Pinnacle St. be cleaned and the scrapings placed in the yard in rear of the post office.

Ald. Price said he had received permission to have the jog in the road at the corner of Bleecker avenue and Pine street straightened, the party who owns the piece of land allowing the Council to use the same.

The Surveyor was authorized to have this work done at once.

On motion of Ald. Chown the sewer on John street was ordered to be constructed by the Street Surveyor, he also to build a street gully from Rear street to connect with the John St. sewer.

FIRE, WATER AND LIGHT.

Ald. McFee, chairman, presided.

The only business before this Committee was the passing of the Trenton Electric Company's account of $333.51, subject to revision by the chairman.

MARKET AND CITY PROPERTY.

Ald. Wills, chairman, presided.

The Chairman stated that a flag was ordered to be procured for the City building, but a handsome one, 18 feet in length, had been donated by Ald. Sulman, and it would be floated to-morrow in honor of the King's coronation, and Ald. Sulman would have the privilege of first hoisting it.

On motion of Ald. Chown the flag was accepted with thanks to the donor, Ald. Sulman.

Electric Light for City Buildings.

Ald. Wills said that in looking over the contract between the City and the Trenton Electric Company he found that the Co'y had agreed to furnish the City electric lights for the City buildings at the rate of $2 per annum for each light of 16 candle power. He would like to have instructions to light the police station and the City clock. The cost at present for lighting the clock was from $50 to $60 per annum, although he had secured gas at $1 per 1000 feet. The contemplated change would make quite a saving.

Ald. McFee—"The fire halls should be lit in the same way."

Ald. Wills agreed with Ald. McFee, as to the lighting of the fire halls.

In answer to an enquiry Ald. Wills said the cost of wiring would not be very much.

On motion the matter was left in the hands of the Chairman to ascertain what the cost would be as to wiring the city building.

PARKS.

Ald. Pope, Chairman, presided over this committee:

The following accounts were passed:

Trenton Electric Co	$25 00
C. E. Bishop	8 15
E. Magrath	15 00
S. Sheehan	4 50

Dogs on the Park.

Ald. Pope said he would like to introduce a by-law in reference to prohibiting dogs from going upon the park, as they were certainly a nuisance.

Ald. Wills—"Draft your by-law and bring it in on Monday night."

Ald. Price said there was complaints about bicyclists riding on the park on band nights.

Ald. Pope said some young people on one evening rode around at a rather fast gait, but on band nights the majority of those who went upon the park dismounted at the entrance to the park.

No action was taken in this matter.

EXECUTIVE.

Ald. Chown, Chairman, presided over this committee.

Dr. McKeown Declines.

A communication was read from Dr. McKeown, declining to act as Medical Health Officer, as he had not the time.

The matter was left over until the Council meeting.

Auditors Want More Money.

A communication was read from the Auditors, stating that they could not accept $100 each in full for the work done.

In answer to an enquiry as to what they asked, Ald. Chown said they asked for $125 each and $17.50 for typewriting.

The matter was referred to the Council meeting.

The following accounts were passed:

J. Weir	$60 00
Hart & Riddell	41 60
D. M. Waters	6 65
R. C. Hulme's expenses	17 25
One half expense of telephone in Solicitor's office	6 25

A communication was presented from the Womens Christian Association, asking the Council to pay $36.50 for the maintenance of three children of George Babcock, who were sent away. It appears that the mother is dead and the father is in jail, and the children had to be provided with a home. There was also an account of $14 from Mrs. Hannah for taking care of them before they were sent away.

On motion the communication was left over until Council meeting.

Ald. Chown stated that the personal and guarantee bonds of Mr. F. D. Diamond, one of the collectors of taxes, were in the possession of the City Treasurer, and the Solicitor had examined them and reported them correct.

Ald. Price asked if it was the intention to hold the Council meeting on Monday evening. He stated that there would be a display of fireworks and band concert at the Driving Park that evening and all would no doubt like to attend. Could the meeting not be held on Tuesday evening?

Ald. Wills, Pope and Galbraith stated that they could not be present on Tuesday evening.

It was decided to meet on Monday evening at 7.30 sharp.

Ald. Panter drew attention to the fact that Mayor Graham was out of the city and no one was acting in the capacity of Chief Magistrate.

Ald. Sulman said His Worship would be back on Monday morning.

Ald. Pope said that Ald. Sinclair had requested that the band be allowed to give one of its concerts on Monday evening at the Driving Park, in connection with the display of fireworks.

The request was complied with.

This completed the work of the session and the committees adjourned.

A New Drug Store

Port Arthur Chronicle: Mr. A. Smith, Belleville, formerly of Rochester, New York, has opened up his drug store on the corner of Cumberland and Pearl streets. Mr. Smith has had a large experience in the leading drug store of Rochester, where he had been head dispenser, and comes to Port Arthur highly recommended. The premises are tastefully arranged, and contain all drugs and goods usually found in any first class drug store. The pharmacy will be known as the "Red Cross Drug Store."

FOR BROADER VIEWS

THE PLEA OF AN ENGLISH CANON FOR WIDER FELLOWSHIP.

(New York Tribune.)

Canon Hensley Henson, of Westminster Abbey, who appears to be a coming man in the Church of England, makes a noteworthy plea for the recognition of non-episcopal churches by the Anglican Church. The doctrine of apostolic succession, he says, which is the real barrier to such recognition, is a comparatively modern theory, and it crumbles at the touch of scholarly investigation. The necessity of episcopal ordination was not recognized until the Restoration Settlement. In point of fact, under the subscription act of 1571, non-episcopally ordained clergy were permitted to preach and hold benefices in the English Church, while such High Church men as Andrewes, Overdall, Bramhall, Cosin and Thorndike refused to take a rigidly exclusive view of orders. Canon Henson demands that the same broad view of the question be permitted to-day. At a recent meeting of the Church Missionary Society an Anglican bishop described the admirable work of Xavier, the Jesuit; Schultz, the Lutheran, and Carey, the Baptist. The canon, who was present, approached the prelate and said: "Is it not strange, my lord, that the schismatic should loom so large in your discourse?" "Ah," he replied, "in the mission field we have to take a very broad view of things." "Do you not think, my lord," rejoined Canon Henson, "that it is about time we domesticated that broad view here at home?"

Nor is the argument from history all. Canon Henson declares that it is reinforced by the remarkable growth of the non-episcopal churches. These are not less effective than the Anglican in the work of spiritual regeneration. "By what right, therefore," asks the canon, "can we continue to exclude them from our frank and affectionate fellowship? By what right do we ignore them in our parishes, refuse them all access to our pulpits, urge their clergy to repudiate their orders and facilitate their reordination? We treat them as the Roman Catholics treat us, but with even less excuse." The episcopate, in the opinion of the canon, is not a primitive institution, but a development from an earlier system, which became dominant only in the course of two or three centuries. The late Dr. Edwin Hatch in his Brampton lectures, expressed the same view even more strongly, and Dr. Wordsworth, the present bishop of Salisbury, says in his book "The Ministry of Grace," that up to the third century after Christ the government of the Church in Rome and Alexandria was Presbyterian. The general view of these authorities is that while episcopacy may be necessary to the well being of the church, it is not essential to its being. It grew into shape naturally out of the circumstances of the times, and therefore may be modified or even discarded at any time by the church.

The reception accorded to Canon Henson's article indicates the growth of liberalism in the Anglican Church, and the corresponding decline of the extreme Anglo-Catholic conception of the church. The Bishop of Durham declares: "This is what I have long thought and have long tried to say, only it is now said much better." Dean Fremantle, of Ripon, says he has held these views for fifty years, and Dean Stubbs, of Ely, is almost "in entire sympathy with Canon Henson in this matter." Many High Church men, of course, protest. Dean Kitchin, of Durham, in a somewhat cynical vein, says that it makes him "feel just as if, after a touching discourse on the brotherhood of man, one were to invite the cook to have tea with us." The arrogant assumption of this simile proves the dean to be a better churchman than he is a Christian. The fatal objection to Canon Henson's plea, according to another High Church man, Dean Stephens, of Winchester, is that it "would forever destroy the hope of a closer fellowship with our brethren of the Eastern or the Roman Church, who are more numerous than the members of all the 'non-episcopal churches' put together.

While there is no immediate likelihood that the church will heed the plea of Canon Henson, the sentiment in its favor is growing, not only in the English Church, but also in the American Episcopal Church.

Died Taking a Drink

The following "Prohib" tragedy is reported from Dallas, Texas, that State, though not averse to burning niggers, being death on whiskey in occasional localities. The right to sell liquor in Hunt County, adjoining Dallas, expired at midnight on Saturday, and prohibition went into effect for the next two years. Pearl Austin, Toby Jackson and Pete Dewey determined to "drink whisky till the last minute under the law." Each had a large bottle. The three men were standing in a farm wagon just as the clock struck 12. Austin raised his bottle to his mouth, saying, as he did so: "Here goes the biggest drink ever taken in Hunt County." Suddenly, he began to reel, then to lurch, and in a moment fell to the floor of the wagon. He had taken his last drink and drawn his last breath.

HOT WEATHER AILMENTS

MORE LITTLE ONES DIE DURING HOT WEATHER MONTHS THAN AT ANY OTHER SEASON.

It is a lamentable fact that thousands of little ones die from hot weather ailments, whose lives might be spared if mothers had at hand the proper remedy to administer promptly. Hot weather ailments come suddenly, and unless promptly treated a precious little life may be lost in a few hours. Baby's Own Tablets promptly check and cure diarrhoea, stomach troubles, cholera infantum and other hot weather ailments. They also give relief to teething troubles, and prevent the ailments that come at this period. Every prudent mother should keep a box of Baby's Own Tablets in the house at all times. No other medicine acts so promptly and so surely, and the Tablets are guaranteed to contain no opiate or harmful drug. They always do good and cannot possibly do harm, and crushed to a powder you can give them to the smallest, sickliest infant. Mrs. Geo. Foote, St. Thomas, Ont., says: "My baby was troubled with diarrhoea and was very cross and restless, and got so little sleep I hardly knew what to do with her. I got a box of Baby's Own Tablets and after giving her some her bowels became regular and she could sleep well. I think the Tablets a splendid medicine."

You can get the Tablets at any drug store or by mail post paid at 25 cents a box by writing to the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., or Schenectady, N.Y.

COLLIERIES ARE IN VERY BAD SHAPE

OUT OF THIRTY-SIX MINES, ONLY FOURTEEN COULD RESUME WORK AT ONCE.

Shenandoah, Pa., Aug. 7.—William Stein, the State Mine Inspector for the Shenandoah region yesterday announced that five collieries under his jurisdiction which have an estimated value of $1,500,000, have been rendered useless by reason of having been flooded, and have been permanently abandoned by the companies owning them. Four of them—Bear Run, East Bear Ridge, Kohinoor, and Preston No. 3—belong to the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company, and he places their value at about $300,000 each. The other colliery is the Lawrence, and is owned by the Shaefer estate, of Pottsville, and also represents about $300,000.

Mr. Stein estimates that out of the thirty-six collieries in his district only fourteen are in a condition for immediate operation if the strike were ended. The others are in such a condition that it would require anywhere from one to four months to clear them of water and make repairs. He said the average time would be about two months.

The abandonment of the five collieries will compel 2,000 mine workers to seek employment in other parts of the region.

In the coal fields south of here, Mr. Stein said the situation is about as bad. But in the Wyoming and Lackawanna region the mines are in much better condition.

The Mine Inspector's statement created considerable interest here, as it confirmed the belief of some of the coal company officials that a full resumption of coal mining will not take place this year, and in consequence the tendency of coal prices will be upward rather than downward.

To Cut Off Non-union Ears.

The Rev. H. Edwards, pastor of the Presbyterian Church here, said to-day that five young men in his congregation, which is made up principally of mine workers, have informed him that foreigners have determined to cut off an ear of every man who returns to work, so that they will be forever marked as "unfit workmen." Mr. Edwards says his young men are in a position to know, and he believes the story. The foreigners think this the easiest method of preventing attempts to break the strike.

Stoning the troops was repeated early this morning. This time the attack was not upon the camp, but upon the provost guard, stationed at the Pennsylvania Railroad station, which is near one of the foreign colonies in the southern part of the town.

PEOPLE WITH BAD BREATH

Generally suffer from Catarrh and should use Catarrhozone Inhaler four times daily, and be cured. The pleasantly scented Catarrhozone vapor spreads through every air passage of the breathing organs, and reaches the very root of the disease at once; it kills the germs, purifies and cleanses the mucous surfaces, and eradicates every vestige of catarrh in a short time.

Pure, sweet breath, free from headache, sneezing and discharge are quickly derived from the use of Catarrhozone Inhaler. Complete outfit, guaranteed to cure, costs $1.00; trial size 25c. Druggists or N. C. Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

THE EXTRADITION TREATY.

The fact of the name of the Minister of Justice appearing upon the record as counsel for Gaynor and Greene, two fugitives from justice, who were demanded under the provisions of the extradition treaty by the authorities of the United States, has given rise, and properly so, to unfavorable comments by United States journals, and has led a United States official to take means to shield and protect criminals who were demanded under the provisions of the same treaty, by Canadian officials; and to do so this Yankee official resorted to methods unknown to either law or equity.

The point, however, that most interests Canadians, is the extraordinary position in which Mr. Fitzpatrick, the Canadian Minister of Justice, finds himself, he appearing as one of the counsel, striving to prevent the ends of justice being reached. This will be the better understood when it is known that the case must come before him as Minister of Justice, an officer of the Crown, for his decision as to whether the crime for which the demand for extradition is made comes within the provisions of the law.

The position is one which reflects no credit upon the Minister of Justice, giving rise as it does to the principle involved in a Minister of the Crown being a partner in a firm whose business must of necessity, when it affects the interpretation of a law providing for the surrendering of persons charged with criminal offences, committed in a foreign country, come before him who has been engaged in the case for discussion, as in the present case, it must.

That a Minister of Justice should not occupy such an analagous position, is clear and requires no argument to sustain the position.

Commenting upon this case the Montreal Gazette pertinently remarks:

> "It was an extraordinary thing that the name of the Minister of Justice should have been used in such a connection. No one could think of Sir John Thompson, Sir Alexander Campbell, Mr. Mills, or, indeed, of any of the gentlemen who have preceded Mr. Fitzpatrick in the office which he now holds, consenting, while in office, even for a day, to appear as counsel for alleged criminals fighting to avoid a trial on charges for which they had been indicted. Mr. Fitzpatrick's appearance for nigh a month in the role in which it is now sought to have him retired from has lowered this office in the public respect, and has been the cause of foreign criticism of Canada's administration of justice that has made Canadians everywhere to be ashamed. It has been suggested that the Minister of Justice should cease to be member of any legal firm when he takes office. The incidents of this Gaynor-Greene case do more than suggest the wisdom of such a course. They make it imperative. How, after what has happened, Mr. Fitzpatrick can be held to deal unbiassedly with the fugitives' case when it comes before him for action, as it must come if they are to be extradited, is impossible to conceive."

CORONATION SERVICE AT BRIDGE ST CHURCH

ELOQUENT ADDRESS BY REV. DR. CROTHERS, WHICH WILL BE REPEATED TO-MORROW.

Bridge St. Church bell was the first to ring out the glad tidings that King Edward had been crowned, and the service which took place there this morning was a notable one. The congregation was large, and no one who heard the eloquent and inspiring address delivered by the Pastor, Rev. Dr. Crothers, will forget it in a hurry. At the close of the service a deputation waited on the Rev. Dr. and asked him to repeat the address to-morrow night, and if you like stirring periods and loyal sentiments, well, you should be there.

King Edward Was Crowned

At Twenty-seven Minutes After Noon To-day.

King Was Feeling Quite Strong Last Night—Looked Forward to Coronation Without Misgivings—People of London Sat Up All Night.

London, Aug. 8.—The eve of the coronation of King Edward VII. was marked in London by large crowds, which wandered all the evening somewhat aimlessly through the semi-illumined streets down Whitehall, whence the Canadian arch was the centre of attraction, around Westminster Abbey and along the Strand, where the sidewalks were blocked with the expectant populace.

Sat Up All Night.

The absence of blatant horns and annoying features was pleasantly atoned for by the lighting up of many buildings. The brilliancy of the illumination held the country visitors to the city spellbound so that vehicular traffic became more and more difficult as the night wore on. Until a very late hour the stand speculators did a thriving business, and around those stands occupying good locations there were lines of people anxious to get seats at the last moment. Many of the thousands who walked through the streets exhibited unmistakable signs of intention to sit up all night in the hope of securing a free coign of vantage from which to view to-morrow's procession.

KING EDWARD VII.

Curious Nervousness.

Workmen are still busy putting the finishing touches to the Abbey, and its approaches and every detail of this work was watched eagerly by the spectators. In an undramatic sort of way London has been transformed by the multitudes wishing to see any part of the ceremonies into a city of great unrest. The idea of sleep or an adequate allowance of time for rest has been quite given up by the people in the streets, and underlying this intensity of expectation there is curious nervousnesses among the majority lest they should awaken from their shortened slumbers to find the great event once more postponed.

Had to Have Court Dress.

Among the many incidents of the night, one of the most curious occurred at Scotland Yard, where a Scotch magnate (probably Carnegie), who had received a sudden telegraphic invitation to be present at Westminster Abbey, with the proviso that he appear in court dress, appealed at a late hour to the police to help him hire or borrow the clothes necessary for admittance.

All signs point to an orderly celebration under doubtful weather conditions, and with public enthusiasm tempered by heartfelt relief over the passing of the shadow which so recently overcast the Empire.

King Feeling Strong.

King Edward passed a busy day at Buckingham Palace, and did not appear to the public at all. At a late hour to-night he was reported as feeling quite strong and as looking forward to to-morrow's ceremonies without the slightest misgiving. Acting upon medical advice, Lord Salisbury has obtained the King's permission to absent himself from the coronation. The ex-Premier will shortly leave for the continent.

Salvationist to Attend.

One of the most curious incidents of the coronation will be the appearance of the uniform of the Salvation Army in Westminster Abbey. King Edward directed that a representative of the Salvation Army should be invited to the coronation, and Bramwell Booth has been appointed to attend the ceremony. A difficulty arose about the uniform he should wear, and the Earl Marshal, the Duke of Norfolk, intimated he was not authorized to recognize the uniform of the Salvation Army. Mr. Booth thereupon wrote to King Edward, requesting permission to wear the uniform of the army; this His Majesty readily gave. Mr. Booth will appear in the uniform of his rank in the Salvation Army.

Crowned at 12.27 p. m.

Enthusiasm of Crowd Almost Caused a Catastrophe.

(Special to The Intelligencer.)

London, August 9.—The King was crowned at 12.27 p.m. He is in excellent health. The head of the procession reached the Abbey at 10.50 a.m. The bells were pealed and the bands played "God Save the King." The procession left the palace at 10.57 a.m., amid salvos of cheers. The Royal Princesses, gorgeously dressed, entered the Royal box of the Abbey at 11.10 a.m. Their Majesties arrived at the Abbey annex at 11.15. The Prince and Princess of Wales arrived at the Abbey at 11.04 a.m. The King and Queen, who brought up almost the rear of the procession, left the palace gates at 11 a.m., amid wild cheering, which Their Majesties acknowledged by repeated bowing. The Regalia was reconsecrated in the Abbey at 10 o'clock, the choir singing "O, God, our Help in ages past."

The street barriers were closed at 10 o'clock. Prime Minister Balfour and Lord Rosebery were caught outside. They were obliged to alight from the carriage and walk to the Abbey.

At 10 o'clock the King's nurses drove up to the Abbey in a royal carriage as guests of His Majesty. They received an ovation. As the King's procession emerged in the Horse Guards parade, the enthusiasm of the crowd almost caused a catastrophe. The people burst through the cordon of troops and threatened to overwhelm the procession. Fortunately they were forced back and order restored.

The King and Queen entered the west door of the Abbey at 11.34 a.m., the choir singing "I was glad when they said unto me."

The anointing in the Abbey was concluded at 12.27 p.m.

The news of the crowning was announced by an official outside the Abbey. It was reported by signal through London and was received with cheers, which spread throughout the stands and crowds far up the street. The bells pealed joyously and the Queen was crowned at 12.50 p.m.

THE INDIAN SENTENCED.

CONFLICTING EVIDENCE IN THE CASE—FINED $20.

The Indian, Joseph Hanavan, alias Joseph Johns and Joseph Brant, whose arrest on Thursday afternoon caused considerable excitement for a few minutes, was this morning on trial before Magistrate Flint.

Two charges were preferred against him, namely, carrying a loaded revolver and pointing same at Charles Brant, of Tyendinaga.

The evidence in the case was somewhat of a conflicting nature, Brant alleging that the revolver went off, whereas it was demonstrated that the cartridges in the weapon could not be discharged as they were for a different make of revolver.

The Magistrate, after hearing the evidence and the statement of the accused, imposed the least possible penalty, namely, a fine of $15 or in default 20 days in jail.

Sports and Pastimes.

BASEBALL.

Local Players Defeated at Madoc.

The local team of baseball players which went to Madoc yesterday were defeated by a score of 10 to 7. There were a large number in attendance at the game, which was spirited from the commencement to the finish. The Madoc team at the start took a decided lead and maintained it throughout the game. The players and their positions were as follows:

Belleville	positions	Madoc
Langley	c.	Marks
Davis	p.	Palos
Clement	1st b.	Huff
Draycott	2nd b.	Hyland
Quincey	3rd b.	Jordan
Hanley	s.s.	Coe
Stevenson	l.f.	Stoneberg
Ballantyne	c.f.	Bruce
Ross	r.f.	Reid

Mr. George Dulmage, of this city, umpired the game in a satisfactory manner.

Loan Companies Amalgamate.

A general meeting of the shareholders of the Hastings Loan and Investment Society was held in the offices of the Society on the 8th inst., and after a full explanation of the terms of the proposed amalgamation with the Sun Loan and Savings Company of Ontario, a resolution was unanimously passed affirming the terms of agreement, so that hereafter the business of the two companies will be carried on under the name of "The Sun and Hastings Savings and Loan Company of Ontario," capital $5,000,000.

Under the terms of the agreement the office in Belleville will be continued as in the past, under the old management, hence persons having business with the Company will be put to no inconvenience by the amalgamation.

NOTHING TO DO WITH COMBINE

Satisfactory Answer to Questions in the House of Lords.

Question of a New Canadian Service Not a Result of Pierpont Morgan's Scheme—Our Government Asks No Aid From the Mother Country—Establishment of a British Service Receiving Earnest Attention of England.

London, Aug. 9.—The House of Lords adjourned yesterday to Oct. 16. In response to inquiries just prior to the adjournment, as to whether the Government was taking steps looking to the establishment of a British Atlantic steamship service, after the absorption of British lines by American combine, Lord Onslow, Under Colonial Secretary, said the question of a new Canadian service had nothing to do with the American combine. Certain proposals had been submitted to the Canadian Government, but the latter had not informed His Majesty's Government of their purport or asked assistance. The question of the establishment of a British service, however, was receiving the earnest attention of the Government. If such a line were established it would be necessary to come to Parliament for money, and then complete details would be given out. It would be unwise at present to communicate the negotiations.

THE PUBLIC should bear in mind that Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil has nothing in common with the impure, deteriorating class of so-called medicinal oils. It is eminently pure and really efficacious—relieving pain and lameness, stiffness of the joints and muscles, and sores or hurts, besides being an excellent specific for rheumatism, coughs and bronchial complaints.

Many beds have the appearance of comfort, but no amount of clothing can warm a cold heart.

A WONDERFUL CURE.—Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes; "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly to cure the sore but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, so I got a bottle and when I had used about one-half, the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done, it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very bilious habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. But since using 3 bottles of the Vegetable Discovery, the biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 60 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know."

Half fare on the railroad is the next best thing to a pass.

The Flagging Energies Revived.—Constant application to business is a tax upon the energies, and if there be not relaxation, lassitude and depression are sure to intervene. These comes from stomachic troubles. The want of exercise brings on nervous irregularities, and the stomach ceases to assimilate food properly. In this condition Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will be found a recuperative of rare powder, restoring the organs to healthful action, dispelling depression, and reviving the flagging energies.

The man who can keep his mouth shut has the best of the argument with all women.

Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial is a speedy cure for dysentery, diarrhoea, cholera, summer complaint, sea sickness and complaints incidental to children teething. It gives immediate relief to those suffering from the effects of indiscretion in eating unripe fruit, cucumbers, etc. It acts with wonderful rapidity and never fails to conquer the disease. No one need fear cholera if they have a bottle of this medicine convenient.

Sometimes the most charitable view of others is that they ought to be in the insane asylum.

Sleeplessness.—When the nerves are unstrung and the whole body given up to wretchedness, when the mind is filled with gloom and dismal forebodings, the result of derangement of the digestive organs, sleeplessness comes to add to the distress. If only the subject could sleep, there would be the oblivion for a while and temporary relief. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will not only induce sleep, but will act so beneficially that the subject will wake refreshed and restored to happiness.

The wonder is there are not more kicking horses, since there are so many men who kick without discrimination.

These two desirable qualifications, pleasant to the taste and at the same time effectual, are to be found in Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator, Children like it.

A peppery temper is not a thing to be sneezed at.

When all other preparations fail, try Holloway's Corn Cure. No pain whatever, and no inconvenience in using it.

People who sleep with sin will not be able to wash away the marks of it.

To get relief from indigestion, biliousness, constipation or torpid liver without disturbing the stomach or purging the bowels, take a few doses of Carter's Little Liver Pills, they will please you.

In the British Army 129 officers are qualified as interpreters in French, 106 in Russian, 81 in German, but only one in Dutch.

That tired, languid feeling and dull headache is very disagreeable. Take two of Carter's Little Liver Pills before retiring, and you will find relief. They never fail to do good.

Icebergs in the North Atlantic usually appear about February 15 and are seen more or less frequently until about June 15.

They make one feel as though life was worth living. Take one of Carter's Little Liver Pills after eating; it will relieve dyspepsia, aid digestion, give tone and vigor to the system.

Up to the present slower progress is being made with the construction of the Edward VII. than of any warship built at Davenport.

Nothing so suddenly obstructs the perspiration as sudden transitions from heat to cold. Heat rarifies the blood, quickens the circulation and increases the perspiration, but when these are suddenly checked the consequences must be bad. The most common cause of disease is obstructed perspiration, or what commonly goes by the name of catching cold. Coughs, colds, sore throat, etc., if attended to in time are easily subdued, but if allowed to run their own course generally prove the fore-runner of more dangerous diseases. Nine-tenths of the consumptives date their afflictions from a neglected cold, and the diseases that are caused by wet feet, damp clothes, or exposure are more numerous than are generally supposed. One of the most efficacious medicines for all diseases of the throat and lungs is Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, which frees the lungs from viscid phlegm by changing the secretions from a diseased to a healthy state.

Unfair to Canadian Goods

The Canadian Manufacturer takes issue with the manufacturers in their mode of procedure to secure a larger number of Canadian consumers of Canadian made goods. Their chief reliance, it seems, is to be on newspapers and the platform. But the manufacturer advocates the labelling of Canadian goods with the name of the maker and place of manufacture. The Manufacturer says:

"Like for like, goods can be made in Canada the equal of goods made anywhere else; but unfortunately the persistent teachings of interested parties have brought the great mass of consumers to believe otherwise, and there are many who decline to buy goods of home production when goods of foreign make can be had; and it is but too often the case that sellers induce purchasers to believe that articles being offered them are of foreign origin, when in fact they are not. It is not honorable on the part of the intelligent seller to thus deceive the ignorant buyer, but the Canadian manufacturer should enquire of his own head and heart if he is not willingly involved in the deception, or at least a consenting party to it. Many of them know that it is a requirement, when accepting orders from jobbers and wholesale houses, that no signs or marks shall appear upon either the goods or the packages containing them indicating their origin; and they know that if they themselves are not actually required to place false and misleading signs and labels upon their products, it will be done elsewhere, and before they are offered for sale to the public. It is to be wondered at that, under such circumstances, buyers decline to accept home made goods if what they believe to be foreign made goods can be had?"

Long Live the King.

A CORONATION ODE.

'Twas half-past 8 on August 9
When Bridge St. bell began to ring,
And people said "He has been crowned,
Long live our Sovereign Lord the King."

A Briton he of right stout stamp
Who feared not death nor surgeon's knife;
To-day our prayers will all arise
God bless him and his noble wife.

To-day let joy be unconfined
Hip, hip, hurrah! we shout with glee,
In future, this care off our mind
We'll work for the d.s.b.g.

The flags are flying on all sides
All faces broadly smile, but hark
Did someone say "a coat of paint
We'll give the cannon at the Park?"

Oh, happy day, our gracious King
Lives to perform more mighty deeds;
The Empire's safe, our scythes we'll swing
And straightway cut down all the weeds.

May King and Queen long happy reign
(Now we'll remember in our wills
The fellow who will find a man
To start once more the Rolling Mills.)

E'en now, as we do pen these lines
Loud whistles blow, the bells do ring,
God's blessing on our Empire grand
Long live our Sovereign Lord the King!

Having had his head greased with the oil of gladness and donned his golden crown King Edward no doubt feels better. At least he ought to, for he has upset all the old wives' tales and prognostications of the astrologers. All of which proves that the safest time to prophecy is after the event in question has happened. People who are already making rash guesses about the municipal elections next January should bear this in mind.

BIOGRAPHY OF SIR WILFRID.

(The Moon.)

Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, G.C.M.G., K.C., D.C.C.L. Oxon. LL.D., P.C.—we don't know what the two last letters might mean, but they would stand for "Political Charlatan"—was born somewhere in Quebec, Nov. 20, 1841, and was the son of his father.

Elected to represent Drummond and Arthabaska in 1874, he has for many years sat for Quebec East and his picture, in the Commons, Ottawa. He has been Premier of Canada since '96, and, though the duties are arduous, and the pay small, it is understood by well-informed people that the right honorable gentleman is still willing to sacrifice private interest so that he may continue to serve his country.

Since entering public life Sir Wilfrid has been a constant advocate of free trade, and won the gold medal in the gift of the Cobden Club for his efforts in that direction. He has also been a consistent advocate of reciprocity with the United States, closer relations with the mother country, tariff discrimination against the United States, commercial union with the United States, imperial unity and protection to Canadian industries.

The subject of our sketch is a Frenchman, a Roman Catholic and a Canadian. When in Ontario or Manitoba, Sir Wilfrid is a Canadian first. On every occasion when appearing in public, while the order in which his qualifications come to the front may vary with the environment, he is always one of them first, and the other fellows as they may.

Here's something worth knowing: For an odorless and harmless wash with which to cover the face and hands during the evening hours, as an armor against mosquitoes a doctor recommends one pint of hot water and two teaspoonfuls of powdered alum, mixed until the alum dissolves. It is sure, odorless, and will do no harm to the skin, the doctor says, if it is put on just after supper and washed off before retiring.

A new cure for appendicitis has been found, which ought to be good for the livery business, at any rate. The new treatment was accidentally discovered by a man who owns a livery stable in Anaconda, Mont. Two friends of his were sick unto death with appendicitis and it was urgent that they receive medical aid, which was miles away. The sick men were placed in each instance in a wagon and driven the distance to the nearest surgeon. In both cases the patients were so well when they reached the surgeon's office that the aid for which they traveled was not needed. Both of the patients—or would-be patients have been well ever since and their recovery is attributed to the jolting they received while riding over the rocky Montana roads to the doctor's.

The following story reminds us of the one told of a local sky pilot who was going home from church the other night and saw what he took to be a kitten on the sidewalk—however, that's another story. This is the one we started out to tell: Rev. Arthur Wallis, recently from England, is rusticating at Powell's Point, near Munsing, Mich. While out for a walk the other evening he saw a pretty little black and white animal which he took to be a porcupine. He approached it for a closer inspection, and then beat a most undignified retreat, spending the next couple of hours in burning his clothing and otherwise getting rid of an exceedingly gamy odor. The supposed porcupine was a highly gifted skunk.

The Toronto mystery seems to be petering out. A Toronto paper says:

"Inspector Stark has to devote quite a little while each forenoon to denying the rubbishy stuff that appears in some of the morning papers concerning the Evans' case. A paper that yesterday made the assertion that the detective department knew who attempted to burglarize the Evans' vault to-day offers $50 to anyone who will give a clue as to who the culprit is. Detective Slemin, who has the case in hand, goes on his holidays next week to Preston Springs, and during his absence the inquiries will be suspended."

What Can a Woman Do For a Man?

IN TIMES OF SUFFERING AND CRITICAL ILLNESS SHE CAN HONESTLY RECOMMEND

Paine's Celery Compound

AS A SAVER OF LIFE AND A BANISHER OF DISEASE

Woman's power for good in the home can never be truly estimated. In times of suffering and danger, her judgment and experience are invaluable; her smiles, words of cheer and comfort help to dispel gloom and sadness. The faithful, discerning wife has a full knowledge of the value of Paine's Celery Compound as a banisher of disease; she has had a personal experience with it; she has noted its wonderful effects and cures; she has faith in its virtues, and recommends it with full confidence. Mr. J. H. Brown, Port Perry, Ont., says:

"I was troubled with kidney complaint; the doctors called it an enlargement of the neck of the bladder. Be that as it may, I suffered the most intense pain. I applied to my physician for relief with but little encouragement; he thought the only way for me to obtain relief was to submit to an operation. I went home discouraged, and was prevailed on by my wife to try Paine's Celery Compound. I did, but with very little faith in it, purchase one bottle, but the results were marvellous, as I received immediate relief after taking it. The pain is all gone, and my skin, instead of being dry and harsh as it used to be, is as soft as velvet; in fact, I feel like a new man, and never felt better in my life than I do at present."

About the merits of HUDSON'S DRY SOAP are solely intended to place before those who do not now use it its advantages and superiority, and a few reasons why they should at least try it, to serve their own best interests.

Those who are now using HUDSONS, the majority of which have looked upon it as a family friend for generations, are not so much interested in our talks, because . . . . they already know.

They have found that as a thorough and economical soap to purify and sweeten everything cleanable HUDSON'S is without a peer.

Cleaning must be done. When it can be done with less expenditure of strength and in less time, with a saving of material, it means a great deal to a tired housewife.

A Weed That Eats Fish.

An English naval officer, writing from Suakin, Red sea country, contributes the following remarkable instance of a plant preying upon one of the vertebrata. The instance noted was observed by him when surveying the Paracel islands, in the south China sea: "As I neared a pool cut off by the tide from the sea I noticed among other submarine plants a very ordinary looking flesh colored weed. Bending to inspect it closer, I noticed numbers of small fish lying helpless in its fronds, apparently with little or no life in them. Putting my hands down to pick one of them up, I found my fingers caught by suckers on the weed, the fronds of which had closed tightly upon them.

"The fish had been caught in every conceivable way—by the head, the tail, sides, etc.—and some of them had been held until the skin was completely macerated. Those of the fish that were still living had evidently been caught at different times, they appearing in all stages of exhaustion. I regret being unable to name either the plant or the fish, but that the botanical cannibal really preyed upon the finny denizens of the deep there isn't the least doubt."

When Reptiles Ruled a World.

There was a time "in the wide revolving shades of centuries past" when our globe was wholly in the possession of walking, swimming and flying reptiles. Being the dominant type, they divided naturally into three great classes. In the oceans they became gigantic paddling enaliosaurians; on dry land, or, rather, wet land, for the whole face of the globe was doubtless a quagmire at that time, they became monstrous, erect dinosaurians, some of which had legs fifteen feet or more in length; those which inhabited the regions of the air were the terrible flying pterodactyls.

For a vast but unknown length of time these awful creatures literally ruled the earth. Finally after they had "seen their day" they began to grow less and less. One by one they died out in the face of the younger and more vigorous fauna until at the present time only a few miniature alligators and crocodiles and a few toy snakes remain as reminders of skulking lizards and geckos and of the enormous reptilian types that once crowded land and sea.

Simple Indeed.

It seems as if the acme of frugality had been reached by a French officer who explained with many appropriate gestures his system of sustaining life on a pension of five francs a week.

"It is simple, veree, veree simple," he said to the friend who had expressed amazement at his feat. "Sunday I go to ze house of a good friend, and zere I dine so extraordinaire and eat so veree much zat I need no more till Vednesday.

"On zat day I have at my restaurant one large, veree large, dish of tripe and some onion. I abhor ze tripe —yes, and ze onion also—and togezzer zey make me so seek as I have no more any appetite till Sunday. You see, it is veree simple."

The Holland Primrose.

There is a plant in Holland, known as the evening primrose, which grows to a height of five or six feet and bears a profusion of large yellow flowers so brilliant that they attract immediate attention, even at a great distance, but the chief peculiarity about the plant is the fact that the flowers, which open just before sunset, burst into bloom so suddenly that they give one the impression of some magical agency. A man who has seen this sudden blooming says it is just as if some one had touched the land with a wand and thus covered it all at once with a golden sheet.

The Man In the Moon.

Life, whether vegetable or animal as we know it, certainly cannot exist under lunar conditions, says the London Mail. The alternations of a long day of considerably over 300 hours' duration, with a night of similar length, accompanied by changes from excessive heat to its antipodes of cold, would alone render all earthly life impossible, but experience has taught even here the adaptability of life to most extreme conditions, and it may be believed that, after all, organic life may have found a congenial home in our "lamp of night."

Money Talks.

Parvenu—I was raised as genteel as you was, an' I'll bet you a hundred on it. Come on now; money talks.

Kortique—If your money talked the way you do, you'd be bankrupt pretty soon.

"What do you mean?"

"It would give itself away."

Stumbled on a Fact.

A minister went recently to preach in a chapel unfamiliar to him. "You must do your best to keep your voice up, sir," said the chapel keeper, "for our church is very unfortunate in its 'agnostic' effects." Whether he meant it or not, it was quite true.

HALIFAX OR SYDNEY?

Impressions in London Regarding Port of Fast Atlantic Line.

London, Aug. 9.—The Canadian Ministers here have practically closed arrangements, pending Parliamentary action, for a line of steamships to ply between Canada and South Africa.

It is believed that the British Government will agree to the proposition of the Morgan syndicate to use their ships in the event of necessity. The Elder-Dempster-Allan-Furniss combination will use every effort to get a favorable consideration of their fast line scheme.

A strong opinion exists among shippers and insurance men here that a Canadian fast line should end at Sydney or Halifax. Halifax is undoubtedly favored as between the two. An outside ocean port is declared to be absolutely essential to the success of a fast line. It would, it is argued, be useless to make either Quebec or Montreal a terminal point, as it is a dangerous course, involving expensive steamship accidents yearly. Wrecks off the coast are also urged against the use of a St. Lawrence River port, and the fact that navigation is closed for six months of the year. Agents are agreed that the long rail journey from Sydney is a great objection to passengers from the west of Canada.

The Canadian Bisley team will sail from Liverpool by the steamship Lake Simcoe on Tuesday next.

Sir Thomas Confirms.

Montreal, Que., Aug. 9.—Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, president of the C. P.R., in an interview yesterday, in speaking of the cable despatch that the C.P.R. offer for a fast Atlantic steamship line, was that the British subsidy should be £88,000, and the subsidy from the Dominion of Canada $177,000, admitted that the figures were "approximately correct," but he declined to be more specific. He added that since the offer was made he had heard very little further about it.

Harvesters In Plenty.

Toronto, Aug. 9. — Hon. Robert Rogers, Minister of Public Works for Manitoba, is in the city. Mr. Rogers thinks sufficient men will easily be secured to harvest the crop in his province, though the estimated yield was fifty million bushels. He also thinks that with their increased railway facilities they will be able to handle the crop without much difficulty.

Sues For a Million.

Toronto, Aug. 9.—Lawyer R. C. Levisconte yesterday issued a writ involving a million dollars' worth of mining stock. The writ was issued at the instance of C. H. Howland of Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio. Howland is a mining expert and sues on behalf of himself and other shareholders of the Nickel Copper Mining Company for a declaration that the transfer of large blocks of stocks to certain directors of the company and others is null and void and made without actual or adequate consideration. The defendants named are: C. T. Ritchie of Akron, Ohio; John Pattison, John Moodie, Hon. A. T. Wood of Turnbull, D. R. Fannie, T. Moodie, all of Hamilton.

Port Au Prince, Hayti, Aug. 9.— A great fire at midnight, has burned down sixty houses, causing damages estimated at $200,000.

An Operation Not Necessary

ITCHING PILES OF TWENTY YEARS' STANDING CURED PERMANENTLY BY

DR. CHASE'S OINTMENT

Is it necessary to undergo a surgical operation with all the accompanying risks, expense and suffering in order to be freed from the suffering of itching piles?

Very many people ask this question and too frequently the medical advisor answers yes. But there are scores and hundreds of people throughout the length and breadth of this land who know differently. These are people who have been actually cured by Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Among others, is Mr. Alex. McLaughlin, of Bowmanville, Ont., a man well known and highly respected in this town, of which he has been a resident for about thirty years. In a letter to us Mr. McLaughlin describes his case as follows:—

"For twenty long years I suffered from itching piles, and only persons who have been troubled with that annoying disease can imagine what I endured during that time. About seven years ago I asked a druggist if he had anything to cure me. He said that Dr. Chase's Ointment was most favorably spoken of, and on his recommendation I took a box.

"After three applications I felt better, and by the time I had used one box I was on a fair way to recovery. I continued the treatment until thoroughly cured, and I have not suffered any since. I am firmly convinced that the ointment made a perfect cure.

"I consider Dr. Chase's Ointment an invaluable treatment for piles. In my case I think the cure was remarkable, when you consider that I am getting up in years and had been so long a sufferer from this disease."

It is all nonsense to talk about a surgical operation as the only cure for piles. Scores of people are being cured every day by Dr. Chase's Ointment. Not merely relieved—though relief itself is a great thing to the sufferer from piles—but cured thoroughly and permanently, as Mr. McLaughlin has been. Dr. Chase's Ointment has no worthy rival. It stands alone as an absolute cure for piles of every form! 60 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

WILL HOLD A CONFERENCE.

Heads of Colleges to Meet to Allocate Rhodes Scholarship.

Toronto, Aug. 9.—Some days ago Hon. Wm. Harcourt, Minister of Education, received a communication from Hon. R. W. Scott, Ottawa, Secretary of State, stating that he had been officially notified that Ontario was to share in the Cecil Rhodes' scholarships. No particulars were given as to what extent the province would share in the bequest, but it is understood that two of the scholarships will go to the universities in the province each year. The Minister of Education has decided to arrange for a conference here at the end of September of the heads of the degree conferring colleges, which will enable the winners to live nicely, even at Oxford. One plan suggested is to let each university send a representative to Oxford in turn. This, together with the other plans, will be discussed at the conference.

TWO MEN ANNIHILATED.

Explosion of 40 Ten-Quart Cans of Nitro-Glycerine.

Bradford, Pa., Aug. 9.—Joseph Gilson, 44 years old, and Oscar Bergvall, both of Bradford, were instantly killed near here yesterday about 10 a.m. by the explosion of a load of nitro-glycerine. There were 40 ten-quart cans of the explosive in the wagon and the team of horses and the wagon also went up with the flash of fire that accompanied the explosion. A hole was torn in the ground 8 feet deep and 20 feet across. Trees were blown down and a large boulder was carried 300 yards and driven deep into the earth.

Strike Is on in Earnest.

Hamilton, Aug. 9.—The Electrical Workers' strike is on in earnest. The men met yesterday morning in Labor Hall, and afterwards issued a statement, defining their position. It was, in brief, that their arbitrator, Rev. C. E. Whitcombe, had used every legitimate means to secure a third arbitrator. The men were willing to meet the company half way as to wages, but the company wanted more arbitration.

The company also issued a statement in which it says the men have violated their agreement by dropping arbitration. The men can have no serious grievance against the company, when their wages and those of outside workmen are compared. The original proposition for arbitration had not been withdrawn. Manager Hawkins claims he has used every fair means at his disposal to prevent the occurrence of the trouble.

Fourth False Clue.

Hamilton, Aug. 9.—J. H. Wilson, father of Amy, the girl said to have been masquerading as a man and working as a farm hand near Paris, has returned from the Snowden farm. He is uncertain whether the farm hand the authorities suspected of being his daughter is really the girl who ran away from home July 22. The Snowdens were not certain about the photograph of the girl being a likeness of the farm hand whom they suspected was a women. Then, too, the father decided that his frail daughter could not have done the heavy work the farm hand did while on the Snowden place. This is the fourth clue the father of the mad girl has followed up only to return disappointed.

Vaillancourt Released.

Toronto, Aug. 9.—Yesterday at Osgoode Hall an order was made by Chief Justice Falconbridge for bail for Magloise Vaillancourt, who is in jail at Sault Ste. Marie, on a charge of murder. His own bail of $500 will be accepted. It is the smallest bail for such a case ever granted in the history of Canadian courts. He is now said to be very ill. He is 65 years of age. Pietro Gusparele was the Indian he is supposed to have shot and killed.

Received Terrible Injuries.

Toronto, Aug. 9.—Goldwin Macfarlane, the 12-year-old son of Mrs. Eva Macfarlane, 12 Draper street, received terrible injuries about 8 o'clock last night. He fell a distance of about 20 feet, from the railway bridge on Bathurst street, alighting on his head. In falling he seized a live electric wire and was painfully burned. At 3 o'clock this morning the doctors at the Emergency Hospital stated that the lad could not recovery.

C.P.R. Brakeman Crushed.

London, Aug. 9.—Charles Sampson, a C.P.R. brakeman, who resided in Toronto, was terribly injured at Ayr yesterday morning. He went between two cars to examine the coupling, but failed to notice an engine shunting down to the train. When the cars came together his hips were caught between the bumpers and it was little less than a miracle that he escaped death. He may die.

Fire at New Hamburg.

New Hamburg, Aug. 9.—About 8.30 last evening fire was discovered issuing from the second storey of the New Hamburg flour mill. The mill, which was a frame building, with contents, were destroyed. The loss is about $6,000. The mill was owned by Jacob Zurbrigg and occupied by I. M. Clemes & Co., both of whom will be heavy losers.

Canada's Revenue.

Ottawa, Aug. 9.— The revenue of the Dominion for July amounted to $1,227,587, as against $3,800,365 in the same month one year ago. The expenditure was $2,936,111, an increase of $259,318 over 1901. The capital outlay was $259,778, as against $217,873.

Gave His Life For Others.

Halifax, Aug. 9.—Robert Webster, one of the best known young men in Kentville, lost his life at Aberdeen Beach yesterday afternoon, while endeavoring to save two little boys from drowning. The boys were saved.

Sunstrokes

The American Boat Won.

Montreal, Aug. 9.—Under light weather, the Tecumseh, the American challenger, defeated the Canadian defender Trident in the second race for the Seawanhaka Cup yesterday on Lake St. Louis, being 1 minute 22 seconds in the lead. There was very little breeze and the weather distinctly favored the American boat. The race was over a triangular course of four miles. The first leg was a beat to windward, the second a reach and the third a free run.

The summary:

	1st. Round.	2nd. Round.	Finish.
Tecumseh	2.47.53	3.47.57	4.22.25
Trident	2.47.45	3.35.13	4.23.47

Great Weather For Crops

Winnipeg, Man., Aug. 9.—The weather yesterday was beautiful for the growing crops. No sign of wet weather, and bright sunshine is rapidly ripening the crops. The harvesting will be general about the 20th of this month. The Northwest Government has issued a crop bulletin. The estimate is about fifteen millions. Condition of growing crops is excellent.

Kaiser Off For Sweden.

Reval, Russia, Aug. 9.—The German Imperial yacht Hohenzollern, with Emperor William on board, sailed for Wisby, Sweden, yesterday afternoon. During their stay here the Czar and Emperor were constantly together, and their intercourse was of the most cordial character.

Third Body Found.

Old Orchard, Me., Aug. 9.—Searchers yesterday recovered the body of ex-Alderman Ford of Ottawa, Ont., the third victim of Thursday's triple drowning accident. All have been sent to Canada.

Sympathy.

Ted's mamma had a birthday recently and received as a present from one of her friends a ten dollar bill. Accompanying the money was a note in which the writer, after explaining that she couldn't think of anything tasteful to buy and had therefore sent the cash, made some tender references to bygone days and dear old scenes. While the recipient was sitting with the bill in one hand and the letter in the other and permitting tears to drip down upon both Ted went up to her and, putting his arms around her neck, tenderly asked:

"What's the matter, mamma? Isn't the money good?"

Proctor's Finest Speech.

Senator Proctor of Vermont once said the finest speech he ever made consisted of only four words. It was in retort to Senator Hoar's sarcastic little thrust in a speech directed at the Green Mountain senator. He said, "No man in Vermont is allowed to vote unless he has made $5,000 trading with Massachusetts people."

Whereat Proctor said, "And we all vote."

Merely a Joke.

Gusher—You may not believe it, but I've never had an unkind word from my wife in all my life.

Henpeck—Oh, don't try to spring that old chestnut on me.

Gusher—What old chestnut?

Henpeck—You want me to say, "How did you manage that?" and then you'll say, "I never got married."

How It Happened.

Mrs. Nexdore—My daughter was practicing her new concert piece last night. Did you hear her?

Mrs. Pepprey—Oh, yes.

Mrs. Nexdore—How was it?

Mrs. Pepprey—I simply couldn't get away; that's how it was.

FAIRY GOLD

BY BERTHA M. CLAY

—Author of—

"A Woman's Vengeance," "Between Two Loves,"
"Her Second Love," "A Fatal Wedding," Etc.

"But yes, monsieur," answers mademoiselle, in a dismayed tone. "Mademoiselle Yolande has dropped her mouchoir;" and she recommences diving behind the shrubs and rustling the branches in an apparently indefatigable search, until she is hot and tired from stooping.

Captain Glynne meanwhile has deliberately turned up a gas-light, and taken a survey from the opposite side of the hall.

"There is no handkerchief here," he says decisively. "Miss Dormer has lost it elsewhere, mademoiselle;" and he takes out another cigar.

"Ciel, what shall I do?" mademoiselle says, in increasing despair; and Dallas Glynne, though quite wide awake to the minauderies of the quondam Miss Bella Glover, puts his cigar down and draws near to sympathize or help.

"But yes! Here it is!" mademoiselle says the next minute, pouncing with a joyful little cry on the morsel of cambric and lace. "Voila, monsieur!"—and she holds it up before Captain Glynne's eyes.

"I'd lay anybody fifty to one there was no handkercheif behind that big flower-pot half a minute ago," Dallas says to himself. "I can't quite see through Mademoiselle's little game; but I don't believe Yolande has a hand in it." Aloud he says composedly, "Mademoiselle, I congratulate you on your keen vision and your bright eyes."

He says it in the purest Parisian French, and, bowing to her, turns on his heel and goes out into the courtyard to smoke again.

Mademoiselle resolutely represses an outburst of spleen, as she slowly retraces her steps through the hall. At the foot of the staircase she looks back at the dark symmetrical outline of the young man standing in the doorway, with the moonlight on his fair uncovered head. She does not "laugh a laugh of merry scorn," like the lord in the Tennysonian ballad, but a laugh of concentrated spitefulness.

"I'll put a spoke in your wheel you won't like, my haughty gentleman, to pay you out for your impertinence!" she muttered through her close-shut teeth. "I thought you weren't going in for the little chit in real earnest, even with all her money-bags. Now, I'm sure of it. I'll give the Viscount the straight tip when I write to him."

• • • • • • •

"I'm glad I didn't go down on the pier—I'm very glad I kept away," she tells herself, with a piteous little smile and a choked sob or two. "It would have looked so bad; I'm sure he would have thought it—so—so forward and unlady-like of me, when he bade me good-bye last night, and never said a word about hoping to see me in the morning. He thought it would be a liberty to ask me such a thing, I suppose; but—but—oh, I should like to have seen him just for one minute!"

She gazes and gazes through tear-filled eyes, and with a heaving breast aching intolerably with a new keen pain of longing and desolation, until the outline of the rapidly receding steamer is all but invisible on the misty horizon; and then the girlish head droops upon her hands, and Yolande bursts into bitter weeping. She is quite alone, for just as they turned towards the cliff-road mademoiselle left her and hurried back into the town, declaring she must get that book from the library which has been promised to them for days.

"If you will go on slowly, cherie," she said, "I will overtake you in ten minutes."

It is considerably nearer three times ten minutes when mademoiselle re-appears, somewhat flushed and breathless, as is but natural, seeing that she has just hurried back from the Custom House quay, where she has not only seen the travelers off, but "had the good fortune," as she says prettily, "to be of some slight service at the last minute to Viscount Glynne."

She has intervened with her voluble French between the Viscount's rather stupid valet and a thick-headed French porter in a difficulty about surplus baggage. She receives in return a very gracious hand-shake from the Viscount, and a bow with his hat raised as the boat swings out from her moorings; but it is a very slight, stiff salutation she receives from Dallas Glynne; and this goes down at once in mademoiselle's mental score against the haughty young soldier. With sweet humility, mademoiselle returns alike the friendly and the frigid bow with her brightest smile and a deep and respectful inclination of the head and shoulders.

"A nice, intelligent, amiable girl, that governess of those Dormers," the Viscount observes to his cousin.

"Don't like her," Dallas responds curtly. "She is much too sweet to be wholesome, and she is a designing woman, or I'm—a fool."

The Viscount laughs his slow, sniggering laugh.

"Been trying to victimize you?" he asks, with his sneering smile. "Dear me! I think I rescued you only just in time—eh, Dallas? A few days more like yesterday—he, he, he!—would have landed you across the Rubicon! The adulation and the adoration and all the rest of it—eh, Dallas? Your hard heart would have softened at last! He, he, he! Joyce Murray ought to thank me; but I suppose she won't. A saucy charming little witch she is! Eh, Dallas? The prettiest girl I know, I always say, and the gayest and pleasantest—isn't she?"

"She is," Dallas agrees briefly, rather wondering at Glynne's warm praise of a girl who frankly detests the amiable and philanthropic Viscount and scarcely troubles to conceal that she does.

"Ay, fair enough and sweet enough and bewitching enough for any man on earth!" Dallas mutters to himself with a smothered sigh and a clouded brow. "But not for me, never for me, my pretty fair-haired little Joyce! For I will never marry you to drag you down into poverty and obscurity; even if you are willing to be dragged down by me—and I don't believe you are!" he says, with a bitter laugh as he stands by the vessel's side, looking at the paddles churning the water. "You are a shrewd little woman of the world, young and charming as you are—shrewd and practical and worldly-wise—and you've learned your lady-mother's lessons very well, Joyce. But, if I had money, or you had money—had that girl Yolande Dormer's fortune," he thinks, with an envious, hopeless sigh — "we should be as happy and well matched a pair, I believe, as ever ran in double harness. Well, well, 'things go contrary,' as Mrs. Gummidge says!"

Then his thoughts involuntarily rush backwards from England and Pentreath, and the autumn circle of guests, and Joyce Murray's expected presence amongst them—back to the lonely girl whose yearning spirit is following each mile of his homeward journey.

She is just at this minute straining her eyes to catch a last glimpse of the steam-packet disappearing on the cloudy horizon; and, as she gazes, her sorrowful, faithful young soul sends one passionate ejaculatory prayer after him—

"Heaven bless him, and bring him once more to me!"

"I suppose that foolish little mortal came down to the pier too to see the last of me," Captain Glynne soliloquises, with a slight disdainful smile. "I didn't see her certainly; but that double-faced English Frenchwoman of a governess was there as large as life, and of course her pupil was with her. A nice teacher for her mind and morals that poor, simple, ignorant child has!"

Then a slight feeling of remorse creeps over him when he recalls the "foolish little mortal's" evident admiration and liking for himself and his society.

"Poor child!" Dallas says, with real compassion, as he shudders at thought of such an existence as she artlessly and pleasantly told him of yesterday while they walked together down the valley by the mill-stream. "Poor little girl! I hope I haven't done anything to fret or disturb her mind. She is an innocent, trustful little soul, I believe, and I'm afraid she will credit every word I said to her. Poor child! I might at least have been honest with her."

• • • • • • •

And now Yolande has left to her only the memories of this pleasant, never-to-be-forgotten visit to Paris

Blacksmith's Backache.

Swinging heavy hammers, frequent stooping over shoeing horses, getting a wrench once in a while from a refractory horse, bending at all sorts of odd jobs that the average blacksmith does—any wonder that in time the strongest man begins to find his back give out and his kidneys trouble him.

The progress of medical science has produced nothing that is a greater boon to the blacksmiths throughout this country than Dr. Pitcher's Backache Kidney Tablets. They get at the origin of the backache in the kidneys and make a thorough and radical cure.

THE RESULT OF A STRAIN.

A. Soper, blacksmith, John Street South, Aylmer, states his cases as follows: "A blacksmith's work is always hard and mine is no exception. I strained my back some time ago, and the trouble settled in the small of my back and kidneys, laying me up. I have been subject in times past to an attack of backache, and took different kidney pills, but got little relief after long use. This time I got a bottle of Dr. Pitcher's Backache Kidney Tablets and they stopped the attack in a hurry. They acted far differently and away quicker than anything I ever took. I am pleased with them, and consider them satisfactory in every way."

NEW VICEROY OF IRELAND

The Earl of Dudley Has Been Appointed Lord Lieutenant.

Right Hon. Charles Thomson Ritchie Is the New Chancellor of the Exchequer—Colonial Secretary's Son, Austen, Steps Up Into the Cabinet as Postmaster-General—Official List of Cabinet Appointments Approved by the King.

London, Aug. 9.—The Earl of Dudley has been appointed Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, Right. Hon. Charles Thomson Ritchie, Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Right Hon. Aretas Akers-Douglas, Home Secretary.

The Earl of Dudley, who was born in 1866, was Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade since 1895. He served with the Yeomanry Cavalry in South Africa. The Earl, who has traveled much, married a Miss Gurney in 1891. His son and heir is Viscount Ednam.

Appointments Approved.

It has been officially announced that King Edward has approved the appointments of the Earl of Dudley, as Lord Lieutenant of Ireland.

RT. HON. C. T. RITCHIE.
(New Chancellor of the Exchequer.)

Charles Thomson Ritchie, as Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Aretas Akerson Douglas, as Home Sesretary.

President of the Board of Education, the Marquis of Londonderry.

First Commissioner of Works, Lord Windsor, in succession to Aretas Akerson Douglas.

Financial Secretary to the Treasury, William Hayes Fisher, in succession to Austen Chamberlain. Mr. Fisher has been a junior Lord of the Treasury since 1895.

Parliamentary Secretary for the Treasury, Sir Alexander Fuller Asland Hood, vice Sir Wm. Hood Walrond.

Lord Commissioner of the Treasury, Henry Wm. Forester, M.P.

Under Secretary for India, Earl Percy.

Under Secretary to the Home Office, Thomas Horatio Arthur Ernest Cochrane, M.P.

Under Secretary to the War Office, the Earl of Hardwicke, who was Under Secretary for India.

Parliamentary Secretary of Education, Sir Wm. Reynell Anson, M.P.

Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade, Andrew Bonar Law, M.P.

The Earl of Dudley, Sir Wm. Hood Walrond and Lord Windsor will not be in the Cabinet, but George Wyndham, Chief Secretary for Ireland, does become a member.

CHAMBERLAIN, JR., P.M.G.

Colonial Secretary's Son Steps Up Into the Cabinet.

London, Aug. 9.—Official announcement was made yesterday that Austen Chamberlain, son of the Colonial Secretary, has been appointed Postmaster-General, vice the Marquis of Londonderry, resigned.

The appointment of Sir William Hood Walrond, to be Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, in place of Lord James of Hereford, resigned, because of ill-health, was also officially announced yesterday.

Since Austen Chamberlain will have a seat in the Cabinet the rare spectacle will be furnished of both father and son holding Cabinet rank simultaneously. It is said that a new office, that of Minister of Education has been created, to which the Marquis of Londonderry has been appointed.

IRELAND AND HER GRIEVANCES.

T. P. O'Connor, M.P., Vigorously Denounced Sergt. Sheridan.

London, Aug. 9.—On a motion providing for the third reading of the appropriation bill in the House of Commons yesterday, T. P. O'Connor (Irish Nationalist) made a brief fighting speech, in which he re-aired the grievances of Ireland, vigorously denouncing Sergeant Sheridan. He described Sheridan as a perjured villain, who, while in the Irish constabulary, falsely convicted innocent persons. Mr. O'Connor strongly attacked the Government for its refusal to extradite Sheridan from the retreat at Lowell, Mass. George Wyndham, Chief Secretary for Ireland, declined to further discuss the Sheridan case, but promised that if Irish landlords combined and resorted to such practices as boycotting and intimidation he would take much pleasure in summening the officers before magistrates.

Education Clause Adopted.

London, Aug. 9.—The House of Commons yesterday, by a majority of 122, adopted Clause No. 7 of the Government's education bill, which gives the predominance in the management of voluntary schools to churchmen.

Sir William Hood Walrond has resigned his position as chief Conservative whip to enter the Ministry as Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, in succession to Lord James of Hereford.

To Look Into the War.

London, Aug. 9.—The Premier A. J. Balfour, yesterday announced the appointment of the following commission of enquiry into the conduct of the Boer war:—The Earl of Elgin (chairman), Sir Henry Norman, Sir John Hopkins, Lord Esher and Sir John Edge.

The Commons Adjourns.

London, Aug. 9.—The House of Commons adjourned yesterday to October 16.

TRADE WITH BRITAIN.

Returns of Exports and Imports During Seven Months.

London, Aug. 9.—The Board of Trade returns for the seven months ending July show the following increases in British imports from Canada:

TAPS FROM THE WIRES.

Dr. Spankie, Inspector of Schools for Frontenac, has issued a writ against James Joyce, Wolfe Island, claiming $2,000 damages for alleged slander.

Mr. Thomas Lloyd Jones died at Brantford Thursday of Bright's disease. He was on two occasions the Conservative standard bearer for South Brant.

Over forty bushels to the acre, Arcadian wheat, were threshed at William Ames', Ayr road to Paris, Ont., by Mr. Scroggie on Friday. This is an old time crop.

H. Garbutt, reeve of Dunwich, died Thursday night at his home near Wallacetown after one day's illness from inflammation of the kidneys. He leaves a wife, two sons and three daughters.

The body of Herbert Reynolds, a lad 6 years old, was taken from the waters of Toronto bay about four o'clock on Friday afternoon by Mate Ackroyd. The dead boy left his home in the rear of 14½ Terauley street about 9 o'clock on Thursday morning.

The Council of the Ontario College of Pharmacy has resolved to ask the Ontario Minister of Education to introduce the teaching of the metric system into the Public schools. The Dominion Government also will be asked to introduce and make obligatory the same system.

Flowers at Feet of Kruger.

The Hague, Aug. 9.—Former President Kruger of the Transvaal Republic, accompanied by a number of Boer leaders, visited the pro-Boer exhibition yesterday morning. He seated himself opposite the portraits of the Dutch and French combatants who fell during the war, and as he sat there young girls strewed flowers at his feet. Replying to a speech made by the president of the exhibition, Mr. Kruger paid a tribute to the "brave men who sacrificed their lives in a disinterested struggle for justice." He thanked artists of all nations for their unselfish aid in contributing to the exhibition.

Glad to Be Back.

Windsor, Aug. 9.—A prairie schooner crossed over from Detroit yesterday morning, having for its occupants Alex. McMillan, his wife and two children, who are on their way from Denver, Colo., to Hamilton, where Mr. McMillan formerly lived. They have been three months on the journey of 1,600 miles, and will be ten days more. "Give me Canada for my home," was the remark of Mr. McMillan.

Big Fire Loss at Harriston.

Harriston, Aug. 9.—Last evening fire was discovered in the large brick factory, owned and operated by Merriam Bros., builders and manufacturers of builders supplies, and novelty wooden goods. There was a very heavy stock of material on hand, and this, with the building and machinery, was totally destroyed. The loss will be heavy, and there was only a light insurance.

England Won't Discuss Sugar.

London, Aug. 9.—In a despatch to The Daily Mail from St. Petersburg the correspondent says Great Britain in her reply to the circular issued by M. de Witte, Russian Minister of Finance, regarding the Brussels sugar convention, declines to participate in a conference on the sugar question.

Viking Ship Found.

Christiania, Norway, Aug. 9.—The latest of three recently discovered Viking ships has been unearthed on the Island of Karmoe. It is a beautifully designed specimen of the tenth century, pioneer of the modern warship, is 45 feet long, and is marvellously preserved.

Thirteen Lives Lost.

Pueblo, Colo., Aug. 9.—An explosion in a mine at Trinidad killed thirteen miners last night.

HAPPY IN A POORHOUSE

FORMER PARTNER OF JAY GOULD, OLD, BLIND BUT NOT DESPONDENT.

Josiah Lynn, once Jay Gould's partner, is spending the evening of his life in the poorhouse in Karsville, N. F. He is blind, but philosophical. He has just passed his 73rd birthday. "You look at me, sitting here in the poorhouse, an old man, blind, friendless, with apparently nothing to live for, and you wonder that I should smile. That is because you are young. When you grow older your griefs will not be so poignant. You will become more philosophical, and if you live right and have a sound, sane judgment, when you come to die you will look back and say "How foolish I was to allow anything to make me unhappy.'

"For, after all, there is nothing in this world that can happen to us which really ought to cause us a moment's unhappiness. Take myself, for instance. I have been a wealthy man in my day—a wealthy man with plenty of friends and a wife whom I loved devotedly. They have all passed away—wife, friends and fortune—and I am left to end my days in the poorhouse. Could I have foreseen such an end when I was an ambitious young man or even so recently as 20 years ago, I should have gone mad, I suppose. But instead of that I find myself not discontented, not unhappy—certainly much happier than many so-called fortunate people.

"I am not unhappy, simply because I have learned to look at things philosophically, and all my life I have not attempted to hunt for happiness outside of my own mind and heart. So much is written and preached on this subject of happiness—so much nonsense—that people have grown tired of the word. It has become a mockery, and the man who declares himself happy is usually considered either an egotist or a fool."

Lynn was a partner of Gould over 50 years ago. They made money in a tannery and in other ventures. In after years Gould helped his former partner with tips on the stock market. Bad investments swept the old man's fortune away. Then came the death of his wife and children and total blindness.

GREAT ALTERATION SALE

For the last year we have been inconvenienced considerably for want of space to show our goods, that our business has grown no one will doubt, and in order to keep pace with its rapid growth we must have more room.

To-day the carpenters will remove our rear store and begin work in earnest. The plumbers are with us busy at their part of the job. We have had to remove all our goods in the rear of the cellar and the front part of our store is also to receive special up-to-date touches. What we ask is that the people of Belleville and vicinity will aid us in getting rid of our crowded stock, and for this end we will hold two weeks sale, goods will be sold so cheap that it will startle the whole community.

Come early. Goods sold out will not be replaced during alterations.

A LARGE FUNERAL

OBSEQUIES OF THE LATE GEO. S. MORTON, WHO DIED FROM AN ACCIDENT.

The funeral of the late Mr. Geo. S. Morton, of Huntingdon, whose demise was caused by an accident, took place yesterday and was one of the largest ever seen in that section of the country. It is estimated that the cortege was two miles in length. The Orangemen turned out in large numbers, the funeral being under their auspices. The services were conducted at the Methodist church, Moira, by Rev. R. N. Harris, and Rev. R. McCulloch, of Thomasburg. The bearers were members of the Order. Upon the casket were placed a number of floral tributes by relatives and friends.

APPENDICITIS PREVENTIBLE

HOW IT MAY BE AVOIDED ALTOGETHER IF CARE IS USED.

Toronto World: What to do in the case of an attack of appendicitis is an all important question nowadays, but a still more important question in our opinion is how appendicitis may be avoided altogether. Just four days previous to his being called on to operate on the King, Sir Frederick Treves delivered a paper before a medical society in London on the subject of appendicitis and inflammation of the vermiform appendix. In referring to the exciting causes of the disease the learned doctor makes no mention of the popular theory that the lodgment of seeds, pits and kernels in the appendix is principally responsible for the disease. We gather from Sir Frederick's paper that appendicitis is not an accidental disease, caused by some small solid particle getting out of its course, but that it is the result of gross faults in the dietary of the individual. The doctor mentions as a fit subject for the disease the commercial traveller who, perhaps, has no masticating teeth, eats anything he comes across at all times of the day, lunches at one, two or three o'clock, rushes into the bar with his hat on the back of his head, eats anything that happens to present itself, bolts it and goes about his business in an atmosphere of tobacco and alcohol. If there is one solitary factor in the production of appendicitis, which is overwhelming, that factor is, according to Sir Frederick, a loaded cecum. "If loading or overloading of the cecum could be avoided there would be exceedingly little appendicitis. That is so almost uniform a feature of this trouble that one need hardly go into the history of some of the cases. You know what these histories are — a child with teeth overlapping, a man with no masticating teeth to eat meat, the commercial traveller who has his meals all over the country and eats and drinks and smokes too much, and a man who habitually bolts his food. Nothing plays, I think, so important a part in the prophylactic treatment of appendicitis as the recognition of the fact that if the cecum can be kept free from indigestible food and undigested food the risk of attack is very much minimised."

It will not do, then, to blame appendicitis on the much abused grape seed or orange pit. If one would avoid the malady he ought to look to his teeth, he should eat his food more deliberately, and should give some intelligent consideration to the choice of his diet. The inference to be drawn from the great specialist's paper is that appendicitis is very largely a preventible disease and that if it is properly treated there is not much danger of a fatal issue.

DOES IT PAY TO BUY CHEAP?

A cheap remedy for coughs and colds is all right, but you want something that will relieve and cure the more severe and dangerous results of throat and lung troubles. What shall you do? Go to a warmer and more regular climate? Yes, if possible; if not possible for you, then in either case take the ONLY remedy that has been introduced in all civilized countries with success in severe throat and lung troubles, "Boschee's German Syrup." It not only heals and stimulates the tissues to destroy the germ disease, but allays inflammation, causes easy expectoration, gives a good night's rest and cures the patient. Try ONE bottle. Recommended many years by all druggists in the world. You can get this reliable remedy at R. Templeton & Co.'s.

Bicyclist Collided With a Rig

Last evening Mr. J. A. Vickers was driving up Bridge street west, when a little girl riding upon a bicycle accidentally collided with the rig, throwing her to the ground and damaging her wheel somewhat. Mr. Vickers did all in his power to avert the accident, but could not prevent it. The girl, whose name was not ascertained, escaped with some slight bruises.

YESTERDAY IN CITY CHURCHES

Patriotic and Eloquent Address by Rev. Dr. Crothers in Bridge St. Church.

Notes of Services in Belleville's Different Places of Worship Yesterday

Bridge St. Church.

When one entered Bridge St. church last night and saw the Union Jacks behind the pulpit and the large pictures of the King and Queen on each side of it he could easily have surmised there was to be something doing in the patriotic line. There was a large congregation present, who entered heartily into the exercises. It was a most unique and gratifying service, especially to loyal people. Rev. Dr. Galbraith, in his opening prayer, very fervently prayed for the newly-crowned King and Queen, the choir sang Kipling's "Recessional" and another patriotic anthem, "God Bless Our Lord the King," Miss Mabel Vermilyea taking the solo in the former in excellent style. At the conclusion of the service our old friend, Mr. S. Burrows, sang "Rule Britannia," the choir and congregation "coming in" on the chorus. How did he sing? Well, you know what people say, "Nobody can sing a patriotic song like Burrows." The sermon, or address, or whatever it may be called, by the pastor, Rev. Dr. Crothers, was really a splendid effort. It was eloquent, scholarly, full of information as well as good sound reasoning, and withal breathing a spirit of intense patriotism, which many times thrilled his hearers. Edward the Seventh had thousands of eulogists yesterday, but we doubt if any of the tributes surpassed, in the smallest degree, that which arose from the pulpit of Bridge St. church. The Rev. gentleman took as his text the 8th and 9th verses of the 3rd chapter of the First Book of Kings:

"And thy servant is in the midst of thy people which thou hast chosen, a great people, that cannot be numbered nor counted for multitude.

"Give, therefore, thy servant an understanding heart to judge thy people, that I may discern between good and bad: for who is able to judge this thy so great a people?"

The providence of God, the preacher said, had never been so manifested to the British people as in the course of recent events. The circumstances leading up to the postponement of the coronation ceremonies were recounted. With their King lying on what might have been his deathbed the hearts of the people turned to their God, and from all classes and conditions the prayer arose that King Edward might be spared. The world had never witnessed such a spectacle. And the prayer was heard. The hand of Providence was plainly visible in all these events. The new Coronation day was fixed; it has come and gone. In spite of the croakers and soothsayers and prophets of evil Edward the Seventh has received the crown which was his due. When the tones of Bridge St. church's bell rang out on Saturday morning people felt a strange thrill, though perhaps they could not have explained the reason why. It marked the end of a period of doubt and heart-heaviness; the night was over, the day had dawned; the man for whom millions of prayers had arisen had received the crown which was his due. The coronation ceremony was not only a matter of form, it was a necessary rite. As in old times the priests of God were consecrated to His work, so the coronation of King Edward marked his consecration to God and the Empire. We could be thankful that we dwelt under the best form of Government the world has ever seen. Had King Edward died it would have been the greatest calamity which ever befel Great Britain. He was thankful they could honor the man as well as the throne. The King was not a perfect man—none of us were perfect, but the preacher said he believed that most of the evil stories about him came from the yellow journals. The English court was open, not like that of Turkey or other despotic nations. In the fierce light which beat upon the British throne no one could hope to sin and not be found out. The King's rapid recovery from his illness showed conclusively that he had not lived the life his traducers charged him with. For 40 years he was a staff for Good Queen Victoria to lean upon. Great was the Victorian era; it would ever be known in history as the most enlightened and the most progressive era the world had ever seen, but no one but God, the dead Queen and King Edward himself would ever know what part the Queen's eldest son played in it. Who can tell what might have happened had not Victoria had the advice of the Prince of Wales during these long 40 years! The King was a great judge of men and a born diplomat. The thought of his subjects seems ever to be in his mind. His first words, after the operation had been performed, were: "Will my people ever forgive me?" The hearts of the British people had turned to him more than ever since then. If King Solomon thought he needed wisdom to rule over the Children of Israel, what must King Edward think. In eloquent words the preacher delved into English history to show the many glorious examples set before our present ruler. He must be inspired by the example and thought of the men and women he had succeeded. Did ever man have such a responsibility? Ruling over 400,000,000 people and over 11,000,000 square miles of territory, on which the sun never set. The British Empire was not built upon lust of conquest—it was founded on a basis of light and liberty. Wherever the Union Jack has gone there has gone the word of God; they were joined together, and what God has joined together no man can ever put asunder. Under Britain's flag all men were equal. While the Union Jack floats over South Africa no Boer will ever again horsewhip a Kaffir with impunity or drive him off the sidewalk, for under that red, white and blue banner any man, no matter what his color, has just as many rights as a Dutchman. Every one was struck with the generosity of the terms of peace, especially when we remembered the white flag outrages, the ambulances fired upon, etc. Under the Union Jack all religions had protection and equal rights. Canada was now an integral part of the British Empire; the dream of annexation and independence was now a thing of the past forever. It was a great privilege to belong to such an Empire as this, and he thought he was quite within his province as a Christain minister when he impressed upon the younger members of the church the spirit of loyalty. When they thought of the Bible and the flag they must feel their hearts sing within them for joy, as they proudly exclaimed in the words of St. Paul, "We are citizens of no mean city." In an impassioned peroration the Rev. Doctor closed his discourse, praying that Edward the Seventh might worthily and peacefully wear his earthly crown till he gained an eternal crown, and with it the right to take part in the great coronation ceremony when our Saviour, Jesus Christ, will be crowned Lord of All.

John Street.

At the morning service Holy Communion was celebrated, and the Pastor, Rev. A. H. Drumm, gave an address relating to this important service. In the evening his subject was "Soul Hunger," and various scripture texts bearing on the subject were used. During the evening service Mrs. James Grant and Miss Coleman rendered a duet.

St. John's.

The Rector, Rev. Rural Dean Bogert, officiated and preached at both services. In the morning the Rev. gentleman's subject was of a patriotic nature, referring especially to the crowning of the King. The text was the 61st Psalm. In the evening the text was from St. Luke, 18th chapter and 14th verse.

Baptist.

The pastor of this church being absent yesterday, the pulpit in the morning was acceptably filled by the Rev. J. Ferguson. In the evening Ald. Chown conducted the services and preached from Philippians, 3rd chapter, 1st verse, and Philippians, 4th chapter and 4th verse:

"Finally, my brethren, rejoice in the Lord.

"Rejoice in the Lord always and again I say rejoice."

Emmanuel R. E. Church.

The services yesterday morning were of a patriotic nature, having reference to the King's coronation. "Rule Britannia" was played as an opening voluntary. The Rector, Rev. Mr. Gilliland, took as his text the 12th verse of the 11th chapter of the Second Book of Kings:

"And he brought forth the King's son, and put the crown upon him, and gave him the testimony, and they made him king and anointed him, and they clapped their hands and said, God save the King."

The sermon was intensely patriotic, and the preacher eulogized King Edward as an affectionate and dutiful son, who had for many years relieved his mother, the late Queen, of most of the arduous duties of her position. He had, in this self-denying way, fitted himself for the place he now occupied. The character of the Kings of Israel could be told by reading the chronicles of the people. So it was in modern days. The British nation had as a ruler the worthy son of a good woman, whose name had become a household word both as Queen and woman. He prayed that the same qualities which marked Victoria would ever show themselves in her son, and that under his rule the Empire might remain, what it is today, the greatest and freest the world had ever seen. "Shame," said the preacher, "on any man who would endeavor to have in any way Canada's present conditions changed." At the conclusion of the service "God Save the King" was sung by choir and congregation.

Holloway Street.

The Pastor, Rev. J. R. Real, conducted the services and preached in the morning, his subject being "The Parable of the Talents," and the text was from St. Matthew, 26th chapter, 15th, 16th and 17th verses.

In the evening the Rev. M. J. Bates, of Bleecker Ave. church, occupied the pulpit and gave an excellent discourse.

Christ Church.

In the absence of the Rector yesterday, the Rev. T. Garrett, of Ottawa, preached at both services, assisted by Rev. W. Fleming, of Shannonville. In the evening the Rev. Mr. Garrett's text was from Ephesians, 4th chapter and 4th verse:

"There is one body, and one spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling."

St. Thomas'.

There were good congregations present at the services at St. Thomas' church yesterday, and the sermons by the Rector, Rev. G. R. Beamish were much appreciated. In the evening the Rev. gentleman's subject was in reference to "The appearance of God to Elijah at Mount Horeb," the text being from 1st Kings, 19th chapter and 11th, 12th and 13th verses.

During the morning service Mrs. A. G. Parker sang, most acceptably, "Hear ye Israel," from Mendelssohn's "Elijah," and in the evening the National Anthem was rendered by the choir and congregation. As the congregation was leaving the church in the evening Mrs. (Col.) Campbell, organist, played "Rule Britannia."

Bleecker Ave. Church.

Regular quarterly services were held yesterday morning, the Pastor, Rev. M. J. Bates, officiating. In the evening Rev. J. R. Real preached an excellent sermon to an attentive and interested congregation.

St. Andrew's.

The Pastor, Rev. M. W. Maclean, preached at both services yesterday to good congregations. In the evening the Rev. gentleman's text was from St. John, 10th chapter, 27th, 28th and 29th verses.

The Tent Meetings.

The meetings in the tent near the park, under the direction of Rev. M. J. Bates, pastor of Belleville north churches, were of much interest yesterday. The presence of so many young men is one indication of the good possible to such work. Mrs. Schuster and workers in attendance were a great aid to our service. The evening meeting, held after the church services closed, was well attended and of evidence of good to the young people. We were glad to see so many ministers and laymen of the city interested. On the platform were Rev. Dr. Crothers, Rev. Dr. Galbraith, Rev. J. R. Real, of West Belleville, Ald. Chown and wife, and others. Miss Lambly greatly aided us at the organ. Bright, cheerful songs and pointed addresses were given by several. The character of the work and workers indicate much good by these tent meetings. They will be held every night for the present week. The tent is lighted by electricity and comfortable seats provided. We hope to have more seating capacity. Every one interested in the moral and religious interests of the city are invited to be with us. All are welcome for the best we have and can do. Come to-night and every night possible.—Com.

Sermon to Foresters.

Rev. A. L. Geen, of this city, preached a special sermon to the Foresters of Wellington and the surrounding district in St. Andrew's church, that village, yesterday afternoon. There was a full attendance. Some of the ritual of the Foresters was used in the service, and Mr. Shurie, of Wellington, sang a solo very acceptably. At the conclusion of the service the Foresters' passed a vote of thanks to Rev. Mr. Geen for his excellent and practical sermon.

OLD SOL.

FOXBORO WOMAN LATEST VICTIM

SHARPER PASSES OFF A RAISED $1 BILL UPON HER.

The party who successfully passed off a $1 bill raised to a $10 at Deseronto and tried the same game at Shannonville, turned up on Thursday last at Foxboro, where he was again successful. He visited the store of Mr. A. C. Dafoe, and that gentleman being out, Mrs. Dafoe waited upon the stranger who purchased a few articles and gave in payment one of the raised bills, receiving in change nearly $9. The mistake was not discovered until Mr. Dafoe went to make a deposit in the bank and presented the bills with some others.

SWITZERLAND IN CANADA.

At a point 145 miles north of Toronto on the Grand Trunk Railway System is reached one of the most magnificent districts in the Highlands of Ontario, and which has been named by many world wide travellers the "Switzerland of America." The region is known as the 'Lake of Bays district and comprises a series of connected lakes, over which large steamers are navigated. What greatly adds to the Lake of Bays value as a health giving and sporting resort is the unmatched purity of the air one breathes upon its heights. The cranky grumbler, unless he is a confirmed dyspeptic, forgets his ills under its reviving influence in less than a week, and sees life's problems in a smoother light if he only has the sense and capacity to enjoy the good things in this life which Nature and Providence have prepared for him. The whole region is placed high above the level of Lake Ontario, and its bracing morning breeze, which rivals the celebrated atmosphere of Pike's Peak, Col., imparts new lung power and fresh vitality.

For all information, full particulars, descriptive matter, maps, etc., write J. D. McDonald, District Passenger Agent, Grand Trunk Railway System, Toronto Canada.

THE KING CROWNED

Fortune Smiles on Destinies of the British Empire.

AMID BLAZE OF SPLENDOR

Britain's Monarch Received Crown and Sceptre.

Impressive Scene in the Ancient Abbey of Westminster as the Venerable Primate of England Placed the Crown Upon Royal Edward "Our Undoubted King"—King Acted His Part Nobly—Homage Paid by Princes and Nobles—Fatherhood Greater Than Kinghood—Queen Also Crowned—Alexandra Wins Golden Plaudits From Everyone.

London, Aug. 11.—Edward VII, R. I., by the grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas, Defender of the Faith, Emperor of India, was Saturday crowned without hitch or harm, and then London noisily celebrated the event, for which the world has waited, as perhaps, it never waited any other coronation.

In all respects the celebration was impressive, and it was carried out with a perfection of detail and lack of accidents that has previously marked such displays. The pride of Empire, which marked Queen Victoria's jubilee, was lacking, and in its stead there pervaded among all classes a keen recollection that only six weeks ago the King lay in danger of death. This fact produced thankfulness and genuine sympathy for the man, rather than adulation for the King, and this feeling was voiced by the Archbishop of Canterbury, when he inserted in one of the coronation prayers the words "For whose recovery we now give Thee heartfelt thanks." This did not prevent the public from voicing its appreciation of each military display as the short procession gave to them a chance to see.

A British Coronation.

The absence of special diplomatic embassies deprived the coronation in a large measure of its international character, although Prince and Princess Henry were in the choir, many princesses in the royal box, and the regular embassies were fully represented. The roll of the British Empire, however, might have been called in the Abbey. The Indian princes, in splendid costumes, were present, and all of the self-governing commonwealths and nearly all of the crown colonies were represented by Premiers, Ministers or Governors. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in picturesque blue mantle and decorations of gold, sat with Premiers Barton and Seddon in the choir near Ambassador and Mrs. Choate, and close at hand were Messrs. Fielding, Paterson, Mulock, Borden, Ross and other Canadian Ministers and provincial Premiers. Lady Laurier was richly dressed in white, and there were many other Canadian woman in prominent seats. There have been grand pageants at Westminster Abbey for generation after generation, but there never has been a spectacle so unique in representative and comprehensive character as this Imperial coronation with a cloud of witnesses from the remotest bounds of the Empire. The Americans were less favored than the Canadians, who had at least seventy seats, yet there were fully thirty in the Abbey.

"Good old Bobs."

Earl Roberts, commander-in-chief of the forces, was once more the hero of the hour, and, next to the King himself, received the heartiest welcome of the assembled crowds. "Here comes good old Bobs," was invariably the signal for all the reserve power of British lungs to be brought into play. Lord Roberts rode alone, anx constantly bowed and smiled acknowledgments of his greeting. Lord Kitchener was not so easily recognized, but he was seen as he rode with General Sir Alfred Gaselee and Admiral Sir Edward Hobart Seymour, and was the crowd's next favorite.

At various points along the route of the procession Lord Kitchener received thunderous ovations, which he acknowledged neither by look nor bow but as English crowds are used to this treatment from Lord Kitchener of Khartoum it failed to suppress the enthusiasm.

For King and Queen.

It was for the King and Queen themselves that the people really let themselves loose. Through the day, whenever and wherever Their Majesties were seen, the cheers were loud and long, and especially was this noticeable on the return journey of the King and Queen to Buckingham Palace.

Until the booming of guns announced that the crowning of King Edward and Queen Alexandra had been achieved there lingered in thousands of minds a nervous apprehension that even at the last moment some untoward event might once more plunge the nation into consternation. When this time was passed, the unrestrained jubilation was as much a tribute to the King's personal popularity as it was an evidence of relief from the tension of the last few weeks, and so, while the scenes on the streets were robbed of many of those elements that usually accompany a great pageant, they will long be remembered—perhaps somewhat tenderly—by those who stood on the stands, at windows and on the sidewalks to see King Edward after he had won almost from the jaws of death his crown.

A Marvelous Scene

In Westminster Abbey the scene was nothing less than marvelous. Nearly seven thousand members of the nobility, the clergy and the gentry had gathered, with foreign princes, ambassadors, colonial rulers, Indian potentates and leaders from the farthest quarters of the globe, where the Union Jack flies, to do honor to the King.

Two incidents in the service in the Abbey will live in the memory of all who witnessed them. The first of these, which almost developed into a dramatic contretemps, centered around the aged Archbishop of Canterbury. From the opening of the service the Archbishop had the greatest difficulty in reading or remembering the prayers. The book from which his almost blind eyes endeavored to read shook in his hands, and when he came to place the crown on King Edward's head, his huge frame, towering above the seated King, swayed so violently that the Bishop of Winchester had to support him, while the Dean of Westminster put a guarding hand under the crown. It was evident that the Archbishop of Canterbury could not see the King's head, and, after groping around, he was just about to complete the most important part of the ceremony when it was discovered that he had the crown with the back to the front. Slowly he raised it, but too late to prevent the choir from prematurely bursting out with a loud "God Save the King." Amid a tension which has grown to a pitch of painful nervousness the Archbishop finally managed to place the crown correctly upon the King's head.

King Tender and True.

A few minutes later came the climax to feebleness. He was kneeling to do the first homage of all the subjects of the King, when suddenly he almost fainted, and would have fallen upon his sovereign's knees had not King Edward, tenderly but firmly, grasped both the prelate's hands, and lifted him to his feet. The Bishops of London, Winchester and Durham clasped their arms around the Archbishop of Canterbury, the King kissed his wrinkled hand, the Archbishop's head fell back, his feet moved slowly and mechanically, and thus he was more carried than led from the throne to St. Edward's Chapel, where he was revived.

Father Instead of King.

The tremor which this event caused had scarcely subsided when another human touch varied the proceedings and the King was forgotten in the father. Instead of merely accepting the homage of the Prince of Wales, King Edward put his arms around the Prince and kissed him and then recalled him and wrung his hand with a manliness of parental affection that brought tears to many eyes. To those who were able to see clearly these two episodes, the magnificence of the bejeweled women, the splendor of the uniformed men and even the historic grandeur of the coronation office itself sank almost into secondary interest.

The King Unnerved.

Late Saturday night it was learned that King Edward was greatly unnerved by the condition of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and that His Majesty sat in constant dread of a failure in the proceedings, though he was outwardly calm, as could be judged from the steadiness with which he held his sceptre rod erect during the ordeal. This brave show, however, did not deceive the Queen. Through the service, and especially as the Archbishop of Canterbury became more and more nervous.

Her Majesty palpably dreaded that the King would break down. With keen anxiety she constantly turned toward her husband, watching him intently through the ceremony. Her dignity and solicitude for King Edward was one of the most charming features of the proceedings in the Abbey. Her Majesty's appearance won praise from the women, many of whom declared that Queen Alexandra did not look a day over thirty-five.

Queen's Own Crowning.

The Queen's own crowning was brief and simple. When the four duchesses went to hold a canopy over her Majesty's head, the Duchess of Marlborough, and the Duchess of Portland led the way. They performed their duties excellently. As the critical moment for which the peeresses had long practiced, namely, the putting on of their coronets at the moment the Queen was crowned approached, a flutter of nervousness ran through their ranks and coronets were pulled out and patted and pinched into shape, and then all their arms suddenly went up, and coronets, large and small, were put in place, some crooked and some straight. For the next five minutes the peeresses disregarded what passed before them; first one and then another turned around for advice and help, and then ensued a pushing of each others' coronets into place.

Was at Victoria's Crowning.

Another incident relating to royalty was the presence of the Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, who, at the express desire of Queen Alexandra, sat at exactly the same spot as she occupied at the coronation of Queen Victoria.

No stage effect could have equalied the climax that ensued the moment the crown was placed upon King Edward's head, the sudden illumination by hundreds of electric lights making the thousands of priceless jewels, including those in the crown itself, sparkle with dazzling brilliancy. The instantaneous movement of the peers, the placing of the coronets upon their heads, the choir's loud "God Save the King," with its unharmonious, yet genuine, refrain from thousands of male and female throats, constituted such an outburst of pent up thankfulness and rejoicing as even Westminster Abbey, with all its historic traditions, never before witnessed.

Orderly Revel at Night.

When night came on there was orderly revel and public rejoicing. The illuminations were brilliant at the Bank of England, and the Mansion House, and the Canadian arch was transformed into loveliness by a most artistic arrangement of lights, being the centre of attraction until midnight. Clubland was ablaze with electric lights and transparencies, and Piccadilly was the scene of gay revelling. The crowds were immense and received full possession of the roadways, the police contenting themselves with keeping them in motion. Even at midnight the streets were still densely thronged, and "God Save the King" was heard at every turn. Splendid as was the day's function, there was a homely air of national gratitude and thanksgiving pervading every scene and act of ceremonial homage. England rejoices not that the time honored ritual of the coronation has been repeated on a scale of unexampled magnificence, but because the King is himself once more restored to health, after the terrible strain of anxiety and disappointment.

THREE PROCESSIONS.

Some Detail of What the Folk in the Street Saw.

At the hour appointed for the departure of the royal procession approached the excitement about Buckingham Palace was most marked. Punctual to time the advance guard of the royal cavalcade issued from the archway, the horses of the troopers curvetting nervously as they faced the wall of humanity that cheered their coming. Shortly afterwards came the Prince and Princess of Wales' procession, and finally within a few minutes Their Majesties' state coach appeared at the gateway, and the King and Queen smiled and bowed in response to the mighty roar of cheers that dwarfed all previous welcomes. The scene in the vicinity was remarkable.

The three processions to the Abbey were carried out according to program and the only striking features of the first two were the gorgeous state carriages and the beautiful trappings and horses.

IN THE ABBEY.

How Brave King Edward Took the Oath and the Ceremony.

In Westminster Abbey the doors of that edifice were scarcely opened and the gold sticks and ushers had barely found their stations before the seats began to fill. Peers and peeresses swept up the nave, their scarlet and ermine making vivid contrasts with the deep blue of the carpet. As they arrived before the thrones they separated, the peers going to the right and the peeresses to the left. By 10 o'clock the interior of the Abbey present a blaze of color.

Queen Enters.

The Archbishop of Canterbury took his seat in front of the coronation chair, and the Earl of Halsbury, the Lord High Chancellor, seated himself by his side. Several minutes elapsed, however, before the King and Queen came in sight of those gathered about the throne. Suddenly "Vivat Alexandra" was shouted by the boys of Westminster, and the Queen, walking slowly to the left of the throne, gained her chair and knelt at a silken priedieu, her magnificent train of cloth-of-gold, being lifted out of her way by six scarlet coated pages.

Then King Edward.

Two or three minutes later arose the cry from the Westminster boys of "Vivat Rex Edwardus," with blasts from trumpets, and King Edward appeared and walked to his chair in front of the throne, bowing to the Queen as he passed, and then knelt down in prayer.

Church Kneels to King.

Having placed the King into his new throne the Archbishop knelt and paid homage, the aged prelate scarcely being able to rise until the King assisted him and himself raised the Archbishop's hand from the steps of the throne. The next person to pay homage to His Majesty was the Prince of Wales, and then the representatives of each grade of nobility touched the crown as a token of fealty, and kissed the King's cheek.

Queen Also Crowned.

The Queen then rose, and accompanied by her entourage, proceeded to the altar steps, where, under a pall of cloth of gold, she was quickly crowned by the Archbishop of York, supported by the Bishops. She was then led to the throne beside that in which the King sat and her enthronization was accomplished. The Queen bowed to King Edward, and both walked to the altar and received the communion.

Their Majesties Depart.

As Their Majesties were leaving the Abbey, rain commenced to fall, and they returned and deferred their departure until the rain ceased. They left at 2 p.m. The departure of the King and Queen from the Abbey was signalled by another salute; the massed bands played "God Save the King." The entire route of Their Majesties return to the Palace was marked by scenes of enthusiasm, similar to those which greeted their progress to the Abbey.

MR. CHAMBERLAIN NOT JEALOUS.

Has Never Been a Candidate For the Post of Prime Minister.

Ottawa, Aug. 11.—Henry J. Morgan yesterday morning received a note from the Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, the Colonial Secretary, in which the British statesman expresses regret at the appearance of certain articles recently published in the Canadian press in reference to the advancement to the Premiership of Mr. Balfour.

Mr. Chamberlain, after thanking Mr. Morgan for inclosing copies of these papers, says:

"There is not the slightest foundation for the theory that there is any humiliation in Mr. Balfour's well-deserved promotion. I have never been a candidate for the office of Prime Minister, and greatly prefer to continue in my present post of Secretary of State for the Colonies."

The Fourteenth Week.

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Aug. 11.—The fourteenth week of the anthractic miners' strike begins to-day. President Mitchell is authority for the statement made yesterday that the strikers are in good shape. Contributions to the relief fund are coming in from many quarters now and $20,000 contribution from the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen is expected by the strikers within the next 10 days.

The Petit Bleu announces the sudden death of Gen. Lucas Meyer of heart disease, at Brussels. General Meyer was attacked several times with this illness during the war in South Africa. Gen. Lucas Meyer fought and lost the opening battle in the late Boer war. Meyer's troops began the first bombardment of Ladysmith, on Oct. 28. Gen. Meyer was born in the Orange Free State in 1846.

Eating From the Same Plate.

In former days it was usual for a couple seated together to eat from one trencher, more particularly if the relations between them were of an intimate nature or, again, if it were the master and mistress of the establishment. Walpole relates that so late as the middle of the eighteenth century the old Duke and Duchess of Hamilton occupied the dais at the head of the room and preserved the traditional manner by sharing the same plate. It was a token of attachment and tender recollection of unreturnable youth.

OPPORTUNITY.

This I beheld, or dreamed it in a dream:
There spread a cloud of dust along a plain;
And underneath the cloud, or in it, raged
A furious battle, and men yelled, and swords
Shocked upon swords and shields. A prince's banner
Wavered, then staggered backward, hemmed by foes.
A craven hung along the battle's edge,
And thought, "Had I sword of keener steel—
That blue blade that the king's son bears—but this Blunt thing!"—He snapt and flung it from his hand,
And lowering crept away, and left the field.
Then came the king's son, wounded, sore bestead,
And weaponless, and saw the broken sword,
Hilt-buried in the dry and trodden sand,
And ran and snatched it, and with battle shout
Lifted afresh he hewed his enemy down,
And saved a great cause that heroic day.

BOER WAR STORIES.

An Innocent "Tommy" and His Query to General Botha.

The London Daily Mail's war correspondent, Mr. Edgar Wallace, writing from Klerksdorp, says: "There is an unrecorded incident of the peace conference which caused some amusement among the Boer delegates. The train conveying General Botha to Klerksdorp was standing at a small station when a Tommy, impelled by curiosity, drew near to the special saloon on the bridge of which Louis Botha was standing, and, respectfully saluting the Boer leader, asked, 'When are you going to let us go home, sir?' Botha smiled and replied, 'Very soon,' he hoped. 'The sooner the quicker,' quoted Atkins, and Botha laughed heartily."

A story is told in the English papers concerning a captain of the Fighting Fifth who fell into General Delarey's hands on December 13, 1900, when, in conjunction with Commandant Beyers he surprised General Clements at Nooitgedacht. After the engagement General Delarey, addressing the captain in friendly tones, said:—"Our day to-day, captain, yours to-morrow." He then gave an order that the prisoners should be removed to a neighboring mill, and offered the captain his own pony that he might ride there.

The offer was accepted, but, on mounting, the officer found himself in the position of being an armed man again, for Delarey's rifle was resting in the stirrup cup. "Perhaps you had better take this, General," he said, handing the weapon to Delarey, who laughingly replied that perhaps he had.

He then said, "But I must have those glasses, captain," indicating a pair of field glasses which his prisoner was carrying. The latter, however, begged to be allowed to retain these, as he particularly prized them.

"I am very sorry, captain," was the reply, "but I must have them. But I tell you what I will do. As soon as this (the war) is over I will send them to you, or their value"—and the captain still believes that he will keep his word.

London's Fire Traps.

We are sure that if a practical enquiry were set on foot as to the extent of the provision generally made in the buildings of London for protection against fire an appalling conclusion would be reached. Several lives have been lost recently in London fires because there was no way of escape. London is undoubtedly swarming on all sides with death traps only ready to claim their victims when a fire has broken out. Every one is aware of the difficulties which have to be faced when the question of the efficient protection of life shut up in buildings in a congested area is approached. In probably the majority of buildings in London it is impossible even to escape to the roof and thence to gain a safe refuge on the adjoining premises. We know at least of one instance, that of well-known bank premises, in which the boundaries of the property are marked on the roof by ugly spiked fences. While it is true that even this way of escape is not easy, it is certain that in a greater number of instances no such thing as a fire ladder is available.

How painful and appalling the outcome can be is evident from the terrible results of the non-existence of any means of escape at a fire which occurred in the city on Monday last. The example is all the more remarkable since the fire broke out in broad daylight, at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and within 300 yards of the chief city fire station. The first call, indeed, came to the brigade by a messenger on foot. In spite of the proximity of the rescue station, ten lives were sacrificed in this fire because there were no means of escape and because the rescue appliances could not reach the upper floors, where several poor operatives were in danger. The fire escapes were too short by a few feet. On the morning after the fire one of our representatives visited the scene, and he states that the building was not a remarkably high one, and not so high as thousands of others in London streets.

The fire brigade authorities must be aware of the length of their fire escapes, and they must surely also know the extreme height of the largest buildings in the metropolis, and yet in this instance the fire escape failed to reach the top floor of the building. Prima facie, there would seem to be divulged in this occurrence a distinct and serious defect in the machinery of the brigade.

After Long Years.

An old man who had been working for a city firm for forty-two years, was called one morning into his master's private office.

"I'm awfully sorry, Mr. Holden," said his employer, "but we've decided to reduce our staff, so your services will not be required after next week."

The old fellow seemed to be considerably astonished.

"Surely there's some mistake, sir!" he exclaimed. "Why, when I started I was told the job was regular!"

NEW ZEALAND.

Mark the Result of the Government Working the Railways—Prosperity shown in the Recent Financial Statement.

Sir Joseph Ward, the acting Colonial Treasurer, made his financial statement, recently.

Last year's revenue amounted to £6,152,839, while the expenditure amounted to £5,914,915, leaving an excess of revenue over expenditure of £237,924. Adding to this the balance which was brought over from the preceding year, namely, £32,564 after deduction of the sum of £500,000, which was transferred to the public works fund, a surplus is left of £270,488. At the close of the past year, the public works expenditure amounted to £2,143,252, and £200,000 of advances previously received were paid off. The cash balance was £454,059, with about £100,000 of the last loan to be received.

The public debt was now £52,966,447, showing an increase of £3,375,212 during the year, of which amount however, quite £1,619,285, being at once interest-earning will not become a burden on the tax-payer.

The bringing into operation of the principles of local self-government by the Maoris, under the Maori Councils act of 1901, has already proved to be a great boon to them, and it ensures the increase of the race. Old-age pensions cost the colony last year £207,000. The land tax and income tax revenue exceeded the estimates. Works are in progress at the State coal mines at Westport and Greymouth. The reductions given by the present Government since it took office are: Railways, £510,000; mortgage tax, £25,000; posts and telegraphs, £181,000; customs, £138,000.

Every effort is being made to secure trade with South Africa, the United Kingdom, India, China and Japan, and it is hoped to complete shortly a contract for a steamship service to South Africa. The construction of railways and of roads is being vigorously pushed forward.

The Government proposes further large concessions to the public—in railways, £40,000, and a reduction of £25,000 from the mortgage tax—and also proposes to assist the bush settlers by a remission of rent during the first few years of their leases.

The estimates for the current year reach £5,987,063, for expenditure, and £6,083,500, for revenue, which, with the balance brought forward from last year, leaves a surplus of £367,000 to provide for further appropriations in the supplementary estimates, and for the usual transfer to the public works fund in aid of the construction of roads and bridges.

It is proposed to raise a new loan of £1,750,000, to be devoted to the construction of trunks and other lines of railway, and the construction of roads, tracks and bridges. The new loan will also be used for providing additional rolling stock, and for relaying the permanent way, for developing the gold fields and for telegraphic extension purposes. It is proposed to place a portion of the loan on the local money market.

The working of the railways shows excellent results, products being carried at less than a third of the cost of the carriage by land, while passengers are carried at a quarter to a sixth less. The result of this is enormously increased traffic.

The general condition of the colony is wonderfully prosperous.

A Reading Man.

I am reminded of a Scotch country gentleman, now dead, who could never comfortably read his morning paper without a lead pencil in his hand. He had a library, which would have been worth a fortune to a journalist or an acrostic solver. Every work of reference from the National Dictionary of Biography, downward, was to be found in it. He could never bear to be a year behind with his Burke or his Dod, and even his Crockford was kept up-to date, although he was a strict Presbyterian, and had few dealings with the Established Church across the bairder. Every one of his books was read.

His literary opinions were heterodox, but unabashed. His pencilled scorn for the works of Mr. George Meredith exceeded the bounds of courtesy; his admiration for those of Mr. S. R. Crockett left scarcely a page without an underlined passage. He had written just what he thought of Sir Walter Scott, and a copy of Paradise Lost was annotated as if it had been issued the week before from Messrs. Constable's press at Edinburgh. I had the curiosity to take down from his shelves an early experiment in fiction of my own. Its undergraduate's humor had been carefully weighed, and for the most part, approved, but there was occasional rows of notes of exclamation in the margin and, in one place, a marginal comment, "Oh, this is too much! ! !" At the end of the book was a sort of index of marked pages, with a few words of explanation as to why they had been marked. The whole represented an amount of attention which a very careful reviewer might give it to the important book of the year, and every other book in his library had been similarly treated—From The Speaker.

Shifting the Responsibility.

An Irishman who traded in small wares, kept a donkey cart with which he visited the different villages. On one occasion he came to a bridge where a toll was levied.

He found to his disappointment he had not enough to pay it.

A bright thought struck him. He unharnessed the donkey and put it into the cart. Then, getting between the shafts himself, he pulled the cart with the donkey standing on it on to the bridge.

In due course he was hailed by the toll collector.

"Hey, man!" cried the latter. "What's your toll?"

"Begorra," said the Irishman, "just ask the droiver."

THE ACTON LIBRARY.

Mr. Andrew Carnegie's Remarkable Gift to Mr. Morley.

The late Lord Acton's library, which Andrew Carnegie, the purchaser, has presented to Mr. John Morley, contains some 7,000 volumes, The London Daily News says:—"This is, in some respects, Mr. Carnegie's most remarkable gift, and one of the most princely and splendid acts of friendship on record. It is a tribute of wealth to genius, and Mr. Carnegie could not have chosen a more fitting recipient. It is a scholar's library, and it needed, to achieve its highest usefulness, to be placed in a scholar's hands."

The library is exceedingly rich in historical and ecclesiastical works. For this reason, and because it would cost £20,000, to erect a building for it. The Daily Chronicle thinks that Mr. Carnegie does not intend the gift for Mr. Morley's private use, but rather that he should hold it in trust for some public use, probably for one of the universities, preferably Cambridge, with which university the late Lord Acton was connected.

The library which Lord Acton collected at Alderham Park, and for which he had, some thirty years ago, a special addition to his house built, is so complete as a storehouse of modern secular and ecclesiastical history that is surpassed by few public institutions, and is equaled by no private library in Europe or America. In one respect, indeed, the library is unique. A large number of the volumes were annotated by Lord Acton. That great scholar, whose learning has been proverbial in England for the last quarter of a century, wrote very little, but his enormous stores of information were used in amplifying the volumes in his possession. Doubtless it is this fact that has induced Mr. Carnegie to present the books to the Right Hon. John Morley, for Mr. Morley is pehaps the one man in the world best equipped to utilize the knowledge which is contained in the Acton books and the annotations which Lord Acton made.

The subjects which chiefly interested Lord Acton, such as the history of the Papacy, and that of modern Europe, especially Germany, France and Italy; the Jesuits, and the evolution of political opinion and of political economy, are most of them subjects on which Mr. Morley is authority. The library is rich in volumes on these subjects, and is particularly rich in Indices Librorum Prohibitorum, Jesuitica, collections of letters in Italian, Latin and French, books relating to the Council of Trent, and the histories of Protestantism in the several French provinces.

One remarkable feature of the library is that it contains no rarities, as such, without other qualities of value. Every book that Lord Acton bought was bought because he desired to read it. The fact that a very large proportion of his books were extremely rare, and in some cases unique, was only incidental. Mr. Morley has so often expressed the view that such a collection as he now possesses should be available for public purposes, that it may be expected that the library will eventually be added to some public institution.

Pagans in Scotland.

Nearly all travelers in Central Africa have referred to the curious customs prevalent among almost all pagan native tribes, of driving quantities of nails into sacred trees and other objects that have been adjudged worthy of veneration; and this not in malice, but as a religious rite the nails in question being intended as votive offerings.

Exactly the same thing may be witnessed to-day at the sacred well of Loch Maree, Ross Shire, where is an ancient oak tree, studded with countless nails of all sizes, the offerings of invalid pilgrims, who came to worship and be cured.

Pennies and half-pennies, also, are to be seen in enormous quantities, driven edgewise into the tough bark; and a friend of the writer's, who visited the spot some little time back, discovered in a cleft high up in the trunk what he took to be a shilling.

On being extracted, however, it proved to be counterfeit. Probably the donor, finding that he could get no value for his coin in the natural world, concluded he might as well try, as a last resource, what effect it might have in the spiritual.

Of course, the poor cotters and others, who flock to St. Maelruha with their nails and their pence, do not for a moment admit that they are assisting at a pagan ceremony. But they most undoubtedly are.

Well worship has always occupied an important place in paganism; and the sacred oak, before which each pilgrim must thrice kneel, humbly presenting his offering—what is it but an obvious survival of the sacred groves of Druidical times?—Stray Stories.

Prince of Wales' Crown.

Perhaps the most remarkable headgear which the coronation will bring forth is not the King's crown, but that of the Prince of Wales. The existence of this diadem has been generally ignored, which is excusable, as it has never figured among the regalia at the Tower, and was only once worn by King Edward, and then in India on the occasion of the great durbar at Delhi. It resembles an ordinary coronet, but its apex bears a tuft of feathers tipped with gold. These are the tail feathers of the feriwah, which is the rarest member of the family of the bird of paradise. As the feriwah is not only uncommon but also frequents the haunts of tigers its capture is a matter of the greatest danger and difficulty. Moreover it must be caught alive and the feathers plucked from the tail of the living bird, as instantly after death the plumage loses its lustre. Hence it is not remarkable that the Prince of Wales' feathers took twenty years to collect, cost the lives of a dozen hunters, and are worth £10,000.

AFRICA'S NIAGARA.

The Wonderful Falls of Zambesi—White Man to Put Black Man's God Into Harness for Work.

Cecil Rhodes had a notion that some day, long after he had gone to his rest beneath the boulders on the Matappo Hills, South Africa would rise up to compete with the United States, just as the United States had risen up to make Europe "hustle."

Whether or not that dream was too big for its foundation of facts, it is certain that one branch of its support is about to be erected, and that the results are going to be of far-reaching interest and importance.

It will not be permissible to call Africa the Dark Continent when it has a tremendous electric light in the middle of it. Yet that is what it is going to have. The plan is not merely a dream, for within a few weeks an expedition sets out from London to make an actual beginning on the work of establishing at Victoria Falls on the Zambesi River an electric power plant that will in time put to blush the famous turbines at Niagara Falls, just as Victoria Falls themselves greatly exceed in height, width and grandeur those at Niagara.

It is to be a dramatic sort of invasion, for the falls thunder out to-day on the silence of an almost unbroken jungle; hippotami and crocodiles bask undisturbed in the Zambesi and lions stalk in the long grass.

To the Barotsi, the native tribe which inhabits the surrounding country, the great cataract is a god, and they pray to it, and offer up burnt sacrifices for its propitiation. And now the white man is coming to put the black man's god into harness and make him do the work of more than 100,000 horses.

It was Prof. George Forbes, an American engineer who had taken a prominent part in the "harnessing" of the Niagara Falls, who first suggested that the millions of horse power which had been going to waste in the heart of Africa should be put to practical use.

One night, five years ago, he and Alfred Haggard, a brother of the author of "King Solomon's Mines," who had just come back from Africa, sat in the Athenaeum Club in London, when the explorer told the electrician about the great falls in the Zambesi, that Livingstone had been the first white man to see, and that made the wonder of America seem a dwarf. He told him how the river, more than a mile wide, flings itself over the edge of a gorge 400 feet deep, and then zigzags its way through a rocky canyon 20 miles long.

"Why not make that cataract generate electricity and carry the power down to Rhodesia?" suggested the American engineer, and Mr. Haggard jumped at the idea.

It didn't take long to form a syndicate called the Africa Trust, to push along the scheme, and Prof. Forbes and Mr. Haggard were sent down to Rhodesia to see Cecil Rhodes about getting a concession from the Chartered Company.

Eventually Mr. Rhodes thought so well of the project that he went into partnership with the Africa Trust, but in the beginning he gave them the 25-year concession they asked for. The Colossus placed no restrictions on the company as to the amount of water they might divert, but made it conditional that the beauty of the falls should not be injured, which was characteristic of him.

Since that time Sir Charles Metcalfe, the famous engineer has visited the falls and reported favorably on the plan of "harnessing" them, and the Africa Trust and the Chartered Company have joined forces and now are all ready to spend $5,000,000 on the installation.

A commission of electrical engineers which may include two or three Americans, is now preparing to leave England to make all arrangements for putting in the plant as soon as the machinery can reach the falls. That will be when Rhodes' Cape to Cairo Railway, over which the material will have to be sent, is built up to the great cataract. The line is now laid for 40 miles north of Buluwayo, but the falls lie 275 miles farther on, and probably that distance will not be covered much before the end of next year.

The country over which the railroad will have to be built before it reaches the falls, is about the most difficult its engineers have had to tackle yet—a mass of hills and hollows of hard basaltic rock like that which forms the canyon of the Zambesi. In the swampy land near by, malaria is rampant, and the dense forests which stretch away in the direction of civilization are the deadly "tsetse" fly's happiest hunting ground.

The men who are to build the power plant at the Victoria Falls probably will have as many close calls from wild beasts as those who have been working on the Cape to Cairo Railroad and telegraph line, have had, but they are not likely to have any trouble with the natives.

A Simple Cure for Earache.

"I am afraid I have greatly interfered with my own practice," said a celebrated aurist, "by giving the following advice to many of my friends:

"At the first symptoms of earache let the patient lie on the bed with the painful ear uppermost. Fold a thick towel, and tuck it around the neck; then with a teaspoon fill the ear with warm water.

"Continue doing this for fifteen or twenty minutes. The water will fill the ear orifice and flow over on the towel. Afterward turn over the head, let the water run out and plug the ear with warm glycerine and cotton.

"This may be done every hour until relief is obtained. It is an almost invariable cure and has saved many cases of acute inflammation. The water should be quite warm but not too hot."—London Tit-Bits.

THE PUBLIC should bear in mind that Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil has nothing in common with the impure, deteriorating class of so-called medicinal oils. It is eminently pure and really efficacious—relieving pain and lameness, stiffness of the joints and muscles, and sores or hurts, besides being an excellent specific for rheumatism, coughs and bronchial complaints.

Many beds have the appearance of comfort, but no amount of clothing can warm a cold heart.

A WONDERFUL CURE.—Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly to cure the sore but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, so I got a bottle and when I had used about one-half, the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done, it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very bilious habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. But since using 3 bottles of the Vegetable Discovery, the billiousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 60 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know."

Half fare on the railroad is the next best thing to a pass.

The Flagging Energies Revived.—Constant application to business is a tax upon the energies, and if there be not relaxation, lassitude and depression are sure to intervene. These comes from stomachic troubles. The want of exercise brings on nervous irregularities, and the stomach ceases to assimilate food properly. In this condition Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will be found a recuperative of rare powder, restoring the organs to healthful action, dispelling depression, and reviving the flagging energies.

The man who can keep his mouth shut has the best of the argument with all women.

Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial is a speedy cure for dysentery, diarrhoea, cholera, summer complaint, sea sickness and complaints incidental to children teething. It gives immediate relief to those suffering from the effects of indiscretion in eating unripe fruit, cucumbers, etc. It acts with wonderful rapidity and never fails to conquer the disease. No one need fear cholera if they have a bottle of this medicine convenient.

Sometimes the most charitable view of others is that they ought to be in the insane asylum.

Sleeplessness.—When the nerves are unstrung and the whole body given up to wretchedness, when the mind is filled with gloom and dismal forebodings, the result of derangement of the digestive organs, sleeplessness comes to add to the distress. If only the subject could sleep, there would be the oblivion for a while and temporary relief. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will not only induce sleep, but will act so beneficially that the subject will wake refreshed and restored to happiness.

The wonder is there are not more kicking horses, since there are so many men who kick without discrimination.

These two desirable qualifications, pleasant to the taste and at the same time effectual, are to be found in Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator, Children like it.

A peppery temper is not a thing to be sneezed at.

When all other preparations fail, try Holloway's Corn Cure. No pain whatever, and no inconvenience in using it.

People who sleep with sin will not be able to wash away the marks of it.

To get relief from indigestion, biliousness, constipation or torpid liver without disturbing the stomach or purging the bowels, take a few doses of Carter's Little Liver Pills, they will please you.

In the British Army 129 officers are qualified as interpreters in French, 106 in Russian, 81 in German, but only one in Dutch.

That tired, languid feeling and dull headache is very disagreeable. Take two of Carter's Little Liver Pills before retiring, and you will find relief. They never fail to do good.

Icebergs in the North Atlantic usually appear about February 15 and are seen more or less frequently until about June 15.

They make one feel as though life was worth living. Take one of Carter's Little Liver Pills after eating; it will relieve dyspepsia, aid digestion, give tone and vigor to the system.

Up to the present slower progress is being made with the construction of the Edward VII. than of any warship built at Davenport.

Nothing so suddenly obstructs the perspiration as sudden transitions from heat to cold. Heat rarifies the blood, quickens the circulation and increases the perspiration, but when these are suddenly checked the consequences must be bad. The most common cause of disease is obstructed perspiration, or what commonly goes by the name of catching cold. Coughs, colds, sore throat, etc., if attended to in time are easily subdued, but if allowed to run their own course generally prove the fore-runner of more dangerous diseases. Nine-tenths of the consumptives date their afflictions from a neglected cold, and the diseases that are caused by wet feet, damp clothes, or exposure are more numerous than are generally supposed. One of the most efficacious medicines for all diseases of the throat and lungs is Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It promotes a free and easy expectoration, which frees the lungs from viscid phlegm by changing the secretions from a diseased to a healthy state.

A GOOD APPLE CROP

LARGE CROP IN CANADA, BUT ONLY HALF A ONE IN THE UNITED STATES.

The apple crop in this province gives promise of being an exceptionally large one, according to reports from the best authorities on the subject.

Mr. W. N. Hutt, of the Department of Agriculture, has just returned from Rochester, where he attended a meeting of the National Packers' Association. He stated that the prospects for a good apple crop throughout Canada were exceptinally good, while in the United States only half a crop was anticipated.

No announcement had yet been made as to what the prices were likely to be, but it was probable that apples would fetch from $1.25 to $1.50 a barrel in the orchard. The crop this year was being based on that of 1896.

A Small Old Boy

Napanee Beaver:—A gentleman who took a trip on the steamer Reindeer last Saturday afternoon tells a story of perhaps the meanest man he ever met. He was about 25 years of age and one of the Picton Old Boys. He had strayed as far as Glenora, and when the steamer left Glen Island it was flagged to go over to Glenora. The "old boy" was the only one to get on there, and the steamer was obliged to go a mile out of her course to pick him up. He was bound for Prinyer's Cove, and when asked by the captain for his fare, kicked vigorously, protesting that 25 cents was too much. After a little discussion the captain offered him his money back, which he gladly took. Next morning he got his breakfast on the steamer, prepared specially, and when the boat arrived at Picton, sneaked off without paying for it. It certainly would be hard to find a meaner man.

Only a few people can mow a lawn so it will look right.

NEW YORKER'S CRAZY ACT

RODE INTO HOTEL COURT AND SAID HE HAD COME FROM HEAVEN.

London, Aug. 10.—D. H. Fanning, of New York, a cabin passenger on the North German Lloyd steamer Friedrich der Grosse which reached Southampton yesterday from New York, July 31, arrived in London yesterday, and was taken to St. Giles' Infirmary this afternoon under the Wandering Lunatic Act. Mr. Fanning is connected with the firm of Hass Bros. of New York City, and his parents are spending the summer at Newport.

Mr. Fanning startled the guests who crowded the court yard of the Hotel Cecil at noon to-day by driving into the court in an automobile and declaring he was the Savior and had just come from Heaven on his machine. He was finally taken to his room by the hotel porters. Mr. Fanning developed a mania on the Friedrich der Grosse on the way over. On the ship he declared he owned all the yachts in the world. Upon Fanning's arrival in London his friends had difficulty to persuade him to leave the railroad station and go to an hotel. This morning he started in an automobile back to the railroad station, saying he was going to run down and kill all the pedestrians he met on the way. He fell in with and picked up an English lance corporal, with whom he drove to the Hotel Cecil.

Mr. Fanning was known to have had a large sum of money in his pocket book when he arrived in London. He threw his money about the streets and returned to the hotel penniless.

QUESTION ANSWERED.

Yes, August Flower still has the largest sale of any medicine in the civilized world. Your mothers and grandmothers never thought of using anything else for Indigestion or Biliousness, Doctors were scarce, and they seldom heard of Appendicitis, Nervous Prostration or Heart Failure, etc. They used August Flower to clean out the system and stop fermentation of undigested food, regulate the action of the liver, stimulate the nervous and organic action of the system, and that is all they took when feeling dull and bad with headaches and other aches. You only need a few doses of Green's August Flower, in liquid form, to make you satisfied there is nothing serious the matter with you. You can get this reliable remedy at R. Templeton & Co's.

ANOTHER SPEECH.

Our orator Premier has been making another speech in London. At the "National Liberal Club," he held forth as follows:

"He did not ask them to put burdens on themselves or depart from the principles of their policy, but he asked them to consider whether or not it was possible within the limits of present legislation to renew the treaty which was made by Mr. Cobden with France, and start on a new principle which might start something between the great Motherland and the colonies. He did not ask them for an answer now, but he asked them not to reject the proposal hastily."

"What does this mean," asks the Mail and Empire, and then proceeds:

"Sir Wilfrid told us in his Ottawa speech of last May that, owing to the laying on of the wheat duties the economic conditions in England had changed, and as a result, he would be in a position, when in London, to make an offer of British preferential trade on our behalf. Now he calmly suggests instead a reciprocity treaty between England and France. One peculiarity of this suggestion is that it calls for a reversion to a system which prevailed from 1862 to 1882, and pronounces this abandoned system 'a new principle.' Another oddity is the fact that the conditions under which the Cobden treaty was made in 1860 have changed. Britain then had concessions to offer, but to-day, as Lord Salisbury has pointed out, she has no leverage whereby a treaty can be successfully demanded. A renewed Cobden treaty could only be forced by re-enacting duties and inviting France to pay in tariff considerations for their removal or their reduction in the interests of French trade. This, however, would be a departure 'from the principles of their policy,' which departure Sir Wilfrid advises England to avoid. It is strange that Sir Wilfrid who in 1897 demanded that Britain should abrogate her treaties with Germany and Belgium, should call for the negotiation of a treaty with France. Stranger still is it that an old treaty between Britain and France should be described as 'a start on a new principle which might start something between the great Motherland and her colonies.' What has the renewal of the Cobden treaty with France—a bargain which gave French brandy and wines a preference in the British market in return for a reduced French tariff on British manufactures—to do with trade between the great Motherland and the colonies? Does Sir Wilfrid mean that if we are to have inter-British preferential trade, we must begin with France?

"Sir Wilfrid was evidently catering, but upon a false assumption, to his entertainers, with a view to winning their applause. No doubt he made them laugh. But there is no room for humor in this country when our representative passes to London pledged to secure us preferential trade, and solemnly advocates a treaty with France, and lower duties on French brandy, instead.

Now it will be in order for the Toronto Globe to declare that any comment upon such nonsense as uttered "is a poor imitation of the "chaff of the London bus drivers," and that it "is only the opinion of "one man —or boy." The fact is Sir Wilfrid talks too much with his mouth.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Congratulations to Rev. Dr. Crothers, whose patriotic address last night in Bridge St. is the talk of the city to-day. We hereby move that the Doctor, in recognition of his eloquent effort, be given the privilege of laying the corner stone of the new fence around the old d.s.b.g.

• • •

When it comes to singing patriotic songs, well, Mr. S. Burrows is in a class by himself. He sings with the same earnestness that he talks life insurance, and that's no fleeting jest, either.

• • •

Don't forget, ladies and gentlemen, that Belleville's coronation celebration comes off this evening. The finest display of fireworks ever seen in this city will be turned loose, the Band will play its sweetest and everybody will have a chance to throw up his hat, stick out his chest and sing the National Anthem with a chorus of anywhere from two to ten thousand people. Patriotism of all sorts will be on tap, the fireworks will be magnificent, and we'll tell you another reason why you should give the affair your patronage.

• • •

The gentlemen who engineered the proposed celebration on June 26 went behind many dollars owing to the unfortunate postponement. If there is a good attendance at the Driving Park to-night it will, though not altogether covering the loss, go a long way towards it. Turn out and enjoy yourself and give them a hand. We all applauded their efforts when they were working hard to get up the celebration. Don't leave them in the lurch now there is a chance to help them cover some of the loss. The price of admission is small, and there will be a barrel of fun. We'll see you there with all your female relatives (or somebody else's), with a Union Jack in your button-hole, and with your voice tuned up in the key of G.

• • •

People who on Saturday wanted to read the account of the King's coronation had to get The Intelligencer to do it, as the despatches describing it were printed in no other Belleville paper. Those despatches come high, but our readers must have them.

• • •

The net debt of Canada, June 30, 1901, was $261,163,500. The net debt of Canada, June 30, 1902, was $264,169,898. Readers may figure out for themselves the amount of Mr. Fielding's surplus for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902.

• • •

William Jennings Bryan, the 16 to 1 Democrat, says he is satisfied to live as a private citizen. Judging by the fact that he has been twice defeated it is evident that the U. S. people are also satisfied with the same condition of affairs.

• • •

Quite a few of Belleville's ministers are now off on their vacations. As fishing is one of their favorite amusements there can be no harm in the wish that their lines may be cast in pleasant places.

• • •

It is to be hoped the Aldermen will not let any oratorical fireworks in the Council Chamber keep them from witnessing the coronation fireworks on the Driving Park. Things of that kind should never be allowed to clash.

• • •

The Toronto Telegram makes this touching remark: "A system of getting heat without coal would save Canada more money next winter than the Marconi system of getting telegraphy without wires."

• • •

Complaints are made of the quality of the street light furnished the City nowadays by the Trenton Electric Company. Some of the street lamps give nothing but a dull red glow where there should be a bright white light. As pointed out by the Light Inspector the other day, the Company give power in plenty; the trouble is that many of the lamps have outlived their usefulness and should be changed.

• • •

The contract between the City and the Trenton Electric Company provides that the lamps are to be changed after they have been burned 800 hours. This would mean, taking 10 hours per night as the average winter and summer burning of our street lights, that the lamps should be changed about every three months. Has this agreement been carried out? Let's have a little light on this question. It may result in better light on the streets.

• • •

This is the fourteenth week of the coal strike, and the end is not yet in sight. The expenses are running up and the worst of it is that in the end the poor consumer will have to pay them.

• • •

Having given Osborne House to the people of Great Britain, the least the King might do would be to give Belleville a bathing house.

God Save the King. If deep down in your heart you feel the force of these words, come to the Driving Park this evening and join with Belleville's loyal citizens in singing "God Save our Gracious King!"

Some people's only recommendation is that they do as they agree to. But others haven't even that.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh), that can not be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

YACHTING.

Trident Has Now Two Races to Her Credit.

Montreal, Aug. 9.—Trident scored her second win in the Seawanhaka Cup races to-day. Her actual lead was 4.11, but she had to make up a handicap of 2.48, which she lost through an error of her skipper. He mistook the starting signals and was cruising about some distance from the line when Tecumseh crossed. The first leg was a beat and Trident, after a series of short boards, got on even terms half way to the buoy and led by 1.10 at the turn. Her great power of eating into the wind was the feature of the race, but she increased her advantage in every point of sailing except the run home. She was, moreover, handled better, her crew being much smarter with the head sails. After the first leg the race was uninteresting, as Tecumseh was hopelessly outdistanced.

SPORTING NOTES.

The Torontos beat the Montrealers at lacrosse on Saturday, the score being 4-2. The game was a very rough one, being played according to Queensberry rules.

Toronto's Eastern League ball team looks like the coming champions. The team has a percentage of 666 and is in fine shape.

Oshawa beat Port Hope at lacrosse on Saturday, and is now in the semi-finals of the C.L.A. intermediate championship.

The reason Trident was beaten in last Friday's race is said to be because her planking was sprung, the result being that she shipped half a ton of water, which proved to be too big a handicap.

The Winnipeg four won the international race at Lake Quinsigamond, Mass., on Saturday, the Ariel Rowing Club, of Baltimore, being second. Titus, who was beaten at Henley for the Diamond Sculls, easily rowed away from all competitors in the single sculls.

Staff-Sergt. Hayhurst, of Hamilton, made a great score at a rifle match recently. He won the $25 cup for the highest individual score in the Walker Challenge Cup match, and in sixteen shots, 500 and 600 yards, he made fifteen bullseyes and one inner.

Every loyal citizen, who can possibly attend this evening's entertainment at the Driving Park, should be there. This is Belleville's celebration of the Coronation of His Majesty King Edward VII.

Summer Snaps

That we make keep the month of August humming with business—keep our store and our help active. We will make prices very interesting in whatever you want.

TAKE STATIONERY

For example. We are offering better bargains in stationery to-day than can be found in any departmental store bargain counter in Canada. Come, see for yourselves, be satisfied and convinced. Envelopes 5 packages for 10c means less than 1c per dozen, and good quality, too. We don't place trash before our customers. We don't keep trash in this store—you'll have to find it elsewhere. But our prices for respectable goods will be as low as others will ask you for the trash.

OUR BARGAIN COUNTERS.

Eight big bargain counters, with bigger values than ever before. You will be surprised to find $2.00 ladies' belts on the 25c table, and we keep replenishing these tables all the time, they are never allowed to lag. We will talk school books again shortly.

THE KING'S DINNER.

Contrast With the Gorgeous Indian Durbar—The New World's Chance—An Impressive Scene.

I have spoken of the extraordinary scene of Oriental opulence and magnificence which greeted the Prince and Princess of Wales on Friday night, and on Saturday the great stage manager of this universe turned the glass on a scene which from force of contrast with that of the preceding night could not be surpassed, writes Lally Bernard, the Special Coronation correspondent of The Toronto Globe, to her paper on July 7. The half million guests whom His Majesty had bidden to partake of his hospitality were visited by all the members of the royal family, who spent the hottest hours of the day witnessing sights and scenes in the east end and poor parishes of London, which must forever remain stamped on their memory. I regret greatly that the colonial Premiers and representatives of the empire beyond the seas had not been able to take this opportunity of speaking to the assembled guests on the advantages of seeking homes were dinner was a meal of daily occurrence to the mass of the people. Here in this great maelstrom of human luxury and intense human suffering one always has the horrible sensation that all the work being done by the people within the great metropolis to alleviate the condition of the "submerged tenth" of which General Booth erote so strongly is useless and inadequate, and only serves to lower the vitality and the possible independence of the people upon which it is bestowed. There is nothing but "migration," as Mr. George Wyndham so well put it, and migration on an enormous scale, which will remedy the evil from which the great centres of human attraction seem to suffer. One never passes Trafalgar Square without a shudder at the contrast between the magnificent impressiveness of the great space, the fountains, and the immense column, and the degradation of the human types which seem in their utter hopelessness to defile the beauty of the historic spot.

The dinner to the poor subjects of the King of Great Britain, the Emperor of vast India, and the sovereign lord of the greater Britain beyond the seas brought to light, and concentrated as it were, upon the human mind the terrible condition which is a sore, an unclean ulcer, on the glory of the Imperial radiance of the moment. All through London landmarks are vanishing, and crumbling walls are being pulled down to let in God's air and sunlight, and even as the handiwork of ages past makes way for new paths and wholesome habitations, so also new methods must be called into existence to remedy the present conditions of the masses in London. What the Princes and Princesses and their suites thought of the guests of the King's dinner party on Saturday I am curious to know. Vicious poverty shows itself abroad in frequented parts of London daily and hourly, but on Saturday I saw a gathering which brought a sickening sense of horror to a mind accustomed to the conditions which govern the lives of the mass of our people in the colonies, and in Canada particularly. Hunger which has become habitual, hunger of the senses as well as the purely physical sensation, is a terrible condition to face when you see it reflected in thousands of countenances. The great Canadian arch on Constitutional Hill is daily visited by flocks of pigeons and birds, who feed on the choicest samples of grain from the western prairies, and I have spoken of the gaunt, sodden, hopeless faces of the London loafers, who gather about it open-mouthed, possibly realizing but little what a grain wheat means in the composition of sturdy manhood. Of one thing I feel certain, such a gathering as the King brought about on Saturday, must leave its mark on the national history, just as surely as will the deliberations of the colonial Premiers, now in progress. The men and women of note who visited with the members of the royal family those strange dinner tables, will take away with them an ineffaceable impression of the degradation of humanity which comes from the overcrowding of these large centres of so-called civilization, and legislation must look into the matter, and prevent the continuance of this unspeakable blot on British civilization.

There were such a number of curious and altogether unrehearsed effects. Surely the test of the grade of civilized man may in a measure be guaged by the manner in which food is consumed. Political and royal celebrities are accustomed only to watch the crowds as they are whirled by them in their carriages, but on this occasion the faces of the men, women and children consuming the good things provided for them were a study worthy of a pencil like Hogarth's. It was strange, unutterably sad, and gave one a feeling that with all our facilities for transportation, with all our wealth of soil and its fertility and richness, we of the Newer Britain have been sadly incompetent or ineffective in our methods of reaching the bulk of humanity for whom the great heritage is waiting in the lands beyond the seas. No glory that Britain can boast of can efface the memory of those faces and to the colonials who witnessed the distribution of the King's bounty there will come a renewed sense of the responsibility of the new world to the old, and an increased determination to guard our own countries by preventive measures against the overcrowding of human centres and the consequent suffering and degradation of the human race. Those who have advocated agriculture and rural life from a general disposition towards country existence and its pleasures must feel after this date a more earnest and determined purpose underlying their advocacy of agricultural pursuits.

No Sign of Frost.

Winnipeg, Man., Aug. 11.—The weather yesterday was cool and damp. It was clear last night and no signs of frost. Wheat cutting has started at Emerson and will be general on Wednesday.

Double Drowning.

St. John's, N.B., Aug. 11.—A double drowning marred the coronation celebration here, on Saturday. Chester McCluskey and Walter Pynes, two bright young men, lost their lives in Loch Lomond, ten miles from the city. They were in a small boat competing in a race when a squall struck their boat and upset it. The wind was blowing a gale at the time, and they were drowned before a rescuing party could reach them.

She Gained Eleven Pounds

AND WAS BROUGHT BACK FROM NERVOUS PROSTRATION TO HEALTH AND STRENGTH BY USING

There is no faith cure about Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. You do not need to imagine it is doing good. You can prove it by keeping a record of your weight. This food cure acts in a perfectly natural way. In fact, it is nature's own cure, and is composed of the most powerful restoratives and invigorators that science has yet discovered.

Take the case of Mrs. West, as described in her letter quoted below. She was pale, weak and run down in health. Her blood was thin and watery, and her nerves so starved and exhausted that she was prostrated. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food cured her, and added new, firm flesh to her body to the extent of eleven pounds. You will find her letter interesting.

Mrs. S. W. West, Drayton, Wellington County, Ont., writes: "About two years ago I got terribly run down and finally became a victim of nervous prostration. I had no appetite, seemed to lose interest and ambition and could scarcely drag myself about. Hearing of good results from the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, I used three boxes with great benefit. In a short time I gained eleven pounds, and as I was very thin when I began to use the remedy, I was very proud of the increase of weight.

"Then the following spring I became rather poorly, and they again built me up, and gave me such a good appetite that I wanted to eat nearly half the time. I was so pleased with the cure the Nerve Food brought about that I recommended it to others, and they have told me of the benefits they had obtained from this preparation. You may use this testimonial in order that others may learn of the good there is in Dr. Chase's Nerve Food."

If you have been affected as Mrs. West has, if you are not feeling real strong and well, you will be surprised at the good that Dr. Chase's Nerve Food will do you. It puts color in the cheeks, rounds out angular and wasted forms, and brings new hopes, new confidence and new life to take the place of despondency, weakness and disease. 50 cents a box, 6 boxes for $2.50, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

HIS DOMESTIC LIFE.

"THE PRIVATE LIFE OF EDWARD VII.," A RECENT PUBLICATION.

An Affectionate Husband and a Loving Father Who Has Never Received Full Credit for These Qualities—As a Churchman—About His Clothes—What His Majesty Eats and Drinks.

A recent publication entitled "The Private Life of Edward VII.," by a member of the royal household, contains many interesting facts pertaining to the domestic life of the King. The writer speaks of the King as an affectionate husband and a loving father, who has never received full credit for these qualities. The book, which first appeared when the King was still Prince of Wales, says of him:—

"The romantic love that induced him, when little more than a boy, to overcome all obstacles to his union with Princess Alexandra of Denmark, has never waned. During the illness which in the late sixties kept her for many months bound to her couch, his devoted attention to her slightest wish, his grief at her sufferings and his delight at her restoration to health, were proofs of his sincere affection. It was practically at the Prince's instigation that the long holiday that followed her convalescence in Egypt, Palestine, Turkey and Greece was planned, and he more than once expressed his delight that the journey, which lasted for many months, proved so successful in restoring the Princess to complete health.

"The same touching affection which existed between the Prince and Princess of Wales was again displayed during his own illness, when her Royal Highness scarcely ever left her husband's bedside. Other trials that must come to all people who undertake to journey through life together, be they Princes or peasants, have only served to draw closer the bonds of affection that unite the royal pair."

Under the head "The Prince is a Churchman," the writer says:—

"When the Prince of Wales was quite a young man traveling abroad, and while the love of sport of all kinds was running high in his veins, a friend of his, hoping to give him pleasure, proposed to arrange a shooting expedition for a particular date. The offer was exceedingly tempting, but the Prince, after a moment's grave thought, replied, 'It is impossible that I should come, for the date you mention falls on a Sunday.'

"The keynote of the Prince's observance of that day is struck in those simple words. From his youth up he has of his own free will, and out of his firm convictions, kept Sunday apart as a day that should be devoted to religious exercises, quiet family life, and such occupations as entail the least labor on those who are in his service. Sunday at Sandringham is, in fact, the ideal day of the English country gentleman. A holy peace and calm reign over the whole estate, and the air that during the week rings with shots from sportsmen's guns, and the whir of the latest improvements in agricultural machinery, is broken only by the sound of the bells ringing the royal household, and the peasants alike to service in the little church that stands within bowshot of Sandringham House.

"When the establishment at Sandringham is in full swing the list of visitors who are invited to stay there from Saturday till Monday, generally includes a notable divine, who is expected to preach on Sunday. Men of almost all opinions have stood up in the carved pulpit, but the Prince follows the Queen's example in preferring short to lengthy sermons. At the same time, whether the preacher be brilliant or dull, the demeanor of the royal family in church sets an excellent example to the rest of the congregation. The Prince's natural gravity is always heightened at these times, and he is most attentive to and observant of the entire service. The Princess of Wales' devotion when in church is most touching. Prince Eddy, whose likeness to his mother, extended to more than outward resemblance, was always very thoughtful and attentive, and the young Princesses follow the service with devout attention."

A chapter of the book is devoted to "The Prince and His Clothes." In this chapter it is made known that the tailor whom the King employed so many years, and whose popularity was established by the Prince of Wales' patronage, owed his own fortune to a slight incident. The writer says that Albert Edward was at the theatre one night to see Fechter as Robert Macaire. "The adventurer's coat was apparently a mass of rents and patches, but the Prince's keen eye quickly noted that the garment was singularly well cut. After the play the King sent for Fechter and asked him who his tailor was." The actor told where his coat had been made, and the next day the tailor received an order to call on the Prince of Wales, "and," as the author puts it, "from that hour he was a made man." He adds:—

"The Duke of Clarence had great faith in the Prince's taste, and always modelled his dress on that of his royal father. The Duke of York's taste is also largely ruled by that of the Prince of Wales.

"When the Prince requires new clothes, patterns of materials are sent to him. He has a correct eye for effect, and can tell at once how a piece of stuff will look when made up, which is in itself an art. He takes a very few minutes to make up his mind, always chooses a soft, light material, and for country clothes and 'ditto' suits has a partiality for broken checks. He also makes up his mind with commendable quickness as to fit and alterations. About the former he is most particular, though his clothes are made of a sensible looseness. The Prince's extraordinary memory has also served him more than once with regard to minor details of his wardrobe. On one occasion when some trousers were accidentally made from a material that he had not chosen he immediately found out the mistake although he had only once seen the pattern of the material he had ordered."

Under the head "What the Prince Eats and Drinks," the writer shows that Edward VII. pays much attention to this subject:—

"When the Prince arrives at the opera for early performances, such as those of Wagner's great cycle, which commence as early as 6.30, his Royal Highness is seen in his omnibus box as the curtain rises, and a short dinner is served to him in his private room at the back of the box during the twenty minutes' interval between the first and second acts of the performance. This brief meal is followed by a cigarette, and then the Prince is once more in his place."

The writer says also:—

"The Prince has a dislike, which he does not attempt to disguise, to seeing ladies take more than a very little wine; so particular, indeed, is he on this point that iced punch and the various sherbets, all of which are flavored strongly with liqueurs and spirits and by his express orders seldom found on the Marlborough House menu. The Princess and her daughters set an example of extreme moderation. The Prince also greatly disapproves of the fashion that prevails in some country houses of sending champagne and other pick-me-ups, to the ladies' dressing-rooms. Except in cases of rare necessity such a thing is never done at Sandringham.

"It is largely owing to the fact that the Prince likes to smoke when he has finished dining that after-dinner drinking has gone entirely out of fashion during the last twenty years; for what is done at the Prince's table rules in all classes of society. As soon after dinner as is possible cigarettes are handed round, a practice which must be attributed to royal influence. The Prince popularized cigarettes some years ago."

The book contains chapters on the King as a Free Mason, as a son, and on various other topics.

SAFEST PLACE ON EARTH.

Not One Passenger Killed on English Railway Trains in a Year.

The Board of Trade returns of railway casualties in the United Kingdom during 1901 show that in the course of that year out of the millions and millions of passengers whirled along behind the iron horse not a single one met his death through an accident to a train. And it speaks eloquently for the arrangements of the companies, the care and skill of their servants, and the soundness of their material that this record, as it is, should be established at a time when services are fuller, speeds faster, and travelers more numerous than at any previous time since George Stephenson's great invention was put to general public use. It is true that there were mishaps, and that some persons were killed and many injured, but not one of the former was a passenger, and the number of the latter was about 400 short of the corresponding figure for 1900. To be exact, during last year accidents to trains, rolling stock, permanent way, etc., were responsible for the death of eight railway servants and three persons other than passengers, and for injuries to a total of 637, out of whom 476 were members of the public.

It is evident that if anyone is going to have anything at all to do with railways, one is safest on a train that is on the move, for in the course of the year 135 passengers were killed and 1,669 injured by falling between carriages and platforms, getting into or out of compartments, tumbling on to the lines or crossing them at inopportune moments, or in other ways that could easily have been avoided by the exercise of a little care and prudence. All casualties whatever on railways or the premises appertaining to them, including those affecting employes, caused the deaths of 1,171 persons and injuries to 6,740 others. Nor does the board omit to record that during the twelve months 25 horses, 3 donkeys, 30 bulls and cows, 125 sheep, 6 pigs, 3 dogs, and 1 deer strayed on to the lines with effects disastrous to themselves.—London Telegraph.

English as She Is Wrote.

The gradual spread of the English language leads sometimes to curious results. Take, for instance, the following, which recently appeared in an English paper printed in Korea: —"Seoul, Korea, May 23, 1902.—Lately the police headquarters ordered to forbid the servants, &c to run the horses fastly on the big streets, as they sometimes pressed the children down and hurt them on the ground and the police stopped a mapoo running a horse hardly on its back, but a number of soldiers came along quickly and captured the police away." Compare the foregoing with the choice English of the modern American newspaper, as expressed in a recent issue of The Girard, Ill., Weekly Observer, in the following sentences:—

"There is a mad dog scare here at present. Every dog that acts like he had wheels in his head is killed. Three dogs, one old cat, and an old rooster has been killed that was claimed to have been bitten.

Oriental Logic.

A man brought three pounds of meat and brought it home to his wife to cook for dinner, and then went his way to his place of business in the bazaars. The wife was hungry and ate the meat.

In the evening the man came home and asked for his dinner.

"There is no meat," said his wife, "for the cat ate it."

"Bring the cat," said the man, "and a pair of scales."

"Weigh the cat," said the man. The cat weighed three pounds.

"If this is the cat," said the man, "where is the meat? And if this is the meat, where is the cat?"

Helping a Sculptor.

When Macmonnies, the American sculptor, was a young man working in Paris, Falguiere, the famous French sculptor, on one occasion entered his atelier and found there a beautiful Diana that had been for months "on the stocks" and was approaching a perfection measurably satisfactory to the sculptor himself.

Falguiere became so absorbed in the work before him as to forget that it was not his own. He began to twist and pull the dainty limbs of Diana this way and that, to punch her in the ribs, turn her queenly head—for she was then only in clay, of course, and susceptible to impressions—until at last he had produced the very pose he desired. "There, my friend; I like her better so," he cried and skipped out of the studio.

He had really intended to do Macmonnies a favor and had indeed paid him the greatest compliment of which he was capable, but the young sculptor was in distress, for on comparing the remodeled Diana with a photograph of Falguiere's statue of the same character he found the Frenchman had unconsciously made a practical replica of the other. Macmonnies did not rest until he had restored his statue to its original pose.

A Literary Kleptomaniac.

Among French writers no one carried the profession of the literary brigand to such an extent as Mme. de Genlis. In 1830 her evil ways brought her into the courts of law under very discreditable circumstances. Bout, the publisher of a series of manuals, engaged her for the sum of £16 to write a "Manuel Encyclopedique de l'Enfance." The manuscript, which had been paid for, was on the point of being printed when it was discovered to be an exact copy of a book of the same kind published in 1820 by M. Dasscha. I do not find it easy to understand the audacity of a writer who would perpetrate a fraud of such enormity or the imbecility which would suppose that it would not easily be detected.

Another time she contributed to a Paris newspaper a feuilleton which turned out to be a close reproduction of a romance printed some twenty years before. Surely the poor woman suffered from literary kleptomania

FAIRY GOLD

BY BERTHA M. CLAY

—Author of—

"A Woman's Vengeance," "Between Two Loves,"
"Her Second Love," "A Fatal Wedding," Etc.

and Brussels—"to the Continent," as her uncle Silas says grandly—their stay at the Hotel Morval on their way home, the quiet evening walks through the narrow paved streets and on the old pier, and the pleasanter rambles through the ancient Haute-Ville and on the wooded grassy ramparts, and the stolen visits to the old Cathedral in the twilight, with its glimmering tapers and the faint incense-odors stealing through the shadowy aisles.

And pleasanter, best, and brightest memory of all is that of the golden afternoon in the Valee de Naque, of that lonely, lovely walk by the mill-stream, through the purple blossoms of the wild mint and the yellow autumn leaves drifting about at their feet; and then the evening drive home, by the road above the cliffs, with the cool sea breeze blowing in from the Channel and the pleasant sea-smell of the weed-grown beach just left by the outgoing tide; then the dance and supper later on, and, latest of all, Captain Glynne's taking her down from the hot, brilliantly-lighted salon to the cool quiet entrance-hall to say "good-bye."

CHAPTER VII.

Yolande is thinking of the happy past as, a week later, she walks up and down the garden-paths at home. This beautiful strange dream of a day's supreme happiness—how unreal it all seems!

They are all settled once more at home at Fair View—though why the place is called Fair View it would be difficult to say, for there is no view whatever from the windows, except that of a flat field bordered by a thick belt of fir-trees which hedge it from the high-road.

Cousin Wilmot and aunt Sarjent are to dine with them this evening; and Yolande shrinks from the thought with a restless feeling of discomfort and apprehension.

Mrs. Sarjent, who is really not an aunt, but a cousin, and only so termed from motives of convenience and politeness, is the widow of the jam and pickle maker. She is a big, comely, blowzy woman of about fifty-four, a person from whom one naturally draws back, for she tramples on one's pet corns and one's pet prejudices alike, and then laughs when her victims writhe. She is vulgar, Mrs. Sarjent's friends admit; but she is a good-hearted creature"—that is to say, possessing plenty of money and robust health. Mrs. Sarjent has the good temper and high spirits of a well-fed, comfortable, pampered animal.

Yolande blushes to think how ashamed she will be if aunt Sarjent appears this evening before mademoiselle in her peony satin, trimmed with yards upon yards of white imitation lace, and enough old-fashioned, well-polished gold ornaments about her to stock a small shop. Mademoiselle Gantier is a young lady of most aesthetic tastes—at least, so she declares—and is most unsparing in her criticisms of "bad style" and "bad form." She is just becoming a genteel incubus on the lives of her employers; but they never dream of questioning her authority or resenting her interference.

She is coming along the espaliered walk now, and Yolande hurries to meet her in some trepidation, fearing that mademoiselle is not in the best of tempers.

"Your aunt Sarjent has come, Yolande," she says sharply, without a trace of her French accent, "and Mr. Sarjent is coming down from town with your uncle and Viscount Glynne, and—Ciel!—that parlour maid has as much notion of her duties as a Patagonian! I really don't believe," the quondam Miss Glover says impressively, to mark her sense of the parlour-maid's crass and deplorable ignorance, "that she knows what a menu is! I am positive she did not know what those new Japanese fan-holders were for!"

"I dare say not," admits Yolande quietly, but reddening a little. "We never had such a thing as a menu on our dinner-table until a very short time ago, when we grew rich."

"Hadn't you indeed, dear?" mademoiselle says, gratified to see that Yolande is flushing a deeper crimson every moment.

"Is Viscount Glynne really coming down to dinner with uncle Silas and cousin Wilmot?" Yolande asks, incredulous, and fairly trembling with mingled fear and gladness. "I did not know that uncle had any acquaintance with Viscount Glynne till that day we met him at the picnic. How did you hear of it, mademoiselle?"

To Yolande's simple mind mademoiselle seems to possess an amount of actual omniscience. It never once dawns on the girl's trustful soul that the ci-devant Bella Glover announces results before they are accomplished, and, when a lie can fill a gap in any piece of information, always neatly fills it.

"Miss Dormer had a telegram half an hour ago," mademoiselle replies, with a mysterious smile. "Besides, I am not in the least astonished, ma chere. I quite believed, from something he said to me, that he would be likely soon to renew the acquaintance with your family."

She sees that Yolande's white eyelids are drooping consciously and she is hanging her head and blushing like "a rose in June," and the sneer on mademoiselle's long, thin mouth and the light in her hard eyes grows very pronounced.

"What did he say, mademoiselle?" Yolande asks, laughing a little, though she trembles with agitation.

"I mustn't tell!" Miss Bella replies, with a discreet shake of the head. "But I am not at all surprised he is coming here, cherie. The Viscount is a thoroughly sensible man of the world and a man of the highest principles, and sense of honour."

"Yes?" innocent Yolande says, drinking it all in, and listening to the oracle with parted lips and eager eyes. "Do you think he is a nice, kind man, mademoiselle? Really, I did not quite like him," she adds remorsefully.

"He is a gentleman, my dear," mademoiselle replies, in a tone that admits of no doubt whatever. "But I am not sure that le beau Capitaine will be here this evening, Yolande," she resumes, in a business-like tone. "In fact, I think not. The Viscount will prefer to make his first visits without him, you see," the young woman continues. "It is a serious matter when an aristocratic and noble family like the Pentreaths contemplate a marriage alliance. There must be certain formalities of etiquette observed, the same as if you were going to marry one of the blood royal! He is a fairy prince, you know, and you are a great heiress, so it is much the ~~same thing!"~~

"Don't be so absurd, mademoiselle!" Yolande says angrily, turning away hot and offended. "I must go in and speak to Aunt Sarjent."

"I did not intend to displease you," mademoiselle says, in a melancholy voice; "but I really do not think that Captain Glynne will come with the Viscount."

Yolande blushes more hotly and angrily than ever at the insinuation of the cause of her displeasure.

"I am quite sure he will not," she rejoins, trying to laugh it off carelessly. "He is not in London all this time, you know. Besides, he told me he should go down to Wales at once; he had so much to do in canvassing for his cousin's election. He is at Pentreath hard at work by this time, I dare say."

• • • • • • • • • •

In a large drawing-rrom at Pentreath Place, a huge, grand, and gloomy apartment, which, however, is looking its best just now with a couple of inlaid Japanese screens making a cosy circle of firelight and warmth around the great marble hearth, and in a ruddy glow, there is a picturesque merry party of young men and girls enjoying afternoon tea. They have just returned from a long mountain excursion, and now, chaperoned by a couple of gay young matrons in the most charming of silk tea-gowns and coquettish caps, are refreshing themselves before going to dress for dinner.

Poor, weakly, low-spirited Lady Maria is not present; so there is nothing to mar the general good humor and gaiety.

Some of the young men are lounging in the dainty satin-cushioned rocking-chairs, a delightful innovation amongst the prim old-fashioned grandeur of the Pentreath furniture, and entirely due to the influence of the Honourable Mrs. Murray, who is Lady Maria Glynne's aunt. And in the prettiest rocking-chair, all blue satin and gilded wicker-work, reclines pretty Joyce Murray, with her ruffled golden hair laid daintily back and her half-closed blue eyes glinting witchery through her dark lashes at the young man who is lying on the rug at her feet.

"You lazy mortal!" she says mischievously, putting out the tip of one little boot and touching him with it. "One is awfully tempted to tread you under foot and crush you into fragments, Dallas! Do you hear me, or have you fallen asleep? If so, prepare to be trodden under foot and annihilated."

Dallas Glynne looks up at her without raising his head, which is leaning on his hand; and at the tender look the coquettish eyes fall suddenly, and Joyce sways back in her chair with a slight flush and smile. He draws a little nearer, looking up at her still.

"Trample me,
Dear feet, that I have followed
through the world,
And I will pay you worship; tread
me down,
And I will kiss you for it!"

he whispers; and then Dallas Glynne stoops and kisses the dainty booted foot.

"It is so thoughtless of you, Joyce," her mother says, half an hour later, when they were dressing for dinner—"so thoughtless, so positively wrong of you! You are giving the man very good cause to say you treated him badly! He is handsome, gentlemanly, agreeable, and all that, but an utter detrimental, as you know quite as well as I do."

"And he knows it too!" laughs Joyce carelessly.

"My dear child," her mother goes on almost beseechingly, "mischief will come of this—mischief and trouble. Mind, I warn you, Joyce! You are going too far in flirting with Dallas Glynne, when you know, and he knows, you say, that you can never be anything more to each other. I don't believe he thinks so—men are such foolish, selfish, thoughtless creatures when they are in love; and, if he chooses to consider himself your lover, and you get yourself talked about with him, Joyce, you will lose your chance for ever of being Lady Dunavon, as you can easily be—"

"Pooh! An Irish Peer who intends setting up as a model landlord in the 'disthressful counthry'!" Joyce interposes scoffingly, with a delicious little flavor of brogue.

"He has six thousand a year and that charming house at Glenahinch," her mother urges, growing sterner.

"A shooting-lodge!" Joyce retorts, with her saucy dimpled chin upturned.

"And the best chance you have had yet, or are likely to have—a penniless girl who has been 'out' for four years!" Mrs. Murray winds up angrily and warmly. "You are no fool, Joyce, though you choose to behave like one; and you know that Maria will never ask us here again if you manage to offend her prudery or her prejudices. She is crosser and more fidgety than ever of late, and full of complaints against everybody. She even talks of engaging some paragon of a kind confidential attendant, who will have some sympathy with her sufferings! She said so to my face!" Mrs. Murray adds indignantly, adjusting her cap of dark crimson roses and black velvet on her fair grayish shining hair. "And I victimizing myself evening after evening in that hot stuffy room of hers, reading to her and listening to the details of her ailments, and tasting her medicines to please her! There were my thanks!"

"Poor victimized mammie!" Joyce says caressingly. "The Viscountess Maria is a nuisance; and her spouse is my pet detestation among men; and the Earl is an old noodle; and you and I are a pair of genteel paupers, hanging on to their skirts for the sake of our board and lodging—aren't we?"

"We can't help it, Joyce," Mrs. Murray replies mournfully, looking pleadingly at her daughter. "I have nothing but my wretched little settlement of three hundred a year to live on or to leave to you; and unless you marry some one who can put you in your proper position, my poor child, you have nothing better to look forward to than to end as a faded, neglected spinster living in a boarding-house!"

"Dear mother, don't pile up the agony so needlessly high," Joyce says curtly. "I won't be a 'faded, neglected spinster living in a boarding-house.' Cheer up, mammie! If I can't find anyone more to my liking than Lord Dunavon, with money of course"—with a sharp short sigh—"I promise you I'll marry Lord Dunavon before next season!"

CHAPTER VIII.

Yolande's very worst fears are realized. Aunt Sarjent has come to dinner, not in her peony satin and imitation mechlin, but in a more atrocious dress, if possible—a beflounced, befrilled, trailing, rustling gown of salmon pink which has long since lost its freshness, lavishly trimmed with yellow lace in the last stage of limpness and rumple, and her whole set of huge amethysts decorating her wrists and neck, and even stuck amongst the palpably false plaits which are coiled up in a tlise at the back of her head.

"I wish to gracious that my cousin Mrs. Sarjent wouldn't wear such light silks and such a lot of jewelry!" Miss Dormer says confidentially to trusty and sympathetic mademoiselle.

"Madame is not at all good style," agrees mademoiselle, in tones of sadness and regret.

"I don't know what he'll think!" poor Miss Dormer says, seriously ruffled, and never heeding Mademoiselle Bella's light hard eyes, which are twinkling with malicious amusement.

"How peculiar and interesting it is," mademoiselle observes, with modest curiosity, "that a mother and son should have the same Christian names!"

"Yes—odd enough," agrees Miss Dormer carelessly. "We are so used to it that we do not notice it. The firm was always Wilmot Sarjent & Son, you see, mademoiselle, and Wilmot was sole heiress when her brother died, and she is head partner and her son is junior partner—just as it always was."

"Oh, I see," the governess says, with clasped hands of innocent satisfaction. "How interesting! And how grand a thing it must be to inherit great wealth like that, generation after generation!"

"Oh, the firm is not very wealthy! But they do a fair business," Miss Dormer admits, with simple honesty.

"And they are shareholders in this great company as well as Mr. Dormer and Lord Glynne—are they not, madame?" inquires mademoiselle, with the innocent air of one seeking information and instruction. "'The Pacific Salvage Company'—is not that the name?"

"Yes, I think," Miss Dormer answers dubiously, "young Wilmot Sarjent has put money into it, but not his mother. She has no faith in anything but 'real estate and hard cash,' she says. A regular woman of business Mrs. Sarjent is."

(To be continued.)

SUNDAY AFTER CORONATION

Bulletin: "The King's Condition Is Perfectly Satisfactory."

His Majesty Goes to Church in the Chapel Royal—Identical Service at Marlborough House Chapel and a People's Service at St. Paul's Cathedral—Comments of the Newspapers—Whole Empire Rejoiced.

London, Aug. 11.—The festivities in London were continued yesterday. There were considerable crowds almost all day long in the vicinity of Buckingham Palace and along the route of Saturday's procession, viewing the decoration and watching the flow of notable personages to and from the various thanksgiving services. In the evening the Canadian arch, which is an exceptional novelty for Sunday, brilliantly illuminated, was a great centre of attraction, and served to bring an immense concourse of people into its neighborhood. In spite of the welcome announcement made Saturday night that King Edward had borne the coronation day well, yesterday's bulletin concerning his health was awaited with a certain degree of anxiety. Perhaps this is the reason His Majesty's physicians issued the bulletin at the rather unusually early hour of half past nine o'clock. Because of the early hour very few people were about when it was posted at the gates of the palace.

"His Majesty bore the strain of the coronation ceremony perfectly well, and experienced but little fatigue. The King had a good night, and his condition is in every way satisfactory. No further bulletin will be issued. (Signed.) Treves, Laking."

The King Goes to Church.

After the posting of the bulletin, there was still some doubt as to whether His Majesty would drive out yesterday, but the small crowd which remained at Buckingham Palace, hopeful to see the Sovereign, was finally rewarded by the appearance of the King and Queen. Their Majesties were accompanied by Princess Victoria, Prince Charles of Denmark, Prince and Princess Henry of Prussia and the Crown Prince of Denmark. The procession drove along the Mall to St. James' Palace without receiving any notable demonstration from the people. Tickets to the Chapel Royal had been sparingly granted. The choir boys who took part in the service in the chapel were clad in quaint gowns of crimson and gold lace. The service was very simple, and there was no sermon; special prayers for the occasion, however, were read. The service lasted about one hour, and was brought to a close by the congregation, still upon its knees singing slowly and softly the first verse of the National Anthem.

An almost identical service to the one held at the Chapel Royal of St. James' was conducted at Marlborough House Chapel, and attended by the Prince of Wales and his family, and other royal personages. Another official service attended by William Court Gully, speaker of the House of Commons, members of the House and the Ministers, was held at St. Margaret's Church, Westminster. The Mayor and corporation of Westminster in their official robes were present at the service

Most Interesting Service.

The most interesting of all the services, was that held in St. Paul's Cathedral. This was essentially a people's service, and presented a strong contrast to the sad service of supplication held there in June on the day the coronation should have taken place. Yesterday the public was freely admitted to the Cathedral, and the great edifice was crowded with people in every corner. The Lord Mayor of London, Sir Joseph C. Dimsdale, and the corporation of the city, attended in state, and in the choir were seated Princess Henry of Battenberg, the Duchess of Fife, and the Duchess of Albany, with the royal children, a large number of diplomats, including Joseph H. Choate, the United States Ambassador, as well as the Earl of Dudley, Lord Rosebery, the Earl and Countess of Aberdeen, a number of prominent colonial visitors and others. The very elaborate and prolonged service included several of the musical numbers which were performed at Westminster Abbey Saturday and the celebration of holy communion.

Comments of Newspapers.

The newspapers yesterday were rather ridiculous in some of their comments upon the events of Saturday. To read these papers one would imagine that no one ever looked to be in better health than did King Edward, and that never was seen such an array of beautiful and gracious princesses as shared the ceremony. One exception to the foregoing is found in Reynold's Weekly Newspaper, which, whatever its standing, has, nevertheless, a tremendous circulation among the masses, and at least on this occasion it had a good foundation for its description of and attitude of the crowd of Saturday.

The paper acknowledges that "a mighty greeting" was accorded King Edward and Queen Alexandra, but says: "The one man the populace knew and desired to cheer above them all, was Lord Kitchener. He sat on his horse like a centaur, a grim, stern and never smiling figure; a man who had accomplished something. History may rate his achievements poor; but history will have to say he worked. The crowd was not repelled by Lord Kitchener's cold and almost callous indifference; it lavished cheers upon him with a very wealth of profusion."

To-day (Monday) will be celebrated throughout the nation as a day of thanksgiving for the King's recovery.

While the British press is resounding with elaborate descriptions of the coronation ceremony, telegrams are pouring in from every city of the Empire recording sympathetic celebrations and rejoicings.

KING'S GIFT TO NATION.

Presents Osborne House, Sacred to the Memory of Victoria the Good, to the British Nation.

London, Aug. 11.—King Edward has signalized his coronation in a memorable manner by the munificent gift to the nation of Osborne House, one of the favorite residences of the late Queen Victoria.

The gift is made in the following message to his people addressed to Prime Minister Balfour:

"Buckingham Palace, Coronation Day, 1902.—"Under the will of the King's much beloved mother, the Osborne House estate is, as Mr. Balfour is aware, the private estate of the sovereign. Having to spend a considerable part of the year in the capital of this Kingdom and in its neighborhood, at Windsor, and having also strong home ties in the county of Norfolk, which have existed now for nearly 40 years, the King feels he will be unable to make adequate use of Osborne House as a royal residence, and he accordingly has determined to offer the property in the Isle of Wight as a gift to the nation. As Osborne House is sacred to the memory of the late Queen, it is the King's wish that with the exception of those apartments which were in the personal occupation of Her Majesty his people shall always have access to the house which must ever be associated with her beloved name. As regard the rest of the building the King hopes it may be devoted to national purposes and be converted into a convalescent home for officers of the navy and army, whose health has been impaired in rendering service to their country.

"If, in order to give full legal effect to the King's wishes, it is found that application to Parliament be necessary, the King trusts that Mr. Balfour will see that the necessary steps are in due course taken."

HOW CANADA CELEBRATED.

Lord Dundonald superintended the firing of the royal salute at Ottawa.

Halifax had a big regatta and a review of local and Imperial troops.

Besides the morning salute, Winnipeg had a novel water fete.

At London, Ont., union thanksgiving services were held at St. Paul's Cathedral.

A royal salute was fired from Fort Henry, Kingston, and in the afternoon there were games, etc.

Hamilton spent the day half working, half holiday, and the mayor sent cable of congratulations.

Toronto was like Hamilton in doing it half way during the day, but she blazed out on island and mainland in six great bonfires.

Hamilton, Bermuda, held a public holiday regatta, and an imposing display of fireworks in the evening.

St. Johns, Nfld, had special coronation services in all the churches Sunday.

GREAT ALTERATION SALE

For the last year we have been inconvenienced considerably for want of space to show our goods, that our business has grown no one will doubt, and in order to keep pace with its rapid growth we must have more room.

To-day the carpenters will remove our rear store and begin work in earnest. The plumbers are with us busy at their part of the job. We have had to remove all our goods in the rear of the cellar and the front part of our store is also to receive special up-to-date touches. What we ask is that the people of Belleville and vicinity will aid us in getting rid of our crowded stock, and for this end we will hold two weeks sale, goods will be sold so cheap that it will startle the whole community.

Come early. Goods sold out will not be replaced during alterations.

ROLLING MILLS DESTROYED

GUELPH PLANT WAS BEING PREPARED FOR SHIPMENT TO LONDON.

Guelph, Ont., Aug. 10.—The Guelph rolling mills were totally destroyed by fire yesterday morning. The mills are owned by the London Rolling Mills Co., of which Mr. John White is the president. About two months ago the local stock-owners were returned their stock, and the members of the company in London were preparing to remove the plant to that city. The machinery had about all been taken down, and a staff of a dozen men was employed preparing it for shipment. The building was a frame structure. The loss will run up in the thousands. The policies were all allowed to lapse about two months ago, when the companies' rates were increased.

Mixed Hopes And Fears

Manitoba Sees Splendid Harvest But Too Few Laborers.

Provincial Immigration Agent J. J. Golden says, "Reports I Have Received from Eastern Agents Are by No Means Optimistic"—Fares May Have to be Advanced.

Winnipeg, Aug. 12.—No unfavorable reports in regard to the crops were received yesterday morning and, with a splendid crop assured, officials are deeply puzzled over the labor problem. They are doubtful whether the requisite number of harvest hands can be induced to come west this year, and, as a result, it may be found necessary to advance fares of eastern men, in order to gather the harvest.

J. J. Golden, Provincial Immigration Agent, received word from Jos. Burke, who was sent east to secure harvesters, that his work in Quebec had not been too successful. He induced about 200 French-Canadians to come west, and they will arrive in Winnipeg early this week, but low as the fare is to the west they encountered many who are anxious to leave, but who cannot raise enough money to do so.

Mr. Burke will visit Montreal and Three Rivers this week and hopes to induce several hundred more harvesters to visit the west. He says that the harvests in Ontario and Quebec will be late this year, and, as a result there is plenty of work at fair wages in the east.

Mr. Golden, speaking yesterday morning of the situation, said: "We still believe we can get all the laborers we need in the harvest fields from the east, but will not know definitely until the end of the week. The reports I have received from our eastern agents are by no means optimistic.

"Should our expectations not be realized, we will consider the advisability of advancing the fares of laborers. The men will come up under contract and the farmers who employ them can make some arrangements in the matter of refunding to the Government the money advanced. This matter will probably be given consideration by the Government at the close of the present week.

Mr. ~~Golden's~~ reports of the crops yesterday are still of a most favorable nature. The cold weather and rains of the last three days have done practically no injury to wheat. The other grains are in splendid condition in most sections. The C.P.R. weather reports generally indicate cool cloudy weather.

The C. N. R. R. reports is similar. The weather was beautiful and warm last night.

Western Farmers Jubilant.

Winnipeg, Aug. 12.—Yesterday the weather was bright and warm after the recent rains, and will certainly hasten on the ripening of the wheat. Already in several parts of the province cutting has commenced, and, with the present weather, harvesting will have started in many localities by the middle of this week. Reports from all over the province and Territories show that the farmers are jubilant over the prospects.

20 Acres of Wheat Cut.

Dauphin, Man., Aug. 12.—A river farmer cut 20 acres of wheat last week. Considerable cutting will be done in places this week. Barley and oats will be generally cut.

KINGSTON CAPTURED

BY CROWDS OF BAY OF QUINTE EXCURSIONISTS.

Kingston Whig:—Bay of Quinte excursionists, returning from the Thousand Island Park this morning, captured Kingston with a rush. They swarmed off the steamers Varuna and Niagara at half-past eight o'clock, took possession of the street cars, and purchased all the buns, stale bread and gingerpop available. The Belleville portion of the crowd gazed sorrowfully at their former street cars, which have been transformed by the Kingston street railway company.

It took five or six cars to carry the visitors, and one load came near being left behind in a real live city, and missing the journey home to the cemetery (Belleville). The steamer Varuna had gone, and the steamer Niagara was just pulling out when the Belleville girls rushed down to Craig's wharf, emitting the strangest shrieks and war-whoops ever heard here. The boat returned for the late arrivals. The steamer Aletha came up later with another large number of Bay excursionists who went down on Friday.

CITY COUNCIL IN REGULAR SESSION

Petition Presented Asking That Mr. Starling be Reappointed Tax Collector.

Dr. Ross is Now Medical Health Officer, Vice Dr. McKeown, Resigned.

Discussion Waxed Warm and Even Acrimonious at Times—A Lively Tilt.

Like the fireworks on the Driving Park last night, the session of the City Council had many interesting features. The discussion at times waxed warm. A petition was presented from a number of ratepayers asking that the Council reconsider its recent action in appointing Messrs. Diamond and Chisholm Tax Collectors for the roll of 1902, and give the position to Mr. J. H. Starling instead. Dr. Ross was appointed Medical Health Officer, vice Dr. McKeown, resigned, and the Council, after deciding that Queen Victoria avenue should only be repaired to John St., changed its mind and ordered that the repairs be made to Church St. The Mayor sounded a note of warning in regard to the Public Works Committee's appropriation, which had had many heavy inroads on it lately.

Council convened shortly before 8 o'clock. Present: Mayor Graham, Ald. McFee, Panter, Wills, Chown, Galbraith, Price, Sinclair.

The minutes of the previous regular and special meetings were read and, after some slight amendments, confirmed.

Communications.

From a number of ratepayers, setting forth the good work done by Mr. J. H. Starling as Tax Collector, and requesting the Council to reconsider its action of July 26 and appoint Mr. Starling Tax Collector for the rolls of 1902.

From Mr. J. H. Starling requesting that the time for the return of the rolls for 1901 be extended.

From Clute & Morden, asking for return of $5 which had been posted by a client of theirs in regard to opening up a street.

From Dr. McKeown, resigning the position of Medical Health Officer, as he had not the time to attend to it.

The following accounts were presented:

Fred Butler ....$	.75
Marsh & Henthorn	32.05
J. W. Walker	120.31
J. W. Walker	21.93
J. Lewis & Co.	3.25
Trenton Electric Co.	333.51

The communications were all referred to their respective committees with the exception of the letters of Drs. Ross and McKeown, and the accounts of Messrs. Lewis & Co., and the Trenton Electric Co., which were laid on the table.

Reports of Committees.

The reports of the various committees, as already published, were read, and Council went into Committee of the Whole on reports, Ald. McFee in the chair.

The Executive Committee's report was adopted without discussion.

When the Public Works Committee's report came up Ald. Panter called attention to the fact that the last pay sheet and the accounts presented had made deep inroads into the appropriation for his Committee. These remarks were called forth by the recommendation concerning the grading of Queen Victoria avenue.

A discussion ensued as to what parts of Queen Victoria avenue should be graded; also as to the moving and changing of street gullies.

The Street Surveyor was called in and explained matters. Eight gullies needed repairing, at a cost of $6 each.

The Mayor called attention to the fact that the Public Works estimate was going to be overdrawn.

Ald. Chown moved that the eight gullies in question be repaired, as suggested by the Street Surveyor.—Carried.

Ald. Galbraith moved that the grading of Queen Victoria avenue be stopped at John St., from Foster avenue.

Ald. Price moved in amendment that the work stop at Church St.

Ald. Price's amendment was lost and Ald. Galbraith's motion was carried.

Then Ald. Chown called attention to the fact that Queen Victoria Ave. had been picked up by the steam roller between Church and John Sts. If not graded it must be repaired, as it could not remain as it was at present.

Some discussion ensued, and

Ald. Sinclair protested against the action of some members of the Council, who gave preposterous orders to the Street Surveyor which it was impossible for him to carry out. The Street Surveyor knew more about road-building than any of them, and they should defer to his opinion.

Then somebody moved that Queen Victoria avenue be finished to Church St., which carried, while many of the Aldermen smiled audibly.

When the Fire, Water and Light Committee's report came up the Mayor asked how much rebate had been made in the Trenton Electric Company's account.

Ald. McFee—"Sixty cents."

The Mayor said it was so small you could hardly see it. It was evident that some of the street lamps were not being renewed so often as the contract called for, viz., after 800 hours. Did Ald. McFee know anything of the matter?

Ald. McFee said he had spoken to the Electric Light people about the matter, and they had assured him the lights would not burn 800 hours, therefore they could not help but keep their agreement with the city. The trees, he thought, were in the way and prevented the light from being seen.

Some of the Aldermen said the lamps were supposed to be of 32 candle-power, which they certainly were not, in many instances.

The Mayor said he did not see how the company could afford to live up to their agreement. However, that was their business.

The account passed.

Mr. F. D. Diamond's bond, which had been referred to the City Solicitor, and by him returned, was, on motion of Ald. Chown, accepted.

The resignation of Dr. McKeown was accepted.

The committee rose and reported, the report being received and adopted.

Enquiries.

Ald. Sinclair asked when the rolls of 1902 would be placed in the hands of the new collectors.

Ald. Chown said probably at the end of this week, as some of them were ready now.

Ald. Panter asked when the electric light ordered to be placed on the market square, at the entrance to the Post office lane, would be placed in position.

It seemed there had been a difference of opinion between the Chairmen of Markets and Fire, Water and Light, and, as a consequence, the light had not been put up.

Introduction of By-laws.

Ald. Chown moved the suspension of the rules for the introduction, etc., of two by-laws, namely, to extend the time for the return of the Tax rolls of 1901, and to appoint a Medical Health officer.

The first by-law passed without much discussion, the time being extended to October 15.

Ald. Chown was asked if he knew how much was yet uncollected on the roll of 1901, and he said he understood about $30,000.

When the by-law appointing a Medical Health officer came up Ald. Chown moved that the blank be filled in with the name of Dr. Ross, and that the salary be fixed at $75 per year.

The Mayor asked if Dr. Ross' appointment would be agreeable to the Board of Health.

Ald. Chown said the Chairman of the Board of Health had so informed him.

Ald. McFee wanted to know if there might not be some other applicants for the position.

Ald. Wills said no other applications had been received.

Ald. Sinclair said he would like to ask Ald. Wills if this matter had been fixed up in the same manner as another matter had been—in a secret meeting in Ald. Wills' office. He merely asked for information. He had not been invited to the meeting, and would not have attended if he had received an invitation, as he would not be a party to such dirty work. He would like to know if Dr. Yeomans had been given an opportunity to make application for the position.

Ald. Sinclair and Wills glared at each other across the horseshoe. The relations between them were evidently severely strained.

Ald. Wills said Ald. Sinclair was at liberty to ask any question he wished. But when the questions were so manifestly unfair and impertinent as the one just put he declined to answer them.

A long discussion ensued, which was put an end to at last by Ald. Price, who stated that Dr. Yeomans would not take the position at the salary mentioned.

The by-laws were passed through their various stages and numbered.

Motions.

Ald. Price moved that the rules be suspended to allow of the introduction of a motion thanking the gentlemen who had given the city certain privileges in regard to Pine St.—Carried.

Ald. Sinclair moved that the rules be suspended to allow of the introduction of a motion instructing the Chairman of the Executive Committee not to hand over the rolls for 1902 to the new Collectors till the matter of the petition re Mr. Starling had been dealt with. He thought it strange that so largely signed a petition had not been treated with more consideration.

The Mayor said he had referred it to its regular committee, which was the proper course.

The motion to suspend the rules was lost on the following division:

Ayes—Ald. Sinclair, Price, Galbraith, McFee.

Nays—Ald. Panter, Wills and Chown.

A two-thirds vote was required to suspend the rules.

This ended the business, and the Council adjourned.

THE FIREWORKS WERE EXCELLENT

GOOD CROWD PRESENT AT THE CORBY DRIVING PARK LAST NIGHT.

It is estimated that at least 1000 persons were present at the Corby Driving Park last evening to witness the display of fireworks which were intended to be set off on June 26th, the day at first appointed for the coronation of King Edward the Seventh. The evening was somewhat chilly, otherwise it was all that could have been desired for making the display. All appeared to have been well pleased and repaid for attending. The I.O.O.F. Band were present and discoursed a few selections during the evening's entertainment.

The sending up of three variegated paper balloons was a pleasing feature, especially to the younger element present. As they arose and floated in a southerly direction rockets of various colors were discharged making a pretty scene. One of the balloons, alas! came to grief on a wire.

Two of the set pieces were very appropriate and caused considerable enthusiasm. The first was that of a large Maple Leaf which when ignited looked very pretty and the band played "The Maple Leaf Forever," while not a few voices could be heard singing the patriotic song. The final piece represented His Majesty, crowned, and the effect produced was all that could have been desired. The illumination of "God Save The King," and the playing of the National Anthem brought the programme to a close.

The Rev. Dr. Meacham

We are pleased to learn that there is a probability of the Rev. Dr. Geo. Meacham taking up his residence in this city. It seems very appropriate that he should come to live where three generations of Meachams have already dwelt.

FAST LINE TERMINALS.

Hon. Mr. Tarte Boldly Declares For City of Quebec in Summer and For Halifax in Winter.

Montreal, Aug. 12.—Hon. Mr. Tarte left for Halifax last evening via C. P.R. Mr. Clergue of the "Soo" also left by the same train.

"What about the terminals for the fast line," Mr. Tarte was asked.

"At Quebec and Halifax undoubtedly. Quebec in summer and Halifax in winter. Quebec is destined to be the summer port by the nature of things. Why? First of all because the voyage on the lower St. Lawrence is a magnificent one, and is a great drawer of passenger trade, bringing people not only from Western Canada, but also from the Western States. Then Quebec is a great railroad centre, has many lines tributary to it, the C.P.R., the G.T.R., the I.C.R., the Quebec & Lake St. John, the Quebec Central, the Great Northern and other roads."

"You do not favor Sydney, then?"

"For a port of call, yes, for the mails, but who would ever think of taking the cars from here, or Toronto, or Detroit, or Chicago, and putting up with all the dust, heat and inconvenience of a railroad trip there. I am going to Halifax by rail to-day myself, and the thought of it simply makes me sick.

"But the beautiful trip from Quebec down the river, is a treat. Then again you talk of Sydney. It has but one line of railway entering there. What merchant would think of risking his perishable freight there?"

BUILDING FOR THE MINT.

Plans Completed For the Structure at Nepean Point.

Ottawa, Aug. 12.—The plans for the Canadian branch of the Royal Mint, which is to be located on Nepean Point, alongside the Printing Bureau and facing St. Patrick street, are now completed. They were prepared by Chief Architect Evart who visited the United States and Europe last summer to get the best possible information before proceeding with the work. Two features of the building will be endurance and security. It will be one story, with the exception of the part for the office, where the main entrance is placed. This part will be two stories with a basement. The building will be constructed with limestone dressed front. On either side of the main entrance there will be granite columns and above the main entrance will be the coat of arms and the words "Royal Mint." As far as it is possible to make it, the building will be fireproof. The roof will be of expanded iron and floors of concrete and mosaic. It will take two years to complete, and work will be commenced this fall. The size of the building is 177x165 and it is rectangular in form.

EXPOSES SHOCKING CONDITION.

British Transport System Is Scored by a Medical Officer.

Melbourne, Australia, Aug. 12.—Captain Shields, medical officer of the Transport Drayton Grange from South Africa, has made a report, in which he says:

"The overcrowding of the ship was shameful and scandalous and without consideration for health or loss of life. The air was poisonous and foul and the decks were always wet, causing pleurisy and pneumonia."

Captain Shields adds that the supply of medicine on board was absurd, and that the conditions of the ship was directly responsible for the epidemic and deaths on board.

When Palma Team Sails.

London, August 12.—The English team which is to compete for the Palma trophy in Canada will sail by the Beaver line steamship Lake Simcoe to-day. Col. Cross, secretary of the National Rifle Association, accompanies the team. Hon. J. M. Gibson has also taken passage in the Lake Simcoe.

Lord to Wed an American.

Denver, Colo. Aug. 12.—Lord Ogilvy is to be married to a Colorado girl. He is the seconh son of the Scottish Earl of Airlie, and is reported to be quite wealthy. He is to marry Miss Edith Gertrude Boothroyd at the country seat of the bride's parents near Loveland, Colo.

Pioneer White Settler Dead.

Portage La Prairie, Man., Aug. 12.—John McLean, the first white settler of the district, died on Saturday. The deceased was 87 years old and had lived in this district for the past 40 years. He was born in Perthshire, Scotland.

Catholic Church Burned.

Mount Forest, Ont., Aug. 12.—Between 4 and 5 a.m. Sunday St. Mary's R.C. church, this town, was discovered to be on fire. In a short time the fine edifice was gutted and the costly windows, organ and rich interior fittings were consumed.

BUSH FIRES ON VANCOUVER

All the Settlers Are Fighting to Save Their Crops.

Thousands of Feet of Lumber Destroyed—Fire Threatens Houses and Railways Camp of Chinese Residents Consumed—Fires Will Continue Until Rainstorm Comes, of Which There Is No Sign—The Country as Dry as Tinder.

Victoria, B.C., Aug. 12.—Immense bush fires are raging at many points on the island, destroying thousands of feet of lumber, and threatening houses and railways.

Near Chemainus, a logging camp of the Victoria Lumber Company, a camp of the Chinese residents of the village and other property was destroyed, and all day the entire community were fighting to save the schoolhouse and town hall.

The Flenor Railway, running from Mount Sticker to Crofton, was also threatened, but finally saved.

Near Victoria thousands of cords of wood have been burned and fences and barns destroyed.

All over the country the settlers are fighting the fire to keep it out of their crops. Luckily most of the grain is harvested.

The fires must continue to burn until there is a rainstorm, of which there are no signs.

Having been without rain since April, the country is dry as tinder, and it takes very little to start a big blaze.

MURDERER ONLY SIXTEEN.

Frank Higgins Charged With Killing Willie Doherty in St. John.

St. John's, N.B., Aug. 12.—In a crowded court room last night, when the coroner's jury resumed the inquest into the death of Willie Doherty, the 17-year-old lad found dead near Rockwood Park, on Aug. 4, Fred Goodspeed, aged 14, told a terrible story of youthful crime.

He swore that on Aug. 1, he saw Frank Higgins, aged 16, kill Doherty, firing four shots at him, and then pounding him on the head with the revolver butt. Both Higgins and Goodspeed have been under arrest for several days.

The motive for the crime was robbery, as Doherty had some money hid, which he had stolen.

The jury brought in a verdict of murder, charging Higgins with the crime.

COLONIAL CONFERENCE ENDS.

Indications of the Various Resolutions That Were Passed.

London, Aug. 12.—The final meeting of the colonial conference was held yesterday in Joseph Chamberlain's room at the Colonial Office.

Consideration of the commercial relations of the Empire, including preferential tariffs and the general fiscal policy, was continued and a resolution on the subject finally was agreed to.

Another resolution adopted provisions for a uniform system of weights and measures throughout the Empire.

The conference closed with a vote of thanks to Colonial Secretary Chamberlain.

The proceedings of the conference will not be published, but the resolutions adopted will be published shortly in a parliamentary paper.

Cheaper Postage on Newspapers.

London, Aug. 12.—One of the first acts of Mr. Austen Chamberlain as Postmaster-General, will probably be to co-operate with his father in the scheme for the heavy postal subsidy to the new Canadian fast mail service, making the British and Admiralty subventions not far short of $500,000, to add to Canada's expected subsidy of $1,000,000. Mr. Austen Chamberlain is also expected to depart from past British postoffice administrations by establishing a halfpenny newspaper post throughout the Empire, beginning with Canada. The British Ministers have been strongly urged to take this step in order to counteract the alleged anti-British influence upon Canadian opinion of the American journals, which enter Canada at the one-cent rate.

Felt For Many Miles.

Paterson, N. J., Aug. 12.—A tremendous explosion occurred yesterday at the works of the Laflin & Rand Powder Company at Wanaque. The building in which the glaze is put on the powder, blew up, and the shock was felt for many miles. There was nobody in the building at the time, but three men in another part of the plant were hit by flying splinters. It is believed their injuries are not fatal.

STRIKE TO END BY SEPT. 15

Operator of Shenandoah Fixes Date But Not the Method.

A Lively Battle Occurred Between Deputies and Strikers at Throop—Strikers Become Raiders—Complaints Made at Shenandoah That They Are Foraging Among Neighboring Farmers—Soldiers Feed Women and Children.

Shenandoah, Pa., Aug. 12.—David R. James, operator of the Cambridge Colliery at South Shenandoah, said yesterday:

"You may safely predict that the anthracite strike will end in some manner before the 15th day of September.

"No one can tell whether the end will come through a break in the ranks of the striking mineworkers or through arbitration or compromise; but it is certain beyond all question, that the mines will open.

"We realize the enormous and permanent losses that confront us. Every anthracite strike has resulted in the loss of territory of the coal-producing companies of this region, and this strike promises to exceed its predecessors in that respect. Manufacturers who once use the cheaper bituminous coal are hard to win back to anthracite. Hard coal will monopolize the market in domestic sizes, and for many years to come, but the domestic trade is only a fraction of the total.

"Speaking for myself as an individual operator, I will say that I am heartily sick of this trouble."

Fight at Scranton.

Scranton, Pa., Aug. 12.—A lively battle occurred last night between deputies and strikers at Throop, an isolated mining village six miles north of here. Scores of shots were exchanged but as far as is known no one was hit.

STRIKERS BECOME RAIDERS.

Complaints Made That They Are Foraging Among Farmers.

Shenandoah, Pa., Aug. 12.—Complaint was made to Brigade headquarters yesterday that strikers are foraging in the rich agricultural district of the Catawissa Valley. The life of one farmer has been threatened, because he attempted to protect his property and the raids have reached such serious proportions that the farmers are preparing to take some concerted action to help stop further depredations. The complaints reached headquarters yesterday afternoon, and it is not unlikely that cavalry will be sent into the district to-day for the purposes of stopping the raids.

Lucian Munbeck, a farmer, reported that for some time past raids have been made on his place by parties of men. Early yesterday morning he caught a man tearing out whole stacks of corn. He ordered the man off the place and as he was leaving he fired two shots at the farmer. The latter was armed, but did not shoot.

A widow, who owns a farm, reported that several men came on her premises and started to dig potatoes. She ordered them off the patch, but they paid no attention to her and did not leave until they had taken all they needed. One farmer has several men patroling his farm day and night. The foragers do not confine themselves to stealing crops, but also take poultry.

The soldiers in camp are daily feeding several hundred women and children. They came there saying they are hungry and as there is more than enough food in the camp to supply the wants of the men, the officers permit the soldiers to give something to the needy applicants. The number that came last week was small, but it is increasing every day. Many of them bring baskets to carry the food home. It is a common sight to see some of the women and children take scraps from the leavings of the soldiers. Col. Hoffman, of the 8th regiment, was asked if all these persons were foreigners and he replied that a great many belonged to English speaking classes.

The officials of the Mine Workers' Union deny there is any actual want. They maintain the union are able to take care of the distress.

Drowned in the Don.

Toronto, Aug. 12.—Willie Buchanan, the 8-year-old son of Robert Buchanan, of Don Mills road, was drowned just below the first dam on the Don River yesterday morning at 10 o'clock. The little fellow stole away from home with his 10-year-old brother, and both went down to the river to play, and in crossing over a board, the high wind which blew all morning with great force, carried Willie off his feet, and he fell into a deep spot.

Rebels Take Barcelona.

Washington, Aug. 12.—Minister Bowen has cabled the State Department from Caracas, Venezuela, that the revolutionists have cut the cable at Barcelona. Minister Bowen says the cable was cut immediately after the receipt of a message stating that the revolutionists were entering the city. A United States naval force has been landed.

Drowned at Deseronto.

Deseronto, Ont., Aug. 12.—A very sad drowning accident occurred here yesterday afternoon by which Frank Luffman, about 8 years of age, son of Charles Luffman, lost his life. The boy was fishing at the docks near the Refuge boilers, when he lost his balance and fell in. His body was recovered in about twenty minutes.

Sir William's Son Recovers.

Montreal, Aug. 12.—Yesterday's meeting of the C.P.R. directors was presided over by Sir William Van Horne, the chairman of the company, who returned from New York yesterday forenoon, after fully satisfying himself that his son was making gratifying progress towards reco ery.

Crete Dispute Is Reopened.

London, Aug. 12.—Prince George of Crete is about to raise again the question of the union of the island with Greece. His former appeal to the four guardian powers, Britain, Russia, France and Italy, met with the response that the moment had not arrived to discuss the future of the Island. Since then there has been a complete reorganization of political parties in Crete. All ideas of an independent principality have been abandoned, and all parties are unanimous in demanding political union with Greece.

Killed by a Fall.

Bracebridge, Aug. 12.—A sad accident happened at Port Sandfield yesterday afternoon, when E. Bush of Lindsay was instantly killed. The bridge at the cut at Port Sandfield was being swung to allow the steamer Islander to pass through, when Bush, who was on the approach, attempted to jump across to the bridge after it had been swung a few feet. He evidently miscalculated the distance, struck the railing, and fell to the wharf beneath, a distance of 30 feet, head foremost.

Boy Killed Instantly.

Dunnville, Aug. 12.—While some boys were playing around the pile driver at the new bridge yesterday afternoon, one of their number, William Brunt, aged 10 years, son of A. S. Brunt, barber, was instantly killed by the lever of the apparatus striking him on the head with terrific force.

Schooner Lost With Ten Men.

St. John's, Nfd., Aug. 12.—The steamer Virginia Lake returned here yesterday morning from Labrador and reports the fishery prospect there to be excellent. The catch promises to be above the average. A schooner has gone ashore at Farmyard Islands. Her crew of ten persons were drowned.

Entire Town Destroyed.

Port au Prince, Hayti, Aug. 12.—The news of the burning of Petit Goave, after an attack on the place by Fouchardists, reported on Saturday last, has been confirmed. About 4,000 persons are homeless.

A Noted Medical Specialist Speaks for the Benefit of Hot Weather Sufferers.

HE MAINTAINS THAT

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND

IS A BANISHER OF DISEASE AND A RESTORER OF HEALTH.

A noted medical specialist—a physician possessing ample wealth—ever ready to acknowledge worth and merit, speaks of Paine's Celery Compound as follows:

"In summer time, when strength fails, when that tired, listless feeling is experienced from day to day, when the digestive organs are not doing their work properly, when constipation is poisoning the blood, when disease with iron hand takes possession of the body, Paine's Celery Compound will be found a marvellous banisher of disease and a true health restorer."

This strong statement should influence all weak, rundown and half sick men and women during the hot August weather. This remarkable indorsation of Paine's Celery Compound by an acknowledged specialist should at once convince the suffering and diseased that Dr. Phelps' great medical discovery is what they need to restore perfect health. The thousands of lives fast wearing away can be saved and made happy and useful to families and friends. May heaven speedily convince the doubting and despondent, and direct them to that unfailing life-giver—Paine's Celery Compound.

Anne Boleyn's Coronation.

Henry VIII. addressed letters to the Mayor and Communalitie of London signifying unto them that his pleasure was to solemnize the coronation of the most dear and well beloved wife, Queen Anne, at Westminster, on Whit Sunday, willing them to make preparation as well to fetch her grace from Greenwich to the Tower by water, as to see the city garnished with pageants in places accustomed for the honor of her grace, when she should be conveyed from the Tower to Westminster. Everything was duly carried out in accordance with this Royal command. The girl queen (the only one of Henry's consorts besides Catherine who was crowned) on arrival at Westminster walked under a rich canopy, the Bishops of London and Winchester, bearing up the laps of her robes, while her long train was carried by the old Duchess of Norfolk. She was set in a rich chair between the choir and high altar, and after she had rested a while, she descended unto the high altar, where she prostrated herself, and the Archbishop of Canterbury said certain collects over her. Then she rose, and the bishop annointed her on the head and on the breast, and she was led up again to her chair, where the archbishop set the crown of St. Edward on her head, and then delivered the sceptre of gold in her right hand and the rod of ivory with the dove in her left hand. After the Te Deum the bishop took off the crown of St. Edward, being heavy, and set on her head the crown made for her, and so she went to Mass. Just out of the cloister of St. Stephen's chapel was made a little closet in which the King with divers ambassadors stood to behold the service. The proceedings, which commenced at seven in the morning, were very protracted, it being six in the evening before the Queen quitted the banqueting hall.

Beyond Pardon.

"Forgive him!" exclaimed the great orator. "No, sir. There are some things that a man can never forgive. If it were only an ordinary quarrel, I could forgive him; if we had had a stand-up-and-knock-down-fight I could forgive him; if he had slandered me I might forget it, but some things a man cannot forget, however hard he may try."

"Did you ever have a political argument with him?" asked the great politician.

"No; we were both on the same side."

"Both fall in love with the same girl?" inquired the young lover.

"No; he never knew the girl I married."

"Tried to get the better of you by underhand means in some business transaction?" suggested the business man.

"Not so. I never had any business dealings with him. I'll tell you what it was, though. I was making a speech one night—it was the effort of my life—and he was present. I had worked in some heroics and came to the pathos. I could see I carried the audience with me as I told the little story I had interpolated to illustrate the point I was making. There was hardly a sound in the vast auditorium. I could see that the people were hanging on every word, every syllable that I uttered. At that moment—the very moment of my triumph——"

"Well," asked the others together, as he hesitated.

"At that moment this man yelled, 'Speak up!' "—London Tit-Bits.

Some Vicissitudes of Manuscript.

Writers who send unsolicited contributions to magazines give more trouble than they are aware of, and it is not to be wondered at that they are sometimes treated with scant courtesy. An editor is human, and there are moments when the burden he carries is so heavy that another straw, in the shape of an illegible manuscript, is likely to make him break down. None the less, we sympathize with the hero of the following story. He is very young, but he is beginning to get accepted, and some months ago he was delighted to receive a letter from a well-known editor inviting him to call. He did so, and was asked to send in stories and sketches. In the course of a few weeks he sent in several, and one of them was printed.

Then there was silence, and he went and saw the editor, and asked if he might have his MSS. back if they were not going to be used. It was quite a friendly interview, and the editor was in his most genial mood when he said: "My dear fellow, I will do my best to find them. The fact is, I have three large brown paper bags at home, and I take manuscripts back with me and put them into those against the time when I shall have leisure to read them. They are all full, and I don't even remember into which of them I put yours." This happened months ago, and the little sketches, probably quite salable, still dwell in the brown paper bags.—London Morning Post.

African Snakes.

The African cobra is regarded somewhat reverently by the natives of that country, who once a year kill a cobra de capello and hang its skin to the branch of a tree, tail downward. Then all the children born during the last year are brought out and made to touch the skin. This the parents think, puts them under the serpent's protection. The cobra de capello divides with the horned viper of Africa the questionable honor of being the "worm of the Nile," to whose venomous tooth Cleopatra's death was due.

The Kaffirs use the venom of this snake's cousin, the puff adder, to poison their arrows and when they have any small quantity left they swallow it, having a theory that it will protect them from the bad effects of future bites. The Snake tribe of the Punjab says that the bites of snakes do not hurt them, and if they find a dead serpent they dress it in clothes and give it a superb funeral.

THROWING THE LASSO.

The Manner In Which the Rope Is Handled by an Expert.

"A mistaken impression prevails in the mind of the public in regard to the manner in which a lasso is handled," says an expert. "The idea that the loop is always swung around the head before making a cast, especially when the roper is on foot, is erroneous. No man of experience ever makes a cast in this fashion from the ground in practical work. There are several reasons why he does not. One of them is that the movement is likely to frighten the stock, especially horses; another that he may have to wait some minutes before a favorable opportunity occurs for making a cast. He knows that better results are obtained by holding the rope as unobtrusively as possible, even keeping it concealed from the object of capture.

"On the contrary, however, when mounted and in pursuit it is absolutely necessary to swing the loop over and around the head, for the cast must be made with the greatest possible force in order to overcome not only the forward movement of the pursued, but also the action of the wind should that chance to be against you.

"As to the manner of casting, some 'ropers' cast with a quick, jerky movement of the hand, seeming to use the arm very little and the body not at all. Others employ body, arm and hand. Both methods are effective when perfected by practice."

Board With the Butler.

To avoid the trouble of housekeeping, many wealthy Parisians board with their butler, so to speak. Instead of ordering the food for the household from day to day, they pay a fixed sum per month to their butler or housekeeper, who contracts to supply them with the usual three meals per day, composed of the customary courses, says What to Eat. The price paid for this service varies in accordance with the style of living. If guests be invited to dinner or any sort of entertainment be given, an extra sum per head is paid. In this way the lady of the house avoids the annoyance of butchers' and bakers' bills, and if the butler does not keep his part of the contract it is easy enough to find another to replace him. Of course, the president's household is carried out on this plan on a large scale, and many of the big stores supply all their employees with daily meals in the same manner. The banks and other administrations of similar nature often furnish the noonday meal to their clerks by contract, the latter paying a trifling sum toward the cost.

The Manufacture of Pins.

In 1775 a prize was given to the colonist of Carolina who produced the first native pins and needles. During the war of 1812, when, owing to restrictions upon commerce, the price of pins rose to the enormous sum of $1 per paper, the manufacture was actually started in the United States, but does not seem to have met with success, as the enterprise was soon abandoned. The industry was not fairly started in this country until the year 1836.

The early pins in this country, as in England, were made with globular heads of fine twisted wire, made separately, and secured to the shank by compression from a falling block and die. These old pins had the misfortune of often parting with their heads. It was to overcome this difficulty that the attention of early inventors was directed. The solid headed pin, in common use today, took the place of the old form about 1840.

Couldn't "Kid" Him.

"Have you known what it is to be an orphan?" asks one of the characters in the "Pirates of Penzance," and another replies, "Often." The similarity between the two words causes almost a page of good Gilbertian fun. It would have been otherwise if either of the characters had happened to be an average London boy.

The tale is told of a London boy on his country holiday who was asked by a carter to hold one of his horses. "Which 'orse?" asked the lad. "The off 'un," said the driver. "Horphan," said the boy. "How d'ye think Hi knows which of 'em's a horphan? Garn, you don't kid me." And that closed the incident.

Out of Proportion.

Benham—I try to believe the Bible, but I find that story of the ten virgins, five of whom were wise and five foolish, a little perplexing.

Mrs. Benham — What's the matter with that?

Benham—Judging from the women I have known, the proportion of foolish ones was altogether too small.

As If It Were Possible.

Claribel—I wonder what that creature meant?

Laurie—What creature?

Claribel—Why, Tentworth, of course. When I told him everybody said I was improving in my singing, he said he was delighted to hear it. The idea!

Her Protest.

"Darling," said Edwin, "your eyes are like diamonds, your teeth like pearls, your lips resemble the most glorious rubies, and your hair"—

"Edwin," said Angelina sternly, "remember that you work in a jewelry warehouse and that it's disgusting to talk shop."

Election Promises.

ABOU BEN ADHEM.

Abou Ben Adhem (may his tribe increase!)
Awoke one night from a deep dream of peace
And saw within the moonlight in his room,
Making it rich and like a lily in bloom,
An angel writing in a book of gold.
Exceeding peace had made Ben Adhem bold,
And to the Presence in the room he said,
"What writest thou?" The vision raised its head
And with a look that made of all sweet accord
Answered, "The names of those who love the Lord."
"And is mine one?" said Abou. "Nay, not so,"
Replied the angel. Abou spoke more low,
But cheerily still, and said, "I pray, thee, then,
Write me as one who loves his fellow-men."
The angel wrote and vanished. The next night
It came again with a great awakening light
And showed the names whom love of God has blessed,
And, lo, Ben Adhem's name led all the rest!

HOME OF THE BUCKINGHAMS.

Stowe Palace, One of the Most Magnificent of Country Seats.

Stowe Palace, one of the most magnificent and stately country seats, not only in England, but likewise in all Europe, is in the market, and, while it may possibly be acquired at a bargain and far below its actual value, yet it is useless for any one save an exceedingly rich man to dream of purchasing it, so vast is the cost of its maintenance.

Although best known as the house of the last three Dukes of Buckingham and Chandos, it owes its origin to that Lord Cobham who was one of the principal lieutenants of the first Duke of Marlborough. Indeed, there is a good deal in common between Stowe Palace and Blenheim Palace, the creation of the first Duke of Marlborough, Stowe being decidedly the more manificent of the two. Its facade is a thousand feet long, and the area of the buildings alone is enormous.

Among the features of the place are the trees around the so-called Bourbon tower, planted by King Louis XVIII, of France, who spent much of his exile at Stowe as the guest of the first Duke of Buckingham. The second Duke entertained the late Queen Victoria and the Prince Consort there in the early days of the Victorian era, and the place, after having been rented to the late Count of Paris from the time of his banishment from France until his death, is now in the possession of Lady Kinloss, eldest daughter and heiress of the last Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, and a peeress in her own right.

She is married to Captain Morgan-Grenville, a former officer of the army, and at her death the title of Lord Kinloss will pass to her son. Though well off, she is not rich enough to live at Stowe or to keep the place empty year after year unrented. For she has found no tenant for it since the death of the Count of Paris. That is why she is now endeavoring to sell it, and the person who buys it will by reason of its possession become at once one of the most conspicuous and influential figures in the aristocratic County of Bucks, where there are so many beautiful patrician country seats.

An Answer to Prayer.

Your correspondent, "De Profundis," in The Spectator, of May 31st, says that to pray to God to interfere with the machinery, once started, is as unreasonable (all experience shows) as to thank him for what we conceive to be blessings is superfluous. This does not accord with universal experience. Some years ago I impulsively resolved to send £20 to a lady who had a coffee-room, and conducted a "mission." I soon realized what an unreasonable impulse it had been. But though entirely contrary to my judgment, after about a fortnight's delay, I felt the money must go. I despatched it with the strictest injunctions that there should be no thanks, verbal or by letter. The lady wrote to me that she had been praying for about two months for £20, a quarter's rent; that on Lady'day she had but £21, and hesitated to reduce her resources to £1; but that after a few days' delay she paid her rent, whereupon I at once posted to her my two ten-pound notes. I shall never forget the relief it was to end the period of indecision by getting rid of the money. The lady's gratitude to God, not me, was unbounded. I wanted no thanks; I sent the money simply because I felt I must; and never even visited the coffee-room, the cause of this strange experience. I may observe that £20 is a solid sum to spend on mere sentiment; but the pressure on my conscience was no sentiment.—I am, sir, etc.—Cor. London Spectator.

The Youngest Earl

The youngest earl, David Lyulph Gore Wolseley, ninth Earl of Airlie, is a very pathetic little figure, for he lost his father and became chief of the great Scots house in the summer of 1900, when his father laid down his life for Queen and country at Diamond Hill, near Pretoria. The eighth Earl of Airlie had not long returned to the field after a severe wound, when he headed his regiment, the Twelth Lancers, in the victorious charge—a victory of which his life and that of Lord Chesham's heir swelled the cost. The widowed Countess of Airlie, a daughter of the fifth Earl of Arran and sister of Viscountess Cranborne, is now a member of the household of the Princess of Wales. The young earl is in his ninth year and has two brothers and three sisters.—The Tatler.

Boat 2,000 Years Old.

In County Mayo, Ireland, a wooden boat, believed to be nearly 2,000 years old, was recently dug up by some laborers. The boat, beautifully carved from the trunk of a tree, is of oak, 46 feet long, and in a perfect state of preservation. So hard is the wood that the hatchets of the men scarcely left an impression. Provision will be made to receive the relic in the Dublin museum.—Pearson's Weekly.

Legs so Swelled He Couldn't Walk

KIDNEY AND URINARY TROUBLES WERE FOLLOWED BY DROPSY — A PERFECT CURE BY

The case of Mr. James Treneman, the well-known butcher, of 536 Adelaide St., London, Ont., is another proof that Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are effective in the most severe and complicated diseases of the kidneys.

The double action which this famous prescription has on both the kidneys and liver is in a large measure responsible for its wonderful curative effects. When there are backache, frequent, difficult or painful urination, dropsical swellings, biliousness, constipation or stomach derangements, you may depend upon it that the kidneys are clogged and the liver sluggish.

It is at such times that Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills prove themselves prompt to give relief and certain to effect a cure. The evidence to prove this fact is simply overwhelming:—

Mr. James Treneman states: "Two years ago I was laid up with kidney disease and urinary troubles. Besides the pain and inconvenience caused by these troubles I became dropsical, and my legs would swell up so that I could scarcely go around at all. Hearing of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills I procured a box and continued the use of this valuable medicine until now I can say for a certainty that I am entirely cured. I never took any medicine that did me so much good, and am firmly convinced that if it had not been for this medicine I would not be working to-day."

As a family medicine of tested and known worth, Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills have never been approached. They act directly on the kidneys and liver, regulate the bowels and ensure the perfect action of the digestive and filtering systems. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box. THEY DROVE PIMPLES AWAY.—A face covered with pimples is unsightly. It tells of internal irregularities which should long since have been corrected. The liver and the kidneys are not performing their functions in the healthy way they should, and these pimples are to let you know that the blood protests. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will drive them all away, and will leave the skin clear and clean. Try them, and there will be another witness to their excellence.

There are 38 letters in the Russian alphabet.

HAD LA GRIPPE.—Mr. A. Nickerson, farmer, Dutton, writes; "Last winter I had La Grippe and it left me with a severe pain in the small of my back and hip that used to catch me whenever I tried to climb a fence. This lasted for about two months, when I bought a bottle of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil and used it both internally and externally, morning and evening, for three days, at the expiration of which time I was completely cured."

Their gentle action and good effect on the system really make them a perfect little pill. They please those who use them. Carter's Little Liver Pills may well be termed 'Perfection.'

AT DEATH'S DOOR.—DYSPEPSIA CONQUERED.—A GREAT MEDICAL TRIUMPH.—Gentlemen,—My medical adviser and others told me I could not possibly live when I commenced to use Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery for Dyspepsia. My case was one of the worst of its kind. For three years I could not eat meat and my weight decreased from 219 to 119 lbs. All the food I took for thirteen months previous to taking the Vegetable Discovery consisted of milk. I am now entirely cured and have regained my usual weight, can eat anything with a keen relish and feel like a new man. I have sold over thirty dozen Vegetable Discovery since it cured me, as I am well-known and people in this section know how low I was, and thought I could not possibly be cured. They are eager to try this grand medicine. It certainly saved my life as I never expected to recover when first I commenced using it. I am not exaggerating anything, but feel glad to be able to contribute this testimonial and trust it may be the means of convincing others of its merit as a certain cure for Dyspepsia.

Very many persons die annually from cholera and kindred summer complaints, who might have been saved if proper remedies had been used. If attacked do not delay in getting a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial, the medicine that never fails to effect a cure. Those who have used it say it acts promptly, and thoroughly, subdues the pain and disease.

FOR INFLAMMATION OF THE EYES.—Among the many good qualities which Parmelee's Vegetable Pills possess, besides regulating the digestive organs, is their efficacy in reducing inflammation of the eyes. It has called forth many letters of recommendation from those who were afflicted with this complaint and found a cure in the pills. They affect the nerve centres and the blood in a surprisingly active way, and the result is almost immediately seen.

If you have a cough or cold do not neglect it; many without a trace of that hereditary disease have drifted into a consumptive's grave by neglecting what was only a slight cold. Had they used Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup before it was too late, their lives would have been saved. Mr. A. W. Levy, Mitchell, writes; "I think Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup the best preparation on the market for coughs and severe colds. About six years ago I caught a severe cold which settled on my lungs, and for three months I had a cough. I had a physician attending me, but gradually grew worse until I was on the verge of Consumption, and had given up hopes of being cured, when I was induced to try Bickle's Syrup. Before I had taken one bottle I found myself greatly relieved, and by the time I had finished the second bottle I was completely cured. I always recommend it for severe colds and consumption."

UP-TO-DATE BEDS AND BEDDING.

The selection of beds and the detail of their equipment, says The Delineator for September, is one of the most important items of modern house furnishing. The provision for comfort in sleeping rooms would perhaps receive more attention if one realized that fully one-third of a life-time is spent there. In the course of three-score years fully twenty, even with only moderate sleeping, are passed in bed. White iron bedsteads are so generally used now that they may be found even in the tenement districts, where their neat, durable and simple construction means even more than in the homes of more pretension and wealth. While the adornment of the bed is of moment, the foundations of comfort depend on the choice of mattresses and springs. Here the quality should be of the best that can be afforded. A first expense in good materials is likely to be the last.

WHICH IS TO PREVAIL?

Mr. Scott, the member for East Assinaboia, told his constituents a short time ago, that in "the new schedule to be introduced next year, considerable reductions would be made in the tariff," and he further added that "It was only just that the "people of the North-West who were "interested in a low tariff, should be "advised that the tariff will be re"duced next session. The tariff had "already been reduced, but it would "be better to have it reduced still "lower. Every reduction in the "tariff tended to the benefit of the "country. There had been prac"tically no importations of machin"ery before 1897. Since then that "business had radically changed. "There was now active and keen "competition from American manu"facturers."

It cannot even be supposed that Mr. Scott spoke without authority. If he did it would be an assumption not usually indulged in, even by Ministers themselves.

Let us see how this statement of Mr. Scott's tallies with the declaration of the Hon. Mr. Tarte made at Midland a few days ago, in a speech delivered by him, in which he was advocating among other things, the deepening of harbors, construction of canals and the building of ships. "Protection," declared the honorable Minister of Public Works, "to our manu"facturers was a necessity, and we "must follow the lead of the Ameri"cans with a tariff framed for "Canadian purposes."

Which, we ask, is to prevail? The promise made by Mr. Scott on behalf of the party in power, that a reduction in the tariff is to be made at the next session of parliament, so that the "keen competition from American manufacturers," which Mr. Scott says now exists, may be increased; or the declaration of the Hon. Mr. Tarte, that "protection to our manufacturers was a necessity," and that "we must follow the lead of the "Americans with a tariff framed for "Canadian purposes?"

Time alone will answer the question. Upon the policy of protection we can echo the words of Mr. Bennett, M.P. for East Simcoe, who presided at the meeting at which Mr. Tarte made his speech, "on the question of "protection we and the Minister are "one."

Manufacturers in the meantime can only hope that Mr. Tarte's declaration may prove true, that "protection is necessary," and that unless he has his own way in this respect, he and his colleagues will, in his own language, "quarrel like blazes."

Timely Topics is not in a position to answer the question. Judging from what is known of the Commissioners, people would be inclined to doubt it. Better ask the Chairman.

Prof. Hand, of Hamilton, handed out some nice fireworks last night. He'll be sure of a glad hand in Belleville in future.

Some people didn't seem to think the fireworks were good enough. Perhaps they'll some day get the display they deserve.

• • •

Those hot air balloons last night, though, were rather tame affairs, especially to people who have attended Council meetings. Cut out the balloons next time, and give us more set pieces.

• • •

However, the show was a good one, and nobody got his whiskers singed, so let's be thankful.

• • •

The Minnesota Club, of St. Paul, U.S., a leading social organization of that city, has adopted a rule prohibiting the serving of drinks to women, except at meals. It appears that the wives of some of the members have been using the Club privileges so freely that they had to be taken home in hacks. The selfishness of man is proverbial.

• • •

The younger portion of our population who have votes should not forget that the progress and wealth of the North Western portion of Canada is due "to the foresight and business ability of the Liberal-Conservative leaders. Had it not been for them the North-West might have fallen to the United States. There was a movement with that end in view which the Conservatives foiled. Had it not been for them the country would never have been opened up for settlement. Their labors made the West worthy of occupation. The growth of to-day is a result of Conservative effort, and the more marked it becomes the more does it testify to the wisdom of the party that has always stood for Canada first."

• • •

The Montreal Gazette says: "Dr. Doran, the newest member of the Harbor Commission, is proving himself to be a very objectionable fellow. He wants things done in a business way when the rule for a long time has been to do them in a political way." It is the general impression that there are other corporations in just the same position. Mr. Doran may make himself objectionable to rings, but the general public will appreciate his efforts.

A large woollen mill in St. Hyacinthe, province of Quebec, has gone into liquidation. It is a Grit concern, the members of which will know how to appreciate the preferential policy of the Laurier Government. Mr. Boaz, who visited Prince Edward a few years ago, preaching free trade, is one of the principal men in the company. It will be remembered that the Hon. Mr. Sifton told the party in Winnipeg that if the woollen industry could not live and succeed on a 23 1-2 per cent. tariff, they should close. Well, they are closing, and hundreds of hands are left idle.

• • •

In parts of Roman Catholic France officials break down convent walls to enforce the law against unauthorized associations. Things in France must be something as they were in England during the reign of that light of liberty and beacon of reform, the bluff King Henry VIII.

• • •

Mr. Harold Cox, secretary of the Cobden Club, has written to the London Times on the subject of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's "preferential tariff." He says: "The Canadian tariff, in spite of the nominal British preference, is actually more favorable to the United States than to Great Britain." The Cobden Club should demand a return of that Free Trade gold medal which was presented to Sir Wilfrid.

• • •

"Strikes" have become so common of late, and "strikers" so aggressive in their interference with those who are desirous of earning their living without having to ask permission of the "unions," that it has been found necessary to appeal to the law to enforce order in the community. In Toronto the Police Magistrate has fined a few of the strikers, among them a woman, for interfering with and insulting men and women, who work in establishments that the strikers have boycotted. In Kingston the manager of the locomotive works is appealing to the courts to prevent strikers from stealing their men away and sending them to the States.

People are wondering if the Belleville rolls were returned from the Guelph Rolling Mills before the recent fire. Perhaps the Belleville Alderman who is employed by the Guarantee Company to keep an eye on the local Rolling Mills could let us know.

Watch the extensive patronage of the MAGI Caledonia Springs; only superlative merit could attract such a business

Going up to the Driving Park last night, after the Council meeting, the Timely Topics man fell in with Mayor Graham and Ald. Chown, and, in the course of a five minutes conversation the two gentlemen eased their minds of one or two things they have been laying up against the local press, which was always creating agitations of some kind. The case of Mr. Starling, Ald. Chown said, was misunderstood by many people, the cause of which was that a local paper had stated that the Council had taken the rolls away from him. As a matter of fact Belleville had no regularly appointed Tax Collector. When any new tax rolls were ready they were handed to somebody for collection, but the mere fact of a person having been given the opportunity to collect one year's taxes gave him no claim at all on the position for the next year.

"This matter was threshed out pretty thoroughly last year," said the Mayor. "It was only in consideration of the fact that Mr. Starling had had the fag end of the rolls of 1899 and 1900 that an exception was made in his case in regard to the rolls of 1901. He quite understood at the time that the action taken would not be repeated, and expressed himself as satisfied with the arrangements. For my part I don't believe any man should have more than one year's rolls in his possession at any time. If the Collectors come to understand that the Council means to enforce this rule there will be a much more prompt collection of taxes, and we may look to see the rolls returned much earlier than they have been in recent years." Just then the newspaper man got mixed up in a crowd, and when he emerged from it the two City Fathers had passed out of sight.

NERVE WRACKED AND INSOMNIOUS.

Everything goes wrong, head feels heavy and dull, mind is filled with strange forebodings, stomach is out of kilter. You need a good tonic like Ferrozone to bring back your lost appetite and digestion, and cleanse the blood of all impurities. Ferrozone is a wonderful invigorant and strengthener that will banish gloomy depression and quickly restore you to a healthy, vigorous condition of mind and body. Nothing is so good for the sick, weary and debilitated as Ferrozone. Price 50c per box, at druggists or J. S. McKeown.

GOOD DEEDS IMMORTAL.

Henry Burton.

Never a word is said,
 But it trembles in the air,
And the truant voice has sped
 To vibrate everywhere;
And perhaps far off in eternal years
The echo may ring upon my ears.

Never are kind acts done
 To wipe the weeping eyes,
But, like flashes of the sun,
 They signal to the skies;
And up above the angels read
How we have helped the sorer need.

Never a day is given,
 But it tones the after years,
And it carries up to heaven
 Its sunshine or its tears;
While the to-morrow's stand and wait,
The silent minutes by the outer gate.

There is no end to the sky,
 And the stars are everywhere,
And time is eternity,
 And the here is over there;
For the common deeds of the common day
Are ringing bells in the far away.

A SURPRISING DISCOVERY.

You will be surprised in trying Catarrhozone to find how quickly it cures cold in the head. The agreeable penetrating vapor traverses every air cell and passage of the nose, throat and lungs. In one breath it carries instant death to the millions of germs infesting the respiratory organs and breaks up a cold in ten minutes.

A trial will convince you that Catarrhozone is the most potent, satisfactory and pleasant cure for Colds, Catarrh, Deafness, Bronchitis, Asthma and Lung Trouble. Complete outfit, $1.00; small size 25c. Druggists or N. C. Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

YACHTING.

Seawanhaka Cup Stays in Canada.

Montreal, Aug. 11. — Canada has again proven its title to the possession of the Seawanhaka Cup for small yachts. The Bridgeport yachtsmen have made a plucky attempt to "lift" the cup, but they have failed, as many others have done before them, and the cup will remain in possession of the Royal St. Lawrence Yacht Club for at least another year. The final race of the series took place on Lake St. Louis this afternoon, and resulted in another win for Trident, the Canadian defender, which defeated the American challenger by 5 minutes and 27 seconds. To-day's race was over the triangular course of four miles, sailed three times over, or a total distance of twelve miles. The first leg was a beat, the second a reach, and the third a free run. The start was considerably delayed by the weather conditions, which were very variable. At the hour fixed for the start a dead calm prevailed, and it was found impossible to start the boats. The calm was succeeded after an interval of an hour by a stiff breeze, which developed into a squall, and both boats found it necessary to reef, and also to carry storm jibs. Trident got the advantage of the start owing to quicker work on the part of her crew in arranging her sails, and crossed the starting line three and a half minutes before the challenger. At this time the breeze was blowing at nearly twenty miles an hour, and there was a heavy sea. It was Trident's weather, and not at all suitable for the challenger. The superiority of the Canadian boat in holding up to a good stiff breeze was shown at the conclusion of the first beat, when she had a lead of nearly seven minutes. She lost slightly on the reach. In the second heat a fierce hurricane sprung up. The full force of the storm struck Trident, with the result that she lost somewhat on the beat, but gained on the second reach. On the final beat both yachts were considerably buffeted by the storm. The American boat was splendidly sailed by her crew, and she reduced the lead, but the defender had secured too good a lead at the start and she finished 5 minutes and 27 seconds ahead.

A Decorator

To be a decorator—a genuine decorator—the subject may be man or woman, for some of the cleverest decorators of the United States and Europe today are ladies, who have turned their time, energy and education toward colors, harmonies, drawings and home interiors. These ladies and decorators generally are not mechanics, but colorists, not artizans, but artists.

A DECORATOR

Is one who has made a study of color in its various uses, has studied designing in connection with colors, can tell you of harmonies, harmonies of contrast, harmonies of analogy. Some colorists know complimentary colors, but cannot tell you why they are such. Some can. Our decorator can tell you why, when and how, will give you drawings and color sketches of your individual rooms, and when he asks for wall papers to harmonize with certain surroundings we always have what is wanted in design, colors, etc., as our stock is amply large.

AMPLY ARTISTIC

Everything the heart of the colorist could wish for, and when prices figure — well, that's very much in the favor of this house. We will and can afford to sell you wall papers 25 per cent. lower than most houses. Our quantity buying, our output, our Mail order, our Dominion trade offers discounts and we hand these discounts over to our customers. We are satisfied with small profits on individual sales and many sales.

What is the name of the oldest Fire Insurance Co. in the world? The Sun Insurance Office of London, having a surplus over and above capital and every other liability of nearly $8,000,000. The reason that it is the oldest is because it has always acted on the square with those it insured.

What is the name of that Fire Insurance Co. having the largest capital of any purely American Fire Co. able to carry the whole city, and noted for its generous dealings? "The Home," of New York. Hunt & Jeffers represent both these companies.

FRENCH OFFICER UNDER ARREST.

Col. St. Remy Refused to Take Cavalry to Close Nun's Schools.

Vannes, Aug. 12.—The Prefect of the Department of Morbihan asked that a detachment of cavalry be sent to assist the authorities in their efforts to close the unauthorized congregational schools at Ploermel.

The general commanding the district ordered Lieutenant-Colonel St. Remy to go to Ploermel with a part of his regiment, but Col. St. Remy refused to obey this order, declaring his religious sentiments forbade him to co-operate in closing congregational establishments.

General Andre, the War Minister, has ordered Colonel St. Remy to be confined in the fortress on Belle Isle and to be court martialled for insubordination.

"Long Live the Sisters"

Brest, Aug. 12.—At a meeting here yesterday, the Prefect attempted to justify the Government's action, but his speech was constantly interrupted with cries of: "We will resist to the death; there will be blood shed. We will allow ourselves to be massacred before we abandon the sisters." Abbe Gayraud said the only way to restore peace was not to disturb the sisters.

CANADA'S CORONATION.

Lord Minto's Cable Message to the Newly-Crowned King.

Ottawa, August 12.—The following is a copy of a cable which Lord Minto sent to King Edward:

"Ottawa, Aug. 9.

"To his Majesty the King:

"On behalf of myself, my Government and the people of Canada, may I offer to you and Queen Alexandra our loyal and heartfelt congratulations on the occasion of your Majesty's coronation. (Signed) Minto."

The King to Canada.

The Governor-General yesterday received the following reply from the King to the message of congratulation on his coronation:

"My most sincere thanks, and those of the Queen, to yourself, your Government and my loyal subjects of Canada for their congratulations.

"(Signed) Edward R. and I."

MINISTERS SWORN IN.

The King's Privy Council at Buckingham Palace.

London, Aug. 12.—King Edward held a Privy Council yesterday at Buckingham Palace, at which the newly appointed Ministers were sworn in. Later he officiated at an investiture of the Victorian Order.

London's Coronation Gift.

The King gave an audience yesterday afternoon to Sir Joseph Dimsdale, Lord Mayor of London, who presented the city's coronation gift of $575,000 toward the King's Hospital Fund. The gift included more than 20,000 penny donations from the poorest quarters of London.

Perjury Is Charge Laid.

Hamilton, Aug. 12.—The announcement that there is a warrant out in Buffalo for the arrest of Grant Henderson of this city, who was a Canadian commissioner to the Pan American Exposition last year, has caused a mild sensation. According to The Buffalo Times the charge against Mr. Henderson is perjury. Last May, it is alleged, some Chinese were smuggled into Buffalo, and five persons, J. Harrer, Jas. R. Hassey, G. James, Earl L. Parish and J. Grant Henderson, were induced by the Chinamen's solicitors to go bail for the Celestials. The alleged smuggled Chinamen took leg bail, hence the trouble. The United States authorities accuse the five men of perjury, alleging that none of them are worth the money they swore to when going on the bonds.

C.P.R. Dividend.

Montreal, Que. Aug. 12.—At a meeting of the directors of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company yesterday a dividend of two per cent. on the preference stock, for the half year, ended June 30 last, was declared. A dividend of two and one half per cent. for the same period was also declared on the common stock. The results for the fiscal year to June 30 last were gross earnings $37,503,054. Working expenses $23,417,141. Net earnings, $14,085,912. After payment of all dividends declared the surplus for the year carried forward is $3,063,074.

Increase in Wheat Yield.

Toronto, Aug. 12.—A bulletin is being prepared by the Ontario Agricultural Department, giving an estimate of the crop for the province. It will appear in a few days, and, it is said, will show a big increase in the wheat yield, but a falling off in the hay crop.

Who Pays the Shot.

London, Aug. 12.—The provincial Premiers are of opinion that the Dominion Government should defray all expenses of the provincial Government houses with the exception of living and entertaining during the coronation.

C.P.R. Earnings.

Montreal, Aug. 12.—The C. P. R. traffic for the week ending Aug. 7 was $771,000; for the same week last year it was $668,000.

G.T.R. Earnings

Montreal, Aug. 12.—Grand Trunk Railway earnings Aug. 1 to 7, 1902, $584,810; 1901, $566,144; increase, $18,666.

Where is this Cook?

Toronto, Aug. 12.—There is a mystery at Big Bay Point, Lake Simcoe. Robert Smith, a cook, employed at the Robinson House, is missing since last Tuesday, when he quietly let himself out of the hotel at 4 o'clock in the morning. Smith is a ployed as cook by the Toronto Hunt Toronto man, and was formerly em-Club.

Entertained at Luncheon.

Quebec, Aug. 12.—The members of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association on the way to Halifax arrived yesterday morning and left at noon for Montmorency, where the local men entertained them at luncheon.

Milk Fever in Kingston.

Kingston, Aug. 12.—A veterinary surgeon says milk fever is prevalent. Since June last over a hundred beasts have died from the disease. It is caused by the rich grass and the prevalence of white clover.

Canada Holds the Cup.

Beaconsfield, Que., Aug. 12.—At 4.28.20 yesterday the Trident crossed the finish line, winning the race and the Seawanhaka Cup from her Yankee competitor, the Tecumseh.

ORCHARD AND GARDEN.

It is safer to prune too little than too much.

Moist earth and a cloudy day for transplanting.

Gooseberries and currants are two easily grown fruits, and there is seldom an oversupply.

The quality and size of fruit on old bushes is much improved by thinning of the fruit or severe pruning.

The cause of moss appearing on the stems of apple and other fruit trees is wet, cold, undrained land or an excessively humid climate.

In saving garden seed gather when ripe. Do not allow it to shell off. The first matured is the best, and the first matured will shell first.

A good mulch around fruit trees helps to keep down weeds, keeps the soil loose, moist and porous at all times, with little labor of cultivation.

The time of setting out of fruit trees is of far less importance than to see that the right varieties are selected, the soil prepared and transplanting well done.

Social Instincts of Ants.

A swarm of Formica pratersis was closely pressed in its nest by an army of the same species, and crowds of alarmed defenders issued from the entrances to the nest and few to take part in the fight. Like Satan, the tempter of old, I placed near them a beautiful drop of honey on a piece of paper. At any other time the honey would have been covered in a few instants with ants gorging themselves, but this time, numerous working ants came upon it, tasted it for scarcely a second, and returned to it restlessly three or four times. Conscientiousness, the feeling of duty, invariably prevailed over gormandism, and they left the honey to go and be killed while defending the community. I am bound to own, however, that there are ants less social, in whom gormandism does prevail.

Compared to the manners of other sociable animals, and especially to those of man, the manners of ants exhibit a profound and fundamental aggregation of facts of convergence, due to their social life. Let me mention devotion, the instinctive sentiment of duty, slavery, torture, war, alliances, the raising of cattle, gardening, harvesting, and even social degenerescence through the attraction of certain harmful means of enjoyment. It would be ridiculous and erroneous to see in the fulfilment of this series of acts, individual reasoning, the result of calculated reflection, analogous to ours. The fact that each is fixed and circumscribed within one species, as well as the fatalistic character it has in that species, proves this suber abundantly. But it would be as grave a mistake to refuse to recognize the deep natural laws that are concealed under this convergence. Is the case different as regards our actions though they are infinitely more plastic and more complex individually? I do not believe it.

I have been unable to give more than a short sketch of the social life of ants. Let each one study it for himself, and he will experience in doing so the deep enjoyment that comes from sounding the secrets and laws of nature, while at the same time he will enjoy the delightful satire, upon human wretchedness, and will perceive at least the main lines of a social example that we ought to be able to imitate, though we cannot do so, on account of the too large dose of egotistical and ferocious instincts that we have inherited from our ancestors.—Augustus Forel, in International Monthly.

WHEN A BOAT TIPS OVER.

It Is Well for Women to Know What to Do in an Emergency.

On the question discussed at the public bath, whether a girl's skirts if she fell overboard would buoy her up or drag her down there seemed to be a diversion of opinion. Finally, it was agreed that they might buoy her up for a few seconds, until the air that was in them escaped, but as soon as they were wet they would tend to drag her down, and make swimming practically impossible. Of course, how soon they got wet would depend on the material of which they were made. Miss Clark, the teacher, pointed out that when a woman dived into the water the air under her bathing skirt formed a big bubble which hampered a swimmer, so that she reached back and pressed it out as soon as possible. But this same bubble would undoubtedly tend to buoy up a non-swimmer for an infinitesimal space of time. On the other hand, this air chamber lasted much longer in a wet bathing suit than in a dry one, for in the former the pores of the material were to a certain extent filled with water and the air escaped slowly.

The suggestion of an undressing drill seemed to particularly please Dr. Mosher, says The Brooklyn Eagle. Its practical value was evident, as in nine cases out of ten the drowning accidents are the result of an overturned boat, and its occupants are not in bathing suits. The children used to swimming there in the lightest possible attire, for except with the teachers, the skirted bathing suit is unknown, would be hampered almost to rendering their knowledge of swimming useless if they were called upon to save themselves with their high shoes, two or three petticoats on, and in the case of the older girls, long skirts and probably corsets.

It is not that undressing in the water is particularly hard. Most of those who swim for pleasure have probably done it, but the youngsters should be taught that they can and that in an emergency they must undress sufficiently to be able to put their knowledge of swimming to practical use. One or two lessons would be all that would be needed. The matron suggested, and the suggestion was a good and practical one, "At least teach them to pick up the front of their skirts and hold them in their teeth to keep them out of the way. I always do that even with my bathing suit if I am swimming any distance."

A New Ape.

I believe there has been deposited in the London Zoo a specimen of a chimpanzee which is said to represent a new form, or it may be a mere variety only, of that species of manlike ape. It figures under the scientific name of anthropopithecus troglodytes, is said to have been brought from the Gold Coast, and has been presented to the Zoological Society by Captain D. A. Donavan. The creature is described as singularly tame and intelligent, and possibly in it we may find a successor to that highly-educated ape, the late lamented Sally. Unhappily, the manlike apes are all delicate of constitution, that is, as represented by a life spent in captivity, and subject to marked variations of temperature. Whether this new specimen is to be referred to the ordinary chimpanzee species or not will, no doubt, be duly determined by the authorities at the Zoo. The question of specific differences in the chimpanzee branch of the ape stock is not settled. Hartmann remarks that it is a difficult question to decide, though he, himself, adds that he is inclined to admit a certain constancy in the varieties he has examined. The new ape at the Zoo may possibly turn out to represent one of the varieties. It is a notoriously difficult matter to decide where we leave the limits of a mere variety behind and where the boundary line of a new species begins.—London Chronicle.

The Duke and the Soup

I was waiting on the Duke of Fife one night when his grace was giving a small private dinner party in the Patience Room. There was hardly room to pass behind each guest. The soups were Bortch—a costly Russian "potage," made from boiled duck, and served with sorrel, vegetables and cream, and just as I was serving it round, an accident happened. In one hand I had a plate of soup, and in the other my cream. The Duke was talking earnestly to me, and so intently did I listen to him, that I did not know I was dropping all the cream in a hideous thick stream down his back.

I made no fuss, I gave no alarm. The Duke went on talking and laughing with his guests, with the back of his exquisitely-fitting dress one mass of thick cream. I got two or three soft serviettes, and as I served his grace with each course I gave him a rub. By the time we had come to the ice, there was nothing left of the cream except certain faint traces, for which I fear, his grace's valet was unjustly blamed. —London Daily News.

Magnificence that Palls.

The illustrious potentates of the Indian Empire in London for the Coronation are magnificent in the bravery of their marvellous jewels, glimmering satins and costly turbans, but, as a matter of fact, the eye becomes accustomed more readily to the dazzling effect of many jewels than perhaps any other kind of personal adornment. One is never wearied of admiring the snow-white garments, beautiful and artistic in texture and design, of the Indian magnates who throng all the social functions going on in London at present, but one very soon wearies with the dazzle of the many jewels worn by both the Oriental Princes, and the grande dames in London drawing-rooms. There is a strong suggestion of the Parisian Diamond Company running through all the designs in jewelry one sees, and half the time one finds it difficult to believe that the Mahajara of Idar, who is, perhaps, the most gorgeous of all the Indian potentates here this year, is not simply an advertisement for that greatly-advertised diamond emporium in Bond street. It is perfectly true that the eye is "dazzled" by the jewels which adorn the turbans, necks and wrists of the dark-faced men, whose thoughts one would fain penetrate. Possibly these are the gatherings which assure peace within the empire, for the bonds of gracious and profuse hospitality are very strong and lasting, especially in the estimation of Orientals, and the men who are gathered together in the forces from beyond the seas, measure and view with increasing interest the strength as represented by the various sections of soldiers and officers and administration of many portions of the Imperial whole.—Lally Bernard, in The Globe.

Industrial Chemistry.

Artificial attar of roses is in sight. Chemists have good hopes of making quinine by synthesis. With morphine, one of a dozen alkaloids of opium, they are experimenting in the same direction, and a like remark applies to atropine. Artificial mustard oil is preferred by physicians to the real article on account of its greater purity. Oil of bitter almonds is another synthetic achievement. It has the same flavor as the real, though chemically different. Citric acid, which is the sour of the lemon, has been reproduced; likewise lactic acid, which is the sour principle of sour milk. Salicylic acid, so valuable as a preservation and as a remedy for rheumatism, was obtained formerly from the wintergreen plant and was very costly. Now it is cheap and manufactured by the ton from carbolic acid. In its turn artificial oil of wintergreen, derived from wood alcohol and salicylic acid, has driven the natural product out of the market entirely.

Diabolical Revenge.

A diabolical story of revenge comes from Granzendorf, Austria, where a man called Balika tied his enemy, Joseph Balan, to the wheel of a wagon and then drove at a fast pace down the street. When the villagers hurried to stop the horror, it was too late, for Balan was already dead. His murderer was at once arrested.

Candles.

"I thought candles went with stagecoaches, but a good many people must use them yet," said a shopper who pointed to a collection of candlesticks, all of the utility sort, arrayed in a house furnishing department. There were big and little, ornamental and plain, practical and unpractical ones. Some had broad trays, and others had none at all, and some had devices for lifting the candle, while others were made with deep necks. There still remain people who cling to the traditions of their ancestors and will have none of the modern lighting inventions for their sleeping rooms. Certain women prefer a light in their bedrooms until they are asleep, and for this purpose a candle is just the thing, for it will put itself out at the time proportioned by its length.

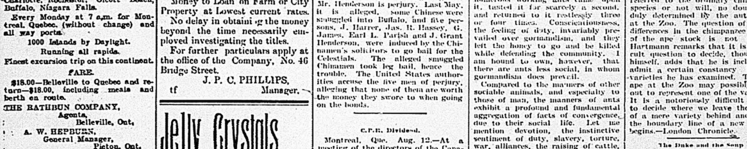
Saw No Reason For Swearing.

General Grant was asked why he never swore. He replied: "Well, when a boy I had an aversion to swearing. It seemed useless, an unnecessary habit, and besides I saw that swearing usually aroused a man's anger. I early had a desire to have complete command of myself. I noticed when a man got angry his opponent always got the better of him. On that account also I determined to refrain from swearing. Then the swearing men of my acquaintance when a boy were not the best men I knew. I never saw any reasons for swearing. All were against it."

Home Life in England and America.

The decay of the home life is to be attributed partially to the influence on society of the invasion of Americans.

In the United States home life is almost unknown. The meaning of the word "home," as understood to Britishers, is a mystery to Yankees. To a certain extent we have always envied you your home life, and I certainly agree with some of your correspondents that it would be disastrous for your country to lose the elevating and refining influences of the home.



FORCE
A Wheat-Malt Cereal giving an Excess of Strength for each Day's Burdens.

Newark, N. J., April 14, 1902.
"FORCE" FOOD CO.,
Buffalo, N. Y.

I have introduced "FORCE" at my breakfast table, and must say it is the most pleasant breakfast dish I have ever found. I have gotten so now that I look forward with expectancy to my breakfast, which is something I have not done in a long time, and as the "FORCE" Food is at my plate every morning, I eat it with the greatest relish. I don't say this as "taffy" or flattery, but it is an honest fact that I think "FORCE" Food is the most delectable breakfast dish I have ever tasted for its health-giving qualities. Its crispness and savory flavor is something new and unrivaled.

Yours very sincerely. —— ——

FAIRY GOLD

"A Woman's Vengeance," "Between Two Loves,"
"Her Second Love," "A Fatal Wedding," Etc.

Mrs. Sarjent's amethysts are the proverbial last straw, and Yoland's feeble hope of seeing the good lady attired for once in quiet and suitable apparel vanishes the instant she enters the drawing-room. Mrs. Sarjent, herself, as she sits on the centre lounge in an attitude of display, seems radiant with self-complacency. She is pleased to see her relatives again, she has a lot of gossip and news, and she is delighted at the idea of dining with a viscount.

Yolande kisses her, and greets her in a subdued manner, and says she hopes she is well.

"Wel l? Of course I'm well!" Mrs. Sarjent retorts jollily, in a deep contralto voice. "No one but idlers are always ill! When people are ill, they should go to bed and stay there, and send for the doctor, and get it over, and then forever afterwards hold their tongues about it." She spreads out her box-plaited flounces with much satisfaction and displays a pair of dress shoes with big gilt buckles and huge ankles covered with pink insertion lace-stockings. "You don't look up to much, child," she remarks, leaning back so that her amethysts almost disappear in the fleshy folds of her fat neck. "You will have to come down to me at Brighton next month. Your foreign trip hasn't done you a ha'p'orth of good; or you are pining after your Captain and his whiskers."

"Oh, aunt Sarjent, hush!" cries Yolande, turning crimson.

"There's nobody here," says Mrs. Sarjent coolly, noting the girl's blushes and tremor; "and if there was, we're not talking treason. Every one will have to know it some day, Yolande, you know."

"There is very little to know, aunt Sarjent,j' returns Yolande coolly.

"Oh, ay—of course!" — and Mrs. Sarjent nods her head knowingly. "I heard all about it, and how you fell in love with one another the first day you met, and all the rest of it! Law bless you, child, you needn't flush up to your ears like that!" Mrs. Sarjent exclaims, pointing at Yolande's little ears, all red and burning uncomfortably. "I was crazy about the red-coats when I was your age myself. Mad in love I was with a young lieutenant in the Marines. But your trustees will look sharp after him, Yolande," she adds, in a business-like manner, folding her arms—"mind that! An Honourable, isn't he? A nephew or a son of an earl — a wild fashionable military man — he'd make ducks and drakes of your thirty thousand pounds in a couple of years, my dear, if it wasn't tied down tight on yourself and children."

"Oh, aunt Sarjent, please don't talk in that manner!" Yolande pleads, trembling, and tears of shame and vexation welling into her eyes. "You are altogether mistaken if you are talking of Captain Glynne! He is not an Honourable, to begin with, and he is almost a stranger to me in the next place."

"And in the next place he has fallen head over heels in love with you and your fortune, and he'll marry you as sure as a gun, as soon as he gets the chance!" Mrs. Sarjent interrupts, putting the girl down with triumphant complacency. "I know the world a trifle better than you, my dear; and you'll have your young swell after you here in less than no time! He won't be such a fool as to lose the chance of a nice virtuous young wife with a handsome fortune—never fear. Your poor mother never thought, when she used to be fretting about not being able to buy new boots for you to go to school in, that you'd be a titled lady one day!"

"I am not a titled lady yet, at all events," Yolande says drily, her hot blushes fading in a pallor of emotion and chill disgust at Mrs. Sarjent's coarse speech.

"I don't think I ever saw or heard aunt Sarjent more vulgar or unpleasant than she is this evening," Yolande thinks, with a spasm of angry despair swelling in her breast.

"And, as for men above me in birth and position seeking me for my money, aunt Sarjent," she says aloud, with the dignity of insulted youth and purity in every outline of her pale young face and in the stern gaze of her passionate eyes. "I would not marry any man, even if I loved him dearly, unless he cared truly for myself. I would not, if I died for it!"

"Oh, stuff and nonsense!" Mrs. Sarjent retorts, with a chuckle of ridicule. "Young men nowadays can't think of marrying a girl without a halfpenny in her pocket, however fond of her they are! You can't expect your dashing Captain will be able to forget you have thirty thousand pounds, child! Of course he likes you; but he likes your money too — and small blame to him for it, I say!"

But Yolande repeats, with gleaming eyes, and the soft girlish face growing rigid as marble—

"I would not marry any man, even if I loved him dearly, unless I believed he loved me truly — not if I died for it!"

CHAPTER IX.

"Well, I don't think much of your Viscount!" Mrs. Sarjent announces decidedly, when she drives over to Fair View on the following afternoon.

Nobody has asked her how she liked the Viscount; but it was patent to anyone who chose to observe that between the self-assertive, vulgar, shrewd female partner in the firm of Sarjent & Son, jam and pickle manufacturers, and Lord Lyulph Glynne, not an atom of love was lost. For Viscount Glynne, languidly polite to every one, was rather icily polite to Mrs. Sarjent, and, altogether, made that bumptious, aggressive, opinionated lady feel snubbed and repressed for perhaps the first time in her life.

"I hope your Captain is nicer-looking than his cousin, Yolande," she says, with waggish ferocity. "I never saw such a leathery-jawed, blue-looking man in my born days!"

"He is a very excellent man, Wilmot, my dear," old Miss Dormer puts in reprovingly. "He is on half a score of charitable committees, and makes beautiful speeches at meetings and all that, and gives away prizes to working-girls, and—oh, I couldn't remember all the good work he does! I only hope"—with a sly little affectionate glance at Yolande—"that Captain Glynne is like his cousin in one respect. Viscount Glynne has a fine mi-end!" winds up aunt Keren, with her usual formula.

"Ahem!" Mrs. Sarjent retorts, in a very dissatisfied tone, tossing her head, which is loaded with a grand befeathered chapeau of crimson ostrich tips and gold-colored velvet which does not in the least match her gown of two shades of heliotrope satin and her sable shoulder-cape. "~~Very stuck-up~~! I call him! He never ate a thing on the table last night, and only put the wine to his lips!"

"He did not like the soup," Yolande says, in a distressed tone. "Cook did not make it right—she was rather flurried, poor thing! It was sticky, and not nicely flavored. I was so sorry!"

"Nor he didn't like the fish, nor he didn't like the roast goose, nor the beefsteak pie!" Mrs. Sarjent adds sarcastically. "I wouldn't allow any one to behave so at my table, aunt Keren, I can tell you!" she declares, turning to the elder lady, on whose cheeks a streak of nervous red is beginning to dawn. But this does not stop the irate lady, for she goes on, "There was food good enough for his betters on your table, and your stuck-up Viscount turned up his nose at everything!"

Poor Miss Dormer looks very uncomfortable.

"Brother likes him very much, at all events, Wilmot," Miss Dormer says deprecatingly. "He says the Viscount is a most affable gentleman, and so sensible! And how well he and your Wilmot get on!" she adds, brightening up as she thinks of a good argument. "Why they are all talking away together like old friends!"

"Yes; he wants 'em to put their money into the Pacific Salvage Company. He's a director. More fools they if they do!" Mrs. Sarjent says snappishly. "They'll lose every ha'penny if they do, and I've told Wilmot so!"

"My dear, they're going to pay twelve per cent., brother says!" argues Miss Dormer.

"Of course they are! I shouldn't be surprised if they said twenty per cent.!" retorts Mrs. Sarjent curtly.

"Yolande, ring for tea, please, dear!" aunt Keren says, in a meek tone of endurance, and then adds, "Ma'm'selle said she'd send it up some time ago. Take off your bonnet, Wilmot, won't you?"

"Yes; but I'm not going to stop long," Mrs. Sarjent answers, tossing off the grand beplumed head-gear which Miss Dormer calls a "bonnet," and tossing her fur cape and gloves after it. "And, as I am about finding fault," Mrs. Sarjent continues, getting good-humored as she discovers that she has succeeded in making others depressed and low-spirited, "I'll find fault with that fine French governess you've got for Yolande, aunt Keren. I wouldn't have her in my house for a thousand pounds!"

"Ma'm'selle!" Miss Dormer exclaims incredulously, now getting really displeased. "Really, Wilmot, you are in a mood for finding fault this afternoon! What fault can you find with poor ma'm'selle? A most obliging, clever, agreeable young lady we consider her. Such a nice mi-end, open to all good impressions!"

"I wouldn't have her in my house for a thousand pounds, I tell you!" repeats Mrs. Sarjent.

"Why, Wilmot liked her, aunt Sarjent!" Yolande exclaims, vexed and grieved enough to cry. "He said to me how he should like to be able to talk French as well and fluently as ma'm'selle!"

"Of course he did!" Mrs. Sarjent admits, her eyes and cheeks firing with sudden wrath. "Wilmot's a good boy, and a sensible, well-brought-up young man; but he's just as great a fool as any other man where an artful woman is concerned. That mademoiselle of yours would get round any man living if she only had a chance! Don't you have her in your house when you're married, Yolande, my dear!" warns Mrs. Sarjent, with motherly severity. "If you do, you'll sup sorrow. She's a snake!"

"A what, aunt Sarjent?" Yolande asks, in tones of mingled curiosity and horror.

"A snake in the grass," replies Mrs. Sarjent, with portentous meaning, looking around with a nod of assurance at the frightened faces. "You don't know what I saw."

"Well—what?" old Miss Dormer asks, half frightened, but sceptical.

"I saw her talking to Viscount Glynne for ever so long in the hall when you thought he was in the dining-room with uncle Silas and Wilmot!"

"Talking? Well really, Wilmot," begins Miss Dormer, bridling, with a displeased smile.

"Talking to him and smirking at him as free and easy as you please —standing up close to him, and looking up at him in the most forward manner!" declares Mrs. Sarjent.

"Well, but, after all, that isn't anything really bad, you know, Wilmot," urges Miss Dormer.

"Wait a bit till I've done, aunt Keren," Mrs. Sarjent says drily—"I've more to tell you. I had my eye on that fine French damsel all the evening. My goodness, how she does dress! What do you pay her?"

"Fifty pounds a year," aunt Keren replies bluntly. "It's a good deal of money, but not too much for a good French governess, as Mrs. Vavasor, the lady who was her last employer, said to me."

"One would think she had twice fifty to see the gown that was on her last night!" Mrs. Sarjent remarks, with much bitterness. "She'll never be satisfied with your small salary and your quiet house, aunt Keren," she continues; "I can see that with half an eye! She means to fly at high game, and she doesn't mind if she poaches either. Your Viscount's a married man, isn't he?"

"Yes—of course, Wilmot," Miss Dormer answers, trembling with alarm. "But I really don't think you ought to talk so before Yolande."

"A nice moral married man he is then! I pity his wife!" Mrs. Sarjent says, with self-satisfied malignity. "And it's quite proper. Yolande should be here, aunt Keren, since she's going to marry into the family—it's my duty to tell her as well as you what I saw."

"What?" they both ejaculate, and draw their chairs closer, and hold their breath, poor Yolande pale with dread of she knows not what.

"Perhaps you don't look at things in the same light as I do, aunt Keren," she says severely—"perhaps you don't see anything very improper in it! I consider it immoral to be chucked under the chin!"

"Wh-at!" aunt Keren ejaculates huskily, dropping her spectacles.

"Chucked under the chin!" Mrs. Sarjent repeats tragically, rising to her feet in the excitement of the occasion. "I saw with my own two eyes that precious nobleman-friend of yours chuck that French governess of yours under the chin!"

The "tic-tac" of the clock on the mantel-shelf sounds loudly in the dead silence that follows this frightful statement.

"I can't believe it!" Miss Dormer exclaims, with almost a groan.

"And I always thought," Yolande says, in a choking voice, "that mademoiselle was such a very modest, shy girl!"

* * * * * *

"I want to tell you something, cherie," mademoiselle says that same night, coming into Yolande's room very softly in her trailing crimson cashmere dressing-gown lavishly ruched with frayed crimson silk. "I don't think there is really any need that I should speak of it, dear," she continues in a meek tone, watching Yolande through her eyelashes; "but it might not be strictly honourable to you and dear Miss Dormer not to tell you, who have been such kind, good, dear friends! Viscount Glynne spoke to me for a few minutes last night in the hall. What a good, kind, fatherly man he is," ademoiselle observes, in feeling tones that made Yolande dreadfully ashamed of herself—"so especially kind and considerate to me, because he thinks I am in the position of a dependent! That shows the true gentleman, doesn't it, cherie?"

"Yes," murmurs Yolande, tangling her thick brown tresses instead of combing them out.

"Well," pursues mademoiselle, in a smiling confidential manner, "as he saw me crossing the hall, he spoke to me in his kind friendly way, and then he asked me if I could recommend him—fancy, poor me—recommend him some kind lady-like person as a nurse and personal attendant on poor dear Lady Maria — the Viscountess — who is such a sufferer, you know, dear."

GREAT ALTERATION SALE

For the last year we have been inconvenienced considerably for want of space to show our goods, that our business has grown no one will doubt, and in order to keep pace with its rapid growth we must have more room.

To-day the carpenters will remove our rear store and begin work in earnest. The plumbers are with us busy at their part of the job. We have had to remove all our goods in the rear of the cellar and the front part of our store is also to receive special up-to-date touches. What we ask is that the people of Belleville and vicinity will aid us in getting rid of our crowded stock, and for this end we will hold two weeks sale, goods will be sold so cheap that it will startle the whole community.

Come early. Goods sold out will not be replaced during alterations.

THE UNCERTAINTY OF LIFE

SUDDEN DEATH OF JOHN GIBSON, CHERRY VALLEY.

(Picton Gazette).

Again we are reminded of the uncertainty of life by the sudden summons which came to John Gibson, Cherry Valley, who dropped dead in the arms of H. S. Miller, at the Queen's hotel, about six o'clock on Thursday evening. He had arrived in town about an hour previously, being, apparently, in his usual good health, and put up at the Queen's hotel. He had been in conversation with Mr. Miller, the conversation turning upon the approaching band excursion to Watertown, N.Y., and was passing from one apartment to another, when the deceased called for assistance, and was caught by Mr. Miller, but gradually sank to the floor. Dr. Philip was telephoned for, and quickly responded, but on his arrival pronounced death due to heart disease. The deceased was about sixty or sixty-five years of age, and leaves a wife, one son, Dr. James Gibson, in Western Ontario, and a daughter, Ethel, at home.

QUESTION ANSWERED.

Yes, August Flower still has the largest sale of any medicine in the civilized world. Your mothers and grandmothers never thought of using anything else for Indigestion or Biliousness. Doctors were scarce, and they seldom heard of Appendicitis, Nervous Prostration or Heart Failure, etc. They used August Flower to clean out the system and stop fermentation of undigested food, regulate the action of the liver, stimulate the nervous and organic action of the system, and that is all they took when feeling dull and bad with headaches and other aches. You only need a few doses of Green's August Flower, in liquid form, to make you satisfied there is nothing serious the matter with you. You can get this reliable remedy at R. Templeton & Co.'s.

DAY OF IMPROVEMENTS

NATHAN JONES.

ALTERATION SALE

Many improvements are under way on Front St. and we are in the procession. Carpenters, painters, masons and paper hangers are at work and when through our store will present a fine, modern appearance. In the meantime we are topsy turvy, but in it all we will hold an "alteration sale."

SPECIAL BARGAINS

We reduce prices on Muslins, Ginghams, Percales, Galateas, etc., to clear them out. Ginghams that were 12½c and 15c for 10c. A lot of nice Percales to go at 10c. Bargains will be found in every department during this "Alteration Sale."

Toronto Mystery Has Deepened

Last Man Seen With Whalley Missing Since Monday.

Alleged to Have Told a Companion That Poison Might Keep Him Away from Work—Parents Think He Has Met With Foul Play.

Toronto, August 13. — The gloom surrounding the Evans mystery has deepened. A fifth has been added to the chain of mysterious circumstances which centre at the warehouse on Front St.

The young man Arnott White, who was the assistant of Whalley, the shipper, found dead in the basement of the warehouse on July 19th, has been missing since Monday evening.

He worked as usual on Monday, and left a few minutes after six o'clock. Two of his fellow-employes walked up town with him and saw him board a car at King and Yonge streets.

White did not go home that night, and his parents were at a loss to know where he had gone. White's father went to the warehouse yesterday morning, but could find out nothing to throw light on the whereabouts of his son.

Charles Doherty, one of the Evans employes, who was with White just before he got on the Yonge St. car, stated White had used these words to him on Monday morning: —

"If I don't turn up in the morning it is poison that will be the cause of it."

Doherty, however, said he paid little attention to the statement at the time, thinking White was simply joking.

White's parents, who live at 34 Carlyle St., have heard nothing of their son since he left the house on Monday morning. The father, David L. White, is a conductor on the Grand Trunk Railway. The distracted mother, when seen by The Mail and Empire last night, said Arnott had not even hinted that he intended leaving the city, but she and the rest of the family thought it possible that he might have gone to Chicago, thinking ex-Manager Ragg, who went there recently, and of whom Arnott was a great admirer, might give him a job. That he should go without saying anything at home about it she could not understand, unless it was that he feared they would object to his going.

On Monday morning, while he was at the breakfast table, Mrs. White said she had gone upstairs, remarking to him that she would be down in a minute. "I'll be gone when you come down," had been his reply. She had repeated that she would be down in a minute. But he seemed in a great hurry, and before she got down again he was going out the front door, and shouting upstairs "Good-bye, ma and pa." Those were the last words she had heard him utter.

Had No Clothes Packed.

Young White had no clothes packed up, and he had never spoken of any intention to leave the employ of Evans and Son, with whom he had been for about nineteen months, although he had expressed some dissatisfaction because of the recent strange events there. His mother said he had always been a very dutiful son. He is 18 years old. He was a great reader, and seldom went out with other boys, preferring to stay at home with his books. In this respect he was different from his five brothers. On Saturday night he did not get home until 11.30, which was an unusually late hour for him. He had been out at Etobicoke during the day, and replying to his mother's question said he had had a good time. On Sunday he had been to church, morning and evening.

About His Pay.

Mr. White, sr., said yesterday his son had expressed some dissatisfaction at not receiving his pay on Saturday on account of it being a bank holiday, but as a matter of fact, White got his pay on Friday evening. Foreman Scott stated this emphatically when seen by The Mail and Empire last evening. He had been authorized by Manager Spencer to make this statement, and that White was not suspected by the firm as having anything to do with the burglary or any of the other unaccountable events at the warehouse.

White got four dollars a week. On Monday last he drew one dollar on account.

White at the Inquest.

Arnott White was the last man seen with Whalley before his death. In giving his evidence at the inquest he first stated that he had left Whalley and another employe, Gilbart, in the basement, washing their hands. Later Gilbart swore that when he and White were leaving the basement together, White turned back and went downstairs again. White, recalled, said the matter had slipped his memory when giving his evidence. He recollected that he had turned back to put up an order which he had forgotten. This would occupy about three minutes of his time. White was cross-questioned at some length as to the time he last saw Whalley. He asserted positively it was 1.20, although another employe swore White had told him it was 1.30.

It was White, too, who made the statement that Geen, about 9 o'clock on the morning of the day he was found dead in the warehouse, had said to him in a jocular manner: "By Jove, I believe I'm poisoned." White did not mention this at the inquest, although asked whether he knew of any circumstance that might throw light on the case, and only admitted it later after ex-Manager Ragg had in an interview mentioned that White had made such a statement to him. He explained that he had not mentioned it on the witness stand, because he was not asked the question, and did not attach much importance to it.

Why Should He Leave?

Just what could have induced Arnott White to leave his family and a good position so mysteriously is puzzling the police, as well as all those interested in the case. If he was guilty of participating in the attempted burglary of May 30 at the warehouse and feared detection, a motive would be supplied. While the police are satisfied that some of the employes of the place are implicated in this attack on the safe, they have never suspected this young fellow. They have, however, had an idea that White and several others employed around the building have not told all they know about this case, as well as other phases of the mystery. To this end they have questioned Arnott White very carefully.

Sunday's World contained the information that Detective Slemin had spent the entire previous Sunday afternoon questioning Arnott White as to details of the case and other facts about the affair, in which the statement was made that the officers expected to make an arrest shortly. It is not altogether improbable that young White knew of these facts, and knew that some of his companions were suspected. Many have believed that White knew a good deal about the acts of other employes on which he might have cast light and helped the police out. The fact that he has suppressed this knowledge and the fear that he might be involved in any exposure that might occur may have accounted for his determination to leave the city secretly. He is known as a very cool, determined young fellow and was very secretive. It is unlikely that he would have involved any of his companions by furnishing information of their wrong-doing, even if he had been familiar with the facts. He is that sort of a boy.

Another Phase.

Another phase of the case is that the young fellow has been brooding over the mysterious deaths of his two companions, and that he was to intimately connected with them that he concluded to go away secretly and avoid the whole annoying thing. He was the last man to see Geen and Whalley before death, and during the past six weeks the dismal subject has furnished the whole conversation among the employes of the warehouse.

The World reporter has had several talks with Arnott White on the mysterious affair. His conduct has always been absolutely free and candid and his manner ever that of one with nothing to conceal. He has answered all questions and seemed more than willing to tell all that he knew.

Bears a Good Name.

Manager Spencer gives the boy a good name and says he has never been suspected of wrong doing. He appeared to be working as usual Monday and the boys around the place did not observe anything unusual about him as he left them Monday evening. He is at a loss to account for the boy's conduct.

The missing boy is 18 years old, is about five feet three inches tall, smooth shaven, rather full face and wore, when he left home, an old, stiff hat and a blue serge suit, without a vest. He has a habit of wearing his hat rather down over his face, which shields his eyes. He wore a standing collar and dark tie when he left home.

When Edgar Geen died, June 7, White became Whalley's assistant, and when Whalley died he became assistant to Doherty, the man who was placed in the basement in charge of the shipping department.

The possibilities are that Arnott White's disappearance is directly or otherwise connected with the other exciting details that have centred recently around the Front-street warehouse.

Managing Director Evans of the Montreal end of the firm will arrive from Europe Aug. 15, and it was stated by a prominent representative of the firm a day or so ago that Mr. Evans has been advised to offer five hundred dollars' reward for information that will clear up the mystery surrounding these cases. It is anticipated that he will do something of this kind.

TRENTON PEOPLE IN TROUBLE

WOULD NOT CHANGE AT KINGSTON FROM THE ALETHA TO THE RIVAL.

Kingston News:—There was a lively time at Swift's dock yesterday afternoon about 5.15, when the owner of the steamer Aletha wanted to transfer the passengers on that steamer to his latest purchase, the "Rival." The people who did not want to change boats were excursionists from Trenton. Yesterday morning the steamer Aletha ran an excursion from Trenton to the Thousand Island Park in connection with the Methodist church at the western town. There were about 250 people on board and everything went lovely till shortly after five, when the steamer arrived at Swift's dock. The steamer Rival was lying at the dock and as the steamer Aletha was needed for an excursion at Brockville to-day, Capt. Royes wanted the excursionists to transfer on to the Rival. The excursionists did not like the looks of the Rival, which has not yet been fitted out for an excursion boat, and does not look as inviting as the Aletha. The people refused to obey the demand of the captain and were backed up by the minister who was in charge of the excursion. The captain threatened to bring the excursionists to Brockville if they did not change steamers, but the clergyman stood his ground and told his flock not to desert the ship, that he would stand up for their rights. Some of the excursionists went over to the Rival and a few stayed in the city, and about one hundred and fifty remained on board the Aletha. About 5.30 the Aletha started for Brockville with the Trenton people on board. There must have been a lively debate between the excursionists and the chief officer of the steamer, for about seven o'clock a long blast from a steamer in the distance was heard and those on the wharf saw the Aletha heading for the Bay of Quinte with full steam on. What she did with her passengers after she passed up the bay would be hard to say, for about 9.30 she was in port again. It is likely that the Trenton people finished their journey on the Rival.

The passengers which the steamer Aletha left behind in the city had an interesting time of it last night. Some were out of money and friendless. It was not long before the telephone was buzzing between Kingston and Trenton and the belated people from up the bay arranged with their friends at home to send down some coin. Others found friends in the city and were given a warm welcome. Many of the visitors went around the city in cabs, others visited Macdonald Park and listened to the splendid concert given by the 14th Regiment band, while a few went to Trenton by train.

THE LAST OF THEM.

We are just finishing up the last of those soft front shirts at the Oak Hall. The season is getting well along and no more soft goods will be purchased for this season's trade. The price to clear this particular lot is only 39 cents, and we only have a few left.

SAD AFFAIR AT DESERONTO

YOUNG LIFE LOST BECAUSE PEOPLE WERE IGNORANT OF PRINCIPLES OF RESUSCITATION.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Deseronto, August 12.

A very sad affair occurred on Monday afternoon, when a young lad named Charley Luffman, 8 years of age, who was out fishing near the Chemical Works, was drowned. The saddest part of the affair is that the lad's life could have been saved if the people who were there when he was taken out of the water had known what to do. He was in the water ten minutes, and it took the Doctor ten minutes to reach him after he was taken from the water. The little fellow's mouth was full of potatoes, that he had eaten for his dinner, and the Doctor said if they had kept his mouth clear until he arrived he might probably have saved his life. The unfortunate affair has cast a gloom over the village.

The Late Miss Nightingale

The funeral of the late Miss Florence Nightingale, which took place from the family residence, Huff's Island, yesterday, was largely attended. Services were held at the house and the church at Mountain View, being conducted by the Rev. D. F. Bogert of this city. Many floral tributes were placed on the casket by relatives and friends. The bearers were six cousins of the deceased.

Firemen Out for a Run

The ringing of the fire bell at No. 2 fire hall last evening and the rapid run of the reels down Front street led many to believe that a fire was in progress. Such, however, proved not to be the case. It was simply to give the men and horses some exercise. The hose were attached to a couple of hydrants on Coleman street and the streams thrown were excellent, showing that in case of emergency everything was in perfect working order. The large extension ladder was run up against Christ church and reached the top of the tower.

CROPS ARE SATISFACTORY

Department of Agriculture Has Issued Encouraging Report.

The Yield of Fall Wheat Fair to Large, With an Average Yield Above the Average For the Past Twenty Years—Rain Has Caused Some Trouble—Complaints From Farmers Regarding the Scarcity of Labor.

Toronto, Aug. 13. — The Ontario Department of Agriculture has issued an encouraging bulletin regarding the crops of the province, based on the reports of its regular correspondents. It says that June was an exceptionally cool month, being 5 degrees below the average. The rainfall of July was more than double the general average.

The yield of fall wheat has been from fair to large, except in Essex and most of the counties in the Lake Erie group. In several instances from 35 to 40 bushels have been reported and the average yield will be considerably above the average for the last twenty years. There will be an abundance of straw. The crop of spring wheat is expected to be a good one, both in point of yield and quality. The barley crop is generally good and there will be a large yield of plump grain.

This promises to be one of the best years on record for oats, both as regards grain and straw. Cutting will not be general until next week and perhaps later.

The rye crop has turned out very well this season, notwithstanding the unusual amount of rain, which has somewhat affected all cereals.

Irregular Pea Crop.

The yield of the pea crop generally is one of the most irregular on record. From some quarters splendid reports have been received, while from others the crop is not worth cutting.

Wet weather has played havoc with the bean crop.

The indications are that the corn crop will be considerably below the average, owing to cold weather in the earlier part of the season and excessive rains.

Hay and clover and grasses of all kinds made an immense growth this year, but where grown for hay the wet weather told against the crop in both cutting and curing.

The prospects are favorable for a large yield of potatoes.

The rains have had a very injurious effect on the tobacco crop, and also upon root crops generally. There has been but little damage from insect pests. Mangels, turnips and beets will, however, be plentiful. The sugar beet crop will be satisfactory.

Favorable reports are to hand regarding flax and hops.

Plenty of Fruit.

Apples promise to yield very well and there will be lots of peaches and pears, but the reports as to cherries are not so encouraging. Grapes will not be plentiful.

The rain has kept pasture in prime condition and consequently live stock is everywhere in fine, healthy shape. The season's output of cheese and butter will be heavy. Reports as to honey are on the whole favorable.

The scarcity of labor during the haying and harvesting seasons is a chronic complaint in all sections of the province, and the present season offers no exception in this respect. Extra help appears to have been difficult to obtain almost everywhere and wages have had decidedly an upward tendency. There are numerous complaints as to the quality of the labor obtainable.

Interesting Statistics.

The following are the crop estimates for 1902, as judged from appearances on August 1. The acreages are final, but the yields (except in the case of hay) will be revised from actual threshing results in November.

Fall wheat shows an area of 748,593 acres harvested, the estimated yield being 19,356,056 bushels, or 25.9 bushels per acre. In 1901 the yield from 911,587 acres was 15,943,239 bushels, or 17.5 bushels per acre. The average yield for the past 20 years was 20 bushels per acre.

Spring wheat: 303,115 acres and 5,993,695 bushels, or 19.8 per acre. In 1901 358,048 yielded 5,498,751 bushels or 15.4 per acre, the average of the past 20 years being 15.5.

Barley: 661,622 acres and 21,281,108 bushels, or 32.2 per acre. In 1901 637,201 yielded 16,761,076 bushels, or 26.3 per acre, the average of the 20 years being 26.1.

Oats: 2,500,758 and 105,540,510 bushels, or 43.2 per acre. In 1901 there were 2,408,264 acres yielding 78,334,490 bushels, or 32.5 per acre, the average for 20 years being 34.8.

Rye: 189,318 acres and 3,686,476 bushels, or 19.5 per acre. In 1901 there were 158,236 acres yielding 2,545,268 bushels, or 16.1 per acre, the average for the 20 years being 16.2

Peas: 533,629 acres and 11,363,245 bushels, or 21.3 per acre. In 1901 there were 602,724 acres yielding 10,089,175 bushels, or 16.7 per acre, the average for the 20 years being 19.6.

Beans: 53,964 acres and 632,099 bushels, or 11.7 per acre. In 1901 there were 53,688 acres yielding 824,122 bushels, or 15.4 per acre. The average of 20 years was 17.3.

Hay and clover: 2,646,202 acres and 4,955,438 tons, or 1.87 per acre, as compared with 1.81 in 1901, and 1.40 for 20 years.

Other crops: corn for husking, 371,959; corn for silo, 209,859; buckwheat, 93,324; potatoes, 144,733; mangels, 76,553; carrots, 8,625; turnips, 136,725; rape, 49,573; flax, 7,401; hops, 2,237; tobacco, 2,961; orchard, 356,251; vineyard, 14,028; red clover for seed, 135,390; alsike, 51,185.

Apples: 7,024,890 trees of bearing age are estimated to yield 41,174,552 bushels, or nearly 6 bushels per tree.

500 Acres of Flax.

Windsor, Aug. 13.—Some time ago a company located in Strathroy, Ont., purchasing 500 acres at a venture, and erected a flax mill at Essex. The first crop has been harvested, and experts pronounce it the finest flax grown in Canada.

Honey Plentiful.

Toronto, Aug. 13.—Reports from nearly every section of Ontario go to show that the present season has been one of the best in many years for honey. Present prospects are that prices will be much lower than for several seasons.

Splendid For Ripening.

Winnipeg, Man., Aug. 13.—Yesterday's weather report received at the Grain Exchange from along the lines of the C.P.R. indicates that no frost had been experienced in the 24 hours previous to 8 o'clock yesterday morning. Broadview, Brandon, Estevan and Napinka all report cool weather. Yesterday was very hot and splendid for ripening.

CANADA'S JULY TRADE.

Imports and Exports Compared With Those of July Last Year.

Ottawa, Aug. 13. — The Customs Department has prepared a statement of the imports and exports for the month of July, compared with the same month last year. The figures are as follows:

	1901.	1902.
Imports.
Dutiable goods ...	$8,284,112	$ 8,987,688
Free goods	5,260,057	8,987,688

Great Forgeries at Warsaw.

London, Aug. 13.—A despatch to The Daily Mail from St. Petersburg reports the discovery at Warsaw of a wholesale manufactory of forged bank notes and postage stamps, which had been flourishing for the last four years. Enormous numbers of £50 notes have been put in circulation, and the national banks, according to the correspondent, have cashed $2,000,000 worth of forged paper. The private losses as a result of the forgeries amount to $45,000. The leaders of the forgers have been arrested.

Great Singers Festival.

Waterloo, Ont., Aug. 13.—The great combined Saengerfest of the Lake Erie and Canadian Sangerbunds was opened here yesterday morning. The weather was all that could be desired and the town is one mass of flags, bunting and arches. Last evening the reception concert at the skating rink was the chief attraction. The attendance was estimated at 2,500. To-day the Saengerfest proper begins.

Aftermath of an Election.

Kingston, Aug. 13. — A writ has been served on William Carey of this city, at the instance of George Smith, Portland, on behalf of J. S. Gallagher, candidate-elect in Frontenac. The plaintiff charges that the defendant voted at No. 5 sub-division, Kingston Township, without having the necessary qualifications, and being fully aware of it. The full penalty of $700 is asked.

King Refused to Pardon.

Windsor, Aug. 13.—It is reported that two officers of the Second Life Guards have been ordered to resign because they were concerned in the hazing of a more studious fellow officer, recently.

Influential relatives of the officers, it is said, have petitioned the King to pardon the offenders, but His Majesty has emphatically refused to do so.

The Manufacturers' Convention

Halifax, N.S., Aug. 13.—The members of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, accompanied by ladies, arrived by special train of 11 coaches last evening. They number nearly 200. The first regular meeting, which will take place in the Legislative Council Chamber, will be held this forenoon.

Loss $67,000.

Toronto, Aug. 13.—The stock, plant and premises of the Toronto Biscuit and Confectionary Company on the south side of Front street, between Yonge and Scott streets, were almost completely ruined by fire last night. The loss is $67,000, fully covered by insurance.

Says: "God Bless You All" to 2,000 Colonial Troops.

His Majesty Inspected and Reviewed the Colonials From the Terrace—H.R.H. the Prince of Wales Presents the Coronation Medals—The Queen, Earl Roberts, Lord Kitchener and Rt. Hon. Joseph Chamberlain Were Present.

London, Aug. 13.— Two thousand Colonial troops here to attend the Coronation, including the Canadian contingent, were reviewed by King Edward yesterday on the grounds of Buckingham Palace. The Prince of Wales, on behalf of His Majesty, distributed the coronation medals to those entitled to them.

The King inspected the troops from the terrace, where he was accompanied by Queen Alexandra, Prince and Princess Henry of Prussia, and other royal personages, Earl Roberts, the Commander-in-Chief, Gen. Lord Kitchener, Joseph Chamberlain, several Colonial Premiers, and King Lewarnike of Barotzeland, all of whom showed keen interest in the picturesque body of men arrayed in vari-colored uniforms as they marched past in single file.

The King personally fastened the Victoria Cross on the breast of Sergeant Lawrence, the first man in line, after which he retired to the shade of an awning and left the distribution to the Prince of Wales.

The members of the royal family were much amused at the unconventionality of the colonials, who after they had received medals seated themselves comfortably on the grass and smoked as they watched the decoration of their comrades.

When all had received their medals, the troops advanced and presented arms, while the massed bands played the National Anthem. The King stepped forward and delivered an animated address, which was greeted with cheers and waving of hats by the troops.

The King said: "It has afforded me great pleasure to see you here to-day and to have the opportunity of expressing my high appreciation of your patriotism and the way you distinguished yourselves in South Africa. The services you have rendered the mother country will never be forgotten by me, and they will, I am sure, cement more firmly than ever the union of our distant colonies with the other parts of my great empire.

"Your stay in England has been longer than originally intended, owing to my illness, but perhaps you have enjoyed it and derived pleasure from visits to various parts of the land of your ancestors. God bless you all. I wish you a safe and pleasant return to your own countries."

Canadians at the Review.

Col. Turner and the Canadian contingent, though camped with the Australians, showed up well individually at the King's review yesterday, but the variety of their uniforms rather destroyed the general effect.

Repeatedly the question was asked: "Where are the Canadians?" even when they were passing. The troops first marched single file past the King, who was seated under a canopy, with the Queen and the children of the Prince of Wales. The King returned each man's salute smilingly. The little Princes were delighted. The Prince of Wales handed each man a coronation medal, shaking hands with Col. Turner.

Queen Alexandra left the canopy and moved among the guests, shaking hands with Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Lady Laurier, Sir Frederick Borden and Lady Borden and the other Canadians present. King Edward looked somewhat fatigued and limped slightly. Everyone will be glad to learn that he will get away for a holiday in the Highlands after the naval review.

From the King's Own Hands.

London, Aug. 13.—His Majesty the King, invited the Colonial Premiers to Buckingham Palace yesterday at 4 o'clock. From his own hands they received the gold medal struck to commemorate the occasion.

Queen Presents Medals.

London, Aug. 13.— Queen Alexandra presented war medals Monday afternoon in the grounds of Devonshire House to doctors, nurses and others in the Imperial Yeomanry hospital service. The Prince of Wales and other royalties accompanied the Queen.

The King thanks you sincerely for your kind telegram of congratulations. Knolly's.

Parents Saw Them Drowned.

Atlantic City, N.J., Aug. 13.—Daniel Angeli, aged 8 years, and Oscar Angeli, aged 12, brothers, of Philadelphia, were drowned in the surf yesterday, while bathing. Their parents watched the Life Guards making a heroic, but unsuccessful, attempt at rescue.

Dundonald's Movements.

Ottawa, Aug. 13.—Lord Dundonald will visit Quebec this week, and will inspect the garrison at that place. While in Quebec he will call on Lord Minto, and is expected to return here early next week.

A Little Coal Goes A Long Way towards heating a house if fed into a Furnace made to heat—one which does not send the fuel up the chimney in smoke.

'Sunshine' Furnaces

will extract more heat from a unit of coal than any other good Furnace.

Every square inch from the bottom of fire-pot to top of dome is a direct radiating surface.

The dome is made of heavy steel-plate, which makes it a more effective heater than the cast-iron dome put in common Furnaces.

The "Sunshine" has every improved feature and still is so simple that any person can operate it.

WHAT IS THE FLAG?

ALL OVER THE EMPIRE ARE MISTAKES MADE IN ITS FLYING.

A Puzzling Question Satisfactorily Settled—The National Flag—When and How It Should Be Flown—Blunders in Flag Making—Flag Lore That Is Intensely Interesting Just at the Present Juncture.

The flag of England, of Britain, is flown all over the Empire, and yet in this flying there are many mistakes made. The Pall Gazette thinks so, and in a recent issue has an article which must interest all who fly the flag in Canada.

"What is the flag of England? Winds of the world declare," is the question with which Mr. Kipling starts one of his patriotic poems. If the winds that blow over London were asked to give their impression as to the answer, during these days of peace celebrations and coronation rejoicings, they would be rather puzzled to reply.

For the average Londoner, alike in St. James' and St. Giles', appears to be in hopeless bewilderment as to the national flag. He is not so sure which flag he ought to display. He is often utterly at sea as to how it ought to be made and how it ought to be hoisted. He flies the flag of other peoples under the mistaken impression that he is hanging out the British colors. He makes unwittingly signals that move the seafaring man who can read them to a quiet laugh at the ignorance of mere landsmen. It is strange that such things should happen in the capital of a race of sailors and travelers, for whom every flag should have a distinct and well known significance.

First of all, there is a widespread misuse of a purely personal flag, the Royal Standard, which many otherwise well-informed people suppose to be that of the nation. If Sir Gorgius Midas were to quarter on his carriage panels the Lions of England, the Red Lion Rampant of Scotland, and the Irish Harp, everyone would think he had taken leave of his senses. When he flies the same heraldic device from the flagstaff on the roof of his stately mansion it is not regarded as an eccentricity on his part. But it is almost as bad as displaying the Royal Arms on his carriage or putting his servants into the royal liveries.

The Royal Standard is the King of England's banner and denotes his actual presence as Sovereign where it is flown. Thus it is not hoisted even on a royal palace unless he is in residence. It is displayed from the flagstaff of the parade when he is reviewing his troops. It is run up by a warship as he comes on board. Even the ambassadors who represent him abroad do not fly his flag. It is purely personal, like the golden yellow standard marked with a broad black cross and decorated with eagles and Imperial crowns, which in Germany denotes the Kaiser's presence, and which no German ever mistakes for the national flag. Our own Royal Standard should not be vulgarized in the present unmeaning fashion.

The national flag, the flag of the Kingdom and the Empire, is—to give it its popular name—the Union Jack. There are various flags of which it forms only a part and which are used for special purposes. It is a common mistake to take these for the national flag.

Among these are, first, the White Ensign with the Union in its top corner near the flagstaff or halyard, and the great red cross on a white ground—the cross that marked the flag of England in crusading days and in the wars of the Middle Ages. This red cross is still the central device of the Union flag.

The White Ensign is the flag of our navy. In the same way the Red Ensign is the flag of our merchant marine. To fly the White or Red Ensign on a house is rather unmeaning. What one ought to fly is the Union Jack, more correctly called the Union flag, but then one must take care to get the real thing and hoist it right side up.

Most of the flags imported from abroad, and many of those made in England, blunder about the right combination of the three crosses. On both sides of the central red cross of St. George there is the same width of white bunting or silk, but the X-shaped red cross of St. Patrick has not the white that shows on both sides of it of equal width. On the side nearest the halyards it is broad above the red and narrow below, and this arrangement is reversed on the other side of the flag, the explanation being that the red cross is here superposed unevenly on the white cross of St. Andrew, so that the Scottish emblem may not form a mere even border to it. To neglect this difference alters the whole appearance of the flag. But those who thus blunder err in distinguished company.

When General Baden-Powell designed a poster some years ago for a military tournament he made St. Andrew's cross into a mere even white border for St. Patrick's. When Sir G. Robertson and the gallant little garrison of Chitral improvised a Union Jack to fly over their beleaguered fort they made the same mistake. When after the relief it was pointed out to them that such a flag, being the same which ever way it was hoisted, could not be reversed as a signal of distress, Sir George replied that they never thought of its use for such a purpose being in any way necessary. Mr. Punch, who as a rule is scrupulously accurate in matters of detail, drew the Union Jack in the same incorrect fashion a couple of weeks ago. To come down to lesser folk, several firms of decorators are now circulating in London illustrated price lists, with the national flag thus misrepresented. It is a very common mistake to hoist the correct flag upside down, thus signalling "In distress. Want assistance." And it is also to be seen, on some London houses, flying with a broad white border. This is another special signal flag, "I want a pilot," flown by ships nearing home.

By the way, Mr. Kipling, who one would think the last man to make such a slip, writes in "Stalky and Co." of a coaster in distress flying the Union Jack reversed as a signal for help. Of course a merchantman in such a position reverses the Red Ensign.

As red, white, and blue are the colors in the Union Jack, there seems to be a vague impression in many quarters that any combination of these colors may be flown, if a Union Jack, Red or White Ensign, pilot flag, or signal of distress is not handy. Hence the display of so many foreign tri-colors, the familiar French flag, the Dutch flag with its bands of color horizontal, and occasionally the flag of the Russian merchant marine. This last is probably the result of the misguided energy of some amateur flag-maker, who sews three strips of bunting together, white at the top, blue in the middle, and red at the bottom. No doubt some few of the French and Dutch flags are hoisted by foreign residents. But most of them are used merely because they are "red, white, and blue." There is no disposition to fly foreign flags as such in London. Otherwise, how are we to account for the absence of a flag once popular in schemes of decoration, the handsome "Dannebrog," the flag of our Queen's native land? And why is there such a marked absence of the showy red and white flag of our ally, Japan? In much traveling about London we have only seen one solitary specimen of this flag.

Kidney Troubles of Women.

Dr. Pitcher's Backache Kidney Tablets the Most Successful Treatment of Kidney Ailments That Cause Women Untold Suffering.

There are so many women suffering from backache, headache, dragging pain in the loins, and weary, worn-out feelings, who attribute all their troubles to some form of "female complaint." Nine cases out of ten the kidneys are at fault, and the poisons which these organs should filter out of the blood are circulating through the system and making havoc with the health.

No woman can enjoy good health and be free from pain whose kidneys are not acting properly.

No woman whose kidneys are out of order can afford to delay one day in procuring Dr. Pitcher's Backache Kidney Tablets.

No other medicine ever received such overwhelming endorsation from the women of Canada.

AS A LAST RESORT.

Mrs. May Goddard, 332 Adelaide Street West, Toronto, whose portrait appears on the opposite column, speaks in the following terms:

"After enjoying the most perfect health for many years it was a sore trial for me to realize that my health was failing. I had, in the first place, acute pains in the small of my back, and was losing flesh rapidly. Then other complications arose, which so weakened me that it was only with the greatest amount of determination that I could attend to my work. I tried a number of remedies and consulted several physicians without obtaining more than temporary relief, and as a last resort I thought I would try Dr. Pitcher's Backache Kidney Tablets. Their beneficial action was almost instantaneous, and the results highly gratifying. The pain in my back disappeared in a short time, and my general health improved greatly. I am now feeling fine, and am glad to have this opportunity of expressing my appreciation of so valuable a remedy."

BACKACHE AND HEADACHE.

Mrs. A. Craigie, Lighthouse Street, Goderich, Ont., relates her experience:

"For some time I suffered with a good deal of backache and kidney trouble, and with a severe headache which continued to grow worse. I heard of the many cures Dr. Pitcher's Backache Kidney Tablets were making and determined to try them I procured a bottle from our druggist, Mr. P. M. Dunham, and they acted splendidly, stopping the backache and headache and curing the kidney complaint. I strongly recommend these Tablets to any one suffering as I did."

Mrs. John Wiseman, Woodham Street, St. Mary's, Ont., says: "During a recent sharp attack of lumbago, due to exposure to cold, I used Dr. Pitcher's Backache Kidney Tablets with complete relief. I did not use the entire bottle, which speaks well for their ability to cure backache kidney troubles."

Judges of Live Stock.

Toronto, Aug. 13.—The idea of the Department of Agriculture to furnish judges for the live stock at the different agricultural fairs throughout the province promises to be productive of good results, inasmuch as fifty-eight agricultural societies have taken advantage of the offer. The fairs have been arranged in circuits of from two to three weeks and three judges will visit each fair. Before starting out on their circuits the judges will take a course of training at the Toronto Exhibition. In making their awards they will be supposed to give their reasons, in order that the exhibitor may be thoroughly satisfied with the decisions.

Strike in Bowmanville.

Bowmanville, Aug. 13.—One hundred and 35 members of the local union of amalgamated wood workers decided last night to go one strike. They are employed by the Dominion Piano Company. The men demand recognition of the union and a twenty per cent. increase in wages. The company is willing to meet the men individually, but not as a union. Organizer Moore has been here for two days.

IGNORANT OF GEOGRAPHY.

How a German Put Posers to an American Girl.

"A thing about Americans which has surprised me more than anything else," said a German artist who has been visiting in New York city for six months past, "is that with all your patriotism you know so little about the geography of your own country, to say nothing of the rest of the world."

There were several Americans in the circle, and they looked rather surprised. None of the men spoke. They knew that they were weak in geography and that here was a challenge which would have to pass.

Not so a bright young woman of twenty, who rushed into the breach with her head in the air.

"We do know the geography of our country," she said decidedly. "Of course we do. Every child learns it in school."

"Might I ask you a question or two?" the foreigner said quietly. "The names of the capitals of some of your states, for instance?"

"Certainly. I'll be glad to answer." And she nodded confidently at the young American man who was already beginning to fear for her.

"What is the capital of Massachusetts?" was his first question.

"Boston!" was the prompt answer from the girl.

"And of North Carolina?"

That seemed to puzzle her a little, and it was a full minute before she answered "Charleston!"

The foreigner smiled, but made no effort to correct her. "What is the highest mountain in the United States?" he asked.

"It's not fair to ask about mountains," she protested. "You said I didn't know the capitals."

"The capital of Illinois is?"

"Chi—Springfield, I mean."

"Of Montana?"

For the life of her she could not think of a town in Montana. "It's been an age since I studied geography," she explained.

"Your answers were better than the average," said the man. "You got one right out of four. As I said, American geography surprises me."

Honesty.

If honesty is the best policy in business, it is also the best policy when one has done wrong and is confronted with the question whether he shall confess everything frankly or make excuses. A transparent excuse is worse than none at all.

AN AFFLICTION TO MANY WOMEN.

ITCHING OF THE SKIN AND ITCHING PILES THE SOURCE OF MUCH ACUTE SUFFERING — WOMEN ARE ENTHUSIASTIC IN PRAISE OF

Dr. Chase's Ointment

Piles or hemorrhoids are small tumors which form in and about the orifice of the rectum. They are caused by an enlarged and inflamed condition of the veins, which are very numerous in this part of the body. As any obstruction of these veins induces piles, it is very common for women during the expectant period to suffer keenly from piles and itching of the skin. To all such we can recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment with every confidence that it will prove of prompt and lasting benefit.

Mrs. W. E. Jeffries, 44 Hicks Ave., Kingston, Ont., states:—"I suffered agony with itching piles. In fact, I don't believe that any person who has not had piles can realize what I have endured. I had tried many remedies and almost despaired of ever being cured, when my husband brought me a box of Dr. Chase's Ointment. The first application brought relief, and after using half a box I can truthfully say that I was entirely cured. I give this recommendation in hope that it will be the means of bringing comfort and cure to other women suffering as I did."

Mr. James Elliott, Gananoque, Ont., states: "My wife was greatly troubled with piles, and put in an awful time of it. She could not get relief from the terrible itching and burning sensations. I bought a box of Dr. Chase's Ointment, and on the application she obtained relief. After using the one box she was cured of piles, and I can fully and heartily recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment to all who suffer from piles."

If we could only make known the virtues of Dr. Chase's Ointment there would not be a family but would keep it constantly on hand. It is the greatest healer that the world has ever known, and acts like magic in relieving itching and burning of the skin. 60 cents a box. At all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

THEY DROVE PIMPLES AWAY.—A face covered with pimples is unsightly. It tells of internal irregularities which should long since have been corrected. The liver and the kidneys are not performing their functions in the healthy way they should, and these pimples are to let you know that the blood protests. Parmalee's Vegetable Pills will drive them all away, and will leave the skin clear and clean. Try them, and there will be another witness to their excellence.

There are 38 letters in the Russian alphabet.

HAD LA GRIPPE.—Mr. A. Nickerson, farmer, Dutton, writes: "Last winter I had La Grippe and it left me with a severe pain in the small of my back and hip that used to catch me whenever I tried to climb a fence. This lasted for about two months, when I bought a bottle of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil and used it both internally and externally, morning and evening, for three days, at the expiration of which time I was completely cured."

Their gentle action and good effect on the system really make them a perfect little pill. They please those who use them. Carter's Little Liver Pills may well be termed 'Perfection.'

AT DEATH'S DOOR.—DYSPEPSIA CONQUERED.—A GREAT MEDICAL TRIUMPH.—Gentlemen,—My medical adviser and others told me I could not possibly live when I commenced to use Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery for Dyspepsia. My case was one of the worst of its kind. For three years I could not eat meat and my weight decreased from 219 to 119 lbs. All the food I took for thirteen months previous to taking the Vegetable Discovery consisted of milk. I am now entirely cured and have regained my usual weight, can eat anything with a keen relish and feel like a new man. I have sold over thirty dozen Vegetable Discovery since it cured me, as I am well-known and people in this section know how low I was, and thought I could not possibly be cured. They are eager to try this grand medicine. It certainly saved my life as I never expected to recover when first I commenced using it. I am not exaggerating anything, but feel glad to be able to contribute this testimonial and trust it may be the means of convincing others of its merit as a certain cure for Dyspepsia.

Signed, JEAN VALCOURT,
Wotton, P.Q. General Merchant

It is better to have a light purse than a heavy heart, but more comfortable to have neither.

Very many persons die annually from cholera and kindred summer complaints, who might have been saved if proper remedies had been used. If attacked do not delay in getting a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial, the medicine that never fails to effect a cure. Those who have used it say it acts promptly, and thoroughly subdues the pain and disease.

FOR INFLAMMATION OF THE EYES.—Among the many good qualities which Parmelee's Vegetable Pills possess, besides regulating the digestive organs, is their efficacy in reducing inflammation of the eyes. It has called forth many letters of recommendation from those who were afflicted with this complaint and found a cure in the pills. They affect the nerve centres and the blood in a surprisingly active way, and the result is almost immediately seen.

Ten per cent. of the population of India are widows.

If you have a cough or cold do not neglect it; many without a trace of that hereditary disease have drifted into a consumptive's grave by neglecting what was only a slight cold. Had they used Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup before it was too late, their lives would have been saved. Mr. A. W. Levy, Mitchell, writes: "I think Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup the best preparation on the market for coughs and severe colds. About six years ago I caught a severe cold which settled on my lungs, and for three months I had a cough. I had a physician attending me, but gradually grew worse until I was on the verge of Consumption, and had given up hopes of being cured, when I was induced to try Bickle's Syrup. Before I had taken one bottle I found myself greatly relieved, and by the time I had finished the second bottle I was completely cured. I always recommend it for severe colds and consumption."

Our Sentiments.

The following, taken from the "Clothier & Haberdasher," are our sentiments exactly. This store will not handle one dollar's worth of "sweat-shop" clothing.

Too many retailers buy a certain quantity of well-made clothing from a reputable manufacturer and then purchase a large quantity of "sweat-shop" goods, simply thrown together. They ask as much for these "sweat-shop" goods as for the genuine tailor-made goods, and even go so far as to claim they are tailor-made. They make a large profit for the time being, but such clothing is sure to harm their business and their reputation. This "sweat-shop" clothing looks well on the surface. It appears sightly as far as the "shell" is concerned, but the "oyster" is wanting. It has neither fit, finish or wear, and no clothier who caters to the better classes can build up a business by selling such stuff.

A Clergyman's Request Refused

Kingston, August 12.—Rev. Thomas Godden, formerly an Anglican clergyman of the diocese of Ontario, but now Rector of the church at Burgess, Newfoundland, applied to the Executive Committee to be placed on the list of annuitants of the commutation fund. The committee decided yesterday that Mr. Godden had forfeited his right to be placed on the commutation fund, having accepted the incumbency of Burgess, in the diocese of Newfoundland, and having become a member of that synod. Mr. Godden had come all the way from Newfoundland to prosecute his claim, in good faith the committee will pay his expenses, amounting to $100.

TARTE'S PROMISES

MILLIONS IN THEM!

The Master of the Administration the Hon. Joseph Israel Tarte, or as the Chicago papers designate him "Lord Tarte," has, while some of his colleagues are airing their eloquence and sporting themselves in England, been enjoying himself for a month cruising about the lakes in the Government steamer Stanley, with a select few of his friends, visiting harbors, making speeches and promises, which, if carried out, will incur expenditures running into the millions.

A contemporary referring to this pleasure trip of Mr. Tarte, at the expense of the country, says:

"Mr. Tarte has announced that the trip was undertaken in the interests of his department, but this excuse is merely a subterfuge, due to the Minister's innate modesty. It was prompted simply by a desire to make people happy. Instead of hieing himself over to London to join in the coronation fetes, Mr. Tarte deemed it his duty to remain at home and do as much as possible to dissipate the gloom cast over the country by the absence of Sir Wilfrid's sunny smile. How well he succeeded may be gathered from a list of his promises. Here they are, a few of them:—

In Toronto—To spend money, amount not stated, when the people of Toronto awake to the necessity of doing something for themselves. He lectured the people of Toronto a little for not fulfilling promises, which the Mayor denies were ever made.

At Fort William—To make the harbor equal to any of the United States ports on the Great Lakes.

At Port Arthur—To deepen the harbor to 21 feet, the work to begin at once.

At Sault Ste. Marie—To spend $100,000 in dredging a channel from the International pier to the Canadian canal.

In Chicago—To spend $5,000,000 or so in deepening and widening the French river.

At Midland—To provide a 22-foot harbor and a new dock, and to bring the C.P.R. into that town, so that they would have a competing line with the G.T.R..

He also told them he was about to dig up the French River Canal so as to make North Bay the Georgian Bay terminus of the C.P.R. Midland did not gush over this interesting announcement.

At Collingwood—To provide a first-class harbor.

Other places to hear from!

In addition to the above Mr. Tarte promises to create an office to deal with lake transportation. Of course this is a reflection upon the Marine Department. But as Mr. Tarte runs the whole Government, the Ministers will have to submit to the snub.

Of course this is not a full list of Mr. Tarte's summer holiday benefactions. This is merely a recital of the instances in which he let his right hand know what his left was doing. He may also have promised some things in his sleep.

Mr. Tarte undoubtedly had a very enjoyable trip, for which we, the people, will have to pay; but he did his best to make everyone with whom he came in contact happy.

Who after this will tell us we have not a promising Minister?

Mr. Tarte's promises have been so extraordinary that even the Montreal Witness has felt itself compelled to indulge in a little badinage. It says, in referring to Mr. Tarte:—

> "Every day we hear of him in some new place, Collingwood, Sault Ste. Marie, Fort William, Owen Sound, Chicago. And wherever they ask him to build docks or deepen harbors he books the order with the alertness of a commercial traveler who is afraid his customer will change his mind. Then he says, 'Surely, you can think of something else. Why, this line only comes to half a million or so. Can't we put you up a nice elevator designed by my own fancy experts? Thanks, that'll come to about two million. And now I must be going.' But Mr. Tarte rises to his height at Chicago, where he spends a few hundred millions on prospective canals and so forth with an abandon that Morgan would envy.'"

Is it any wonder, after Mr. Tarte's talk about spending millions, that United States journals should look upon and regard him as a Lord?

Here is the Chicago Record-Herald's announcement of his arrival, in state, in that city:—

> "Lord Tarte's steamer entered Chicago harbor yesterday afternoon in a blaze of color. She docked at the salt docks at the river's entrance, but later in the day removed to a private slip near the club house of the Chicago Yacht Club, where Lord Tarte met a number of callers. During the six years Lord Tarte has been Minister of Marine he has gained considerable prominence from his consistent work to build up the commerce of the great lakes from the Canadian standpoint. Recently he has come into public notice by reviving a plan to construct a canal from Georgian Bay through Ontario to Lake Ontario, thus shortening the route between the Atlantic and the head of the lakes. The canal, Lord Tarte estimated would cost $100,000,000."

For a Lord, $100,000,000 for the Georgian Bay Canal, and a few more scores of millions for harbors, docks, etc., do not amount to much; therefore taxpayers must not grumble.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Mr. W. W. Anderson, of Roxmore, writes to The Intelligencer that Capt. A. W. Weese, of that village, threshed for him 336 bushels of fall wheat, which had been grown on six acres of land, or an average of 56 bushels to the acre. That sounds like old times, and is a phenomenally high yield, even for such a grand farming country as Prince Edward County. Even the great wheat fields of Manitoba could hardly show better returns than that, if they could show as good.

A gentleman who has just returned from Toronto tells us a gratifying incident. He was in the public library in the Queen City the other night. Everything was quiet and peaceful. Suddenly a man burst into a loud guffaw of laughter. The attendants hurried over and told the fellow he would have to keep quiet or they'd remove him. The man (a former Bellevillian) who had laughed said he meant no harm, but he was reading something funny and he just couldn't help it. Our informant felt rather curious to see what it was that had aroused the risibilities of his former fellow-citizen, so he walked round and found the loud laugher had been reading Timely Topics in The Belleville Intelligencer.

The census returns show that while in Canada the number of males exceeds that of females by 5 per cent., it is noteworthy that when the greater ages are reached females are in the majority. According to census bulletin No. 10, up to the age of 84 there is a continuous excess of males. From that time on the following is the number of survivors by ages;—

	Males.	Fem's.
85 to 89	4,848	4,990
90 to 94	1,356	1,554

Deseronto's latest drowning accident, of course, is simply another argument in favor of public swimming baths, where everybody may learn to swim.

"You look rather tired," said the Timely Topics man to an Alderman.

"Tired!" said the City Father, "if I was built in circular form I might be used for the wheel of an automobile."

"What's the matter now?" said the newspaper man, scenting a story.

"Everything's the matter, said the C. F. "Did you ever see such a place as this for clannishness? You know the Council of 1902 was elected to try and make a change in civic affairs. They were, in fact, pledged to run the City's business as they would their own. As the year went on they saw how they could make changes in the City's staff of servants which would in their opinion be beneficial. Then the trouble began. If this man was discharged or replaced there was a howl from the society or congregation to which he belonged; if the Council hinted at making a change in another department the knockers were out with their hammers and an anvil chorus went up which could be heard in Trenton. The old cry, sentiment, still governs Belleville. What encouragement is there for men to give up their time and bend all their energies to trying to do the best for the City if, instead of commendation, they receive abuse? I'm sick of the whole thing. The City has a lot of dead timber in its municipal woodyard. Woe to the man who ever dares to hint at its being replaced by vigorous stuff. You touch one of the dozy sticks in the interests of economy and people gather on the street corners and in the market place and prophecy and threaten all sorts of evil to the Council of 1902. If I had my way I'd make a sweeping change in municipal affairs."

"What stands in the road," said the newspaper man, cautiously.

"What stands in the road?" snorted the Alderman. "Why, sentiment and self-interest, anybody can tell you that," and he walked off leaving the scribe wondering what on earth he meant.

HARD TIMES

Come again no more, that's our wish, yours, too. But really times ARE GOOD, they have been improving for some years until now they are real good. Farmers have plenty and a full purse, and they are spending it helping to make times better for us all. It's a common thing nowadays for a farmer to pull out a wallett of ten dollar bills when paying for his wall paper, proud he has the good money to pay for equally good wall papers.

YOU MIGHT NOT BELIEVE US

If we told you our business for July, 1902, just doubled that for July, 1901 — the only time in our history a month doubled that of the preceding year.

IT'S NOT ALTOGETHER

And alone the times that caused it. Our excellent stock and our low prices figured largely in the advance.

WE STARTED

This year to divide our profits with our customers and doubling sales, thereby doubling profits. It keeps us busy every hour, makes us feel good and our customers better. It pays us, and we mean to keep at it. We mean to sell our goods at small advances on cost and make this store noted for low prices and abundant selections.

IN OUR DECORATING OUR PAPER HANGING,

ONE OF THURLOW'S LANDMARKS GONE

MRS. THRASHER, OF THRASHER'S CORNERS, HAS PASSED AWAY.

An aged resident of the Township of Thurlow passed away last evening in the person of Mrs. Joseph Thrasher, aged 81 years. Deceased had been ill for some time and her demise was expected. Mrs. Thrasher has for a great many years resided in Thurlow at what is known as Thrasher's Corners. She was a lady who had many relatives and friends, who will regret to learn of her demise. Mrs. Thrasher had been a widow for some years. Two sons, Gilbert, of Sidney, and Albert, of Thurlow, survive.

QUESTION ANSWERED.

Yes, August Flower still has the largest sale of any medicine in the civilized world. Your mothers and grandmothers never thought of using anything else for Indigestion or Biliousness, Doctors were scarce, and they seldom heard of Appendicitis, Nervous Prostration or Heart Failure, etc. They used August Flower to clean out the system and stop fermentation of undigested food, regulate the action of the liver, stimulate the nervous and organic action of the system, and that is all they took when feeling dull and bad with headaches and other aches. You only need a few doses of Green's August Flower, in liquid form, to make you satisfied there is nothing serious the matter with you. You can get this reliable remedy at R. Templeton & Co.'s.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh), that can not be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

ONE IMMUTABLE FACTOR.

New York Tribune: The one immutable factor, however, remains, regnant and supreme. Men change their skies when they traverse the seas. They change their centuries in the long lapse of time. Their minds remain unchanged by time or place. To-day the British race is the same in spirit that it was centuries ago, at the beginning of the illustrious line of sovereigns of which Edward VII. is the latest. The "Anglo-Saxon grit" is still there in undiminished measure. The self-control amounting almost to stolidity, the dogged resolution and disregard of hostile odds, the swift jealousy of rights and privileges, the enterprise of a warrior race that looks upon all the world as its field of conquest — these rugged, masterful features, together with innumerable fine and gentle traits, are all there as they were in the days of the Black Prince. The change is objective, not subjective. New men, new issues, new circumstances, surround the new King. But he is still King of England, and England is England still. It is in that fact that the most auspicious promise of his reign abides.

Just the thing for Children.

Angier's Petroleum Emulsion is remarkably effective with delicate children. They like it and take it readily when they cannot be induced to take Cod-liver Oil. It is an excellent tonic and just what the little ones need. It makes them eat better, sleep better, and gain in weight, strength and color. Give it to the children if they have a cough or cold; if they are pale and thin; if they are scrofulous or rikety; if their food does not digest or their bowels are out of order. It is pleasant to take.

THE COLONIAL CONFERENCE.

Results Are Generally Considered Satisfactory—Canada and Empire's Defence.

London, Aug. 13.—While the results of the Colonial conference, which ended Monday, are generally considered satisfactory as far as they go it must be understood that the enforcement depends ultimately upon action by the Colonial Legislatures and by the Imperial Ministers, whose departments they concern.

In addition to the Australian naval arrangements, by which the Australasian contributions are to be largely increased on condition that certain vessels be officered and manned by Australasians, a general increase in Colonial naval subsidies was agreed to.

The scheme also provides that some colonies shall allot part of their local military forces to Imperial defence, in case of emergency, but Canada and Australia contented themselves with agreeing to keep their local forces in a state of efficiency, relying on volunteers in case of Imperial need as was done in South Africa.

The contribution of Cape Colony to the Imperial navy was fixed at $250,000 annually and Natal's at $175,000.

The preferential tariff arrangement is in a nebulous condition, depending entirely on future arrangements between the Mother country and each individual colony, the understanding being that such arrangements would follow the general lines of the Canadian tariff.

The foregoing arrangements do not represent the unanimous opinion of the conference, but each resolution was adopted by a majority vote.

Earl Cadogan Leaves Ireland.

Hope for Him

A young probationer was preaching his trial sermon in the church in one of the inland villages of Scotland. After finishing the "discourse" he leaned over the pulpit and engaged in silent prayer—an act which surprised the congregation, which was unaccustomed to such procedure. Suddenly the young preacher felt some one slapping him on the shoulder, and, on turning round, he beheld a grave and sympathetic elder, who remarked: "Hoot, man, dinna' tak' it sae muckle to hert; ye'll maybe dae better next time."—Pearson's Weekly.

FORBEARANCE PLEA

HYPERCRITICISM ONE OF THE GREAT SINS OF PRESENT AGE.

OUR RIGHTS AS TO ALL OTHERS.

The Sin of Hypocrisy—The Further We Have Gone Astray the More Apt Are We to Consider Unfavorably the Shortcomings of Others—"Judge Not That Ye Be Not Judged."

Entered According to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1902, by William Baily, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Chicago, Aug. 10.—A plea for forbearance and the magnanimous treatment of offenders is made by Rev. Frank De Witt Talmage in this sermon on the text Matthew vii, 1, "Judge not, that ye be not judged."

After Massillon, the great court preacher of France, had finished one of his sermons, Louis XIV. summoned him to his side and said: "Massillon, how is it you impress me as you do? I have heard many great orators preach. They nearly always please me. But when you preach, instead of being pleased with you, I am always discontented with myself. I always feel that I want to be a better man as well as a better King." "Well," answered the great preacher, "the only way I can account for it, your Majesty, is because I am always preaching against myself. When I am about to make up a sermon, I say to myself, 'Massillon, what is the sin which you have hardest work to battle to-day?' And when I preach against my own sins I generally find that there are similar sins in other hearts which I am also preaching against." If there is any truth in the words which Massillon spoke to Louis XIV., this sermon will carry a message to every pew. Of all sins there is none more easy for speaker as well as hearer to fall into than the sin of hypercriticism.

The sin of censorious criticism is almost universal because one is apt to commit it at first unconsciously and without premeditation or forethought. If a party of young people are together, it is not hard to find fault with the minister, and the doctor, and the dressmaker, and the neighbor's wife and child and house and all that he has. It is not difficult to lay the reputation of an absent member upon the dissecting table of traducement and cut and hack it into pieces with cruel, sharp, merciless tongues. It is not always a disagreeable opportunity to repeat the slanders and the vilifications and the defamations and the wholesale condemnations which have been circulated about the neighborhood in reference to other people's characters.

Now, my text is a divine protest against the hasty and the unjust judgments with which we condemn our fellow men. It is a divine protest to bring men and women to the realization of the awful damage they are doing themselves, as well as others, by the pernicious habit of censorious criticism. It is a protest to prove that, though we can honor men and love men and praise men and help men, yet we must not hate men or deride men or condemn men. Condemnation is a divine prerogative. Condemnation is a thunderbolt which will shatter every human hand that tries to grasp it and to hurl it. Condemnation is a poisonous fang which will destroy our own lives as well as lacerate and instill the fatal poison into their flesh.

Personally we should not condemn men, because, having imperfections in ourselves, we have no right to expect and demand perfection in others. If we were holy, perhaps we might have a right to expect other people to be holy. If we were pure minded, we might have a right to expect other people to be pure minded. If we loved the Lord our God with all our heart and soul and mind and strength; if we were perfect husbands and perfect wives, perfect parents and perfect children, perfect in our love for our fellow men, we might expect others to be perfect. But what right has the raven to croak because her young have wings as black as the night? What right has the Pharisee to stand up and condemn the poor publican, who stood afar off and beat his breast, moaning, "God be merciful to me a sinner," when the Pharisee himself was so sinful that he was like a whited sepulcher, "which indeed appeared beautiful outward, but was within full of dead men's bones and all unclean?" And what right have you, O hearer, to say your neighbor is a bad man or a bad woman and should be condemned when you yourself have an evil eye and have not yet, by the grace of God, plucked it out? When you yourself have an evil hand or foot and have not yet amputated it? When you yourself have an evil tongue to speak or an evil ear to listen against the deeds of your neighbors?

What would you think of a dissolute judge condemning a prisoner at the bar for the same sins of which he himself was flagrantly guilty? Why, such a hypocritical and unjust judge would be submerged under a tidal wave of popular scorn. Such a dishonest judge would be treated as mercilessly as was that judge who in the darkest days of Rome's infamies undertook to sentence some conspirators to death while he himself was one of the conspirators. He would be dragged from the judicial bench. And yet this sin of condemning others when we ourselves are guilty of sin is a habit which can be laid at many a door. We superciliously demand perfection in others while we ourselves are imperfect.

And the sad fact about human condemnation is this: The more we ourselves have gone astray, the more we ourselves have followed too much the devices and the desires of our own hearts, the more we ourselves have sinned in mind or in act and not yet been found out by the world, the more apt are we to condemn the shortcomings and weaknesses of others, even as Lord Jeffreys, the unjust English judge, was merciless toward those who were brought before him, although he himself at that time was the greatest criminal in all England. It is not the good father who is hardest upon the daughter that has gone astray; it is the bad father who is not apt to forgive the wayward child. It is not the good brother who is unwilling to save the wayward sister; it is the sinful brother, who would and does demand that his sister should be morally all right while he himself may be morally all wrong.

To illustrate the truth that the more we ourselves have gone astray the more we are apt to condemn shortcomings in others, I would read from a leaf out of the book of memory. I remember many years ago a lady's character was being assailed on a hotel porch. A member of the party at that time denounced the absent woman so severely that I turned and said: "Madam, you have no right to publicly make a charge like that against any one. Even if you had positive proof that what you say is true, you should keep your lips firmly sealed, because no one knows but that some day the bloodhounds of slander may be hunting your own tracks." This lady was very indignant. She said that I charged her with the same crimes of which the absent woman was supposed to be guilty. Within one year that woman who was so bitter in her criticism of her sister was proved guilty of the same offence which she charged against another.

My father in his younger days had almost the same experience.

No man should rashly condemn another, because it is often impossible for him to realize what were the mitigating circumstances in which the sin was conceived. If all men were born free and equal, as the American Declaration of Independence optimistically declares, you could judge them in the bulk. You could judge any two men as you might test two bars of steel which come from the same mold. You could judge them, as you might say that a pound of coffee ought to weigh as much as a pound of tea; but all men are not born free and equal. We are different in hereditary tendencies. Only a short time ago at a convention of the Women's Christian Temperance Union a delegate read the record of a woman with criminal tendencies who died in 1827. The name of this woman, for obvious reasons, was not told. This woman of criminal tendencies had had up to date over 800 descendants. Seven hundred of these descendants have been criminals, and all were convicted at least once and most of them more than once for crime. Thirty-six of those descendants have been murderers. "And," said the speaker, "the blood of that one woman of criminal tendencies has cost the nation in eighty years over $2,000,000 for trials and executions and for the property stolen or destroyed." Is not the blood that flows in your veins happily different from that which flowed in the veins of those children?

We are different in the surroundings of babyhood and boyhood and young manhood. Some men never knew the love of a parent. Their father and mother died when they were very young. Instead of being able to get an education, as you and I have been, they were pushed out into the great world unprepared for the struggle of life and told to shift for themselves. We are as different as flowers are different. Some are planted in rich soil, others in poor. Some are cared for by loving hands; others have to fight for their lives among the bristly thorns and the overshadowing weeds. Some have enough sunlight to incubate and develop them and just enough showers and dews to slake their thirst. Other flowers are continually being scorched by the droughts and deluged by the freshets.

We are all different in our inherited temperaments and our power to resist temptation. Oliver Wendell Holmes, the quaint poet and philosopher, once wisely said, "Every child's training should begin at least 100 years before that child is born." Have you and I any right to condemn a man's actions unless we can put ourselves in that man's place? Then, after we have put ourselves in our erring brother's place have we a right to affirm that we, in our own strength, would have done differently than he has done? If we do thus affirm, we are not honest and true to ourselves, for some of the mightiest and best men of God have testified just the opposite. Glorious John Newton, trumpet throated John Newton, Holy Spirit inspired John Newton, once declared that he never saw a murderer being led away to the gallows but he always said to himself, "There goes John Newton unless he had been saved by the grace of God." Horatio Seymour, twice governor of New York, in a large religious meeting once solemnly declared: "In my time, as the chief executive of the state of New York, I have had to examine hundreds of applications for pardons. After I had carefully examined them and fully entered into the lives of the convicted and realized the influences which caused those crimes, I am free to confess that had I had the same influences about me as those men had in every case I should have committed the same crimes, if not blacker ones." Oh, my brother, instead of condemning you brother put yourself in your erring brother's place. Get down on your knees and offer a prayer of gratitude that you have not been tempted as he is tempted. You ought to get down on your knees and thank God that even in your lesser temptations you have been saved solely by an inspiring faith in a divine love which may never have been kindled in your brother's sinful heart.

No human being should condemn his neighbor, because it is only the loving tear of pleading sorrow that can quench the fires of sin and not the sharp tongue that "breaketh the bone." It is only the warm, gentle, protecting, outstretched arm of a friend that draws the sinner toward God and heaven; not the clenched fist of an enemy. Did you ever see a minister who became a better minister through the fault finding of his congregation? Did you ever know of a wife who became a better wife because her husband talked against her to his neighbors? Do you know of one human being who was brought closer to your heart and to God by being demeaned in the eyes of his fellow men through bitter denunciations that you hurled against him? No! No! Slander and vilification and traducement and disparagement and evil rumor, repeated by your lips, never softened or purified a sinful heart. They only drove the sinner farther away from you and farther from God.

It is possible to criticize even the best of men. The story is told that Zeuxis, the famous Greek artist, painted a wonderful picture of a boy holding a dish of grapes. The picture was so wonderful that the birds flew through the open window and with their bills pecked at the grapes which the artist had drawn. But though there were thousands ready to praise, there were still many censorious critics who condemned the picture. "For," said the evil minded critics, "if the boy had been painted as perfectly as the dish of fruit, the birds would have been afraid to approach the dish which the lad is supposed to hold in his hand." It is possible to harshly judge the actions of even the best men. Therefore it is very easy by bitter criticism, to destroy thousands who might be saved by the gentleness of a loving, forgiving, Christlike tongue.

No man should condemn his neighbor, because when he destroys his brother by evil criticism he also equally destroys himself. Some people suppose that my text, "Judge not, that ye be not judged," is only to be applied in a temporal way; that it only alludes to things of this world; that it is to be interpreted in the sense that if we are unjust to others in our censorious criticism, others will be unjust to us. The injustice which we do to others with the tongue will always as a boomerang, come back and strike ourselves. As Dr. Guillotin in his old age is said to have been executed upon the fatal instrument which he had invented in his younger days; as the prime minister of one of the French monarchs was confined in the very cage of torture he had builded for his enemies, a cage so short that the prisoner in it could not lie down and so low that he could not stand upright in it; as Regent Morton was hugged to death by the spikes of the fatal image of torture known as the "Maiden" which he himself had introduced into Scotland, and as a Haman was hanged upon the gallows he had erected for the despised Mordecai, so the unjust criticisms which we mete out to others are often the very condemnations with which we ourselves shall be condemned by our fellow men.

But the text has a deeper and wider meaning than merely the interpretation which implies that if we utter condemnation against our brothers our brethren will in turn speak similar condemnations against us. It means that if we condemn our brethren, Christ will condemn us. It means that if we do not speak kindly of those who have gone wrong Christ will not become our divine advocate and plead for our forgiveness. What does the Bible say in order to impress this truth upon our hearts? Christ gave us the Lord's Prayer as the model of our applications. "Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed by thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven. Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us." In other words, we must pray that we are ready to forgive the sins of others so may God forgive us our own trespasses. My Lord and my God, if thy pardon is to be dependent upon our willingness to forgive and pardon others what chance have most of us for thy forgiveness!

But I have one thought more to develop, and then I am done. No man has a right to condemn his brother, because after the condemnation is once spoken it often happens that it can never be recalled, no matter how much he may repent. Our judgments are nearly always spoken judgments; therefore those evil words which speak to others about an absent friend or enemy will in all probability be repeated to a second and a third and fourth party until those censorious criticisms are carried everywhere. And then, my brother, the damage which we do unto others will be past recall.

Thus my text has the same kind of a practical application as that which a mother taught her little boy while they were spending the summer in the woods. The little fellow came running into the house in tears and said: "Mamma, there are some bad boys out there mocking me. When I cried 'Hello!' they shouted back 'Hello!' When I cried 'Keep still!' the bad boys cried 'Keep still!' And when I shouted 'I won't!' the bad boys shouted back 'I won't!'" "Ah," answered the Christian mother, "my son, those were not bad boys answering the 'Hello!' The mocking voices that you heard were only the echo of your own. You were the bad boy. If you had called 'I love you!' you would have heard the supposed bad boys say 'I love you!' If you had called 'Come and sing to me!' they would have answered "Come and sing to me!'" So the gospel invitation to-day is going to be heard a great deal in the echoings of your own voice. If we cry out to suffering and sinful humanity "I love you!" Christ will call back "I love you!" If we cry to to those who have done us an injustice "I forgive your sins" Christ will echo back "I forgive your sins!" Oh, my brother and sister, can we, shall we not, here and now, while we offer the Lord's Prayer, say with sincere and truthful hearts, "Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us?"

FAIRY GOLD

BY BERTHA M. CLAY

—Author of—

"A Woman's Vengeance," "Between Two Loves," "Her Second Love," "A Fatal Wedding," Etc.

"No, I didn't know anything about her, mademoiselle," Yolande responds, in a low tone. "I am very sorry, poor lady."

"Poor lady, truly — only blessed in having one of the best of husbands," mademoiselle says warmly, seeing she can now go on and embroider her story as she pleases, for no discrepancy will be discovered. "But the Glynnes are all good husbands," she pursues gravely, with an air of old and intimate friendship — "faithful, devoted, warm-hearted!" She could hardly keep the grin of ridicule off her lips as she looks askance at the flushing face and downcast eyelids and nervous fingers trifling with the loose curly locks of bonny brown hair, and turns it rather unsuccessfully into a tender smile. "You will prove that one day, cherie, I hope." And then she hurries on, with stimulated delicacy. "And when I said 'No,' I could not think of recommending anyone for such an important post, do you know what he said, dear?"

"That he wants you to go to Pentreath Place, mademoiselle!" Yolande exclaims, with a keen pain of envy thrilling her through.

Oh, why has not Fate made her a governess or a lady-nurse, so that she might have this happy chance of goint to live in the very house where Captain Glynne is? What exquisite pleasure to be able to meet him sometimes and say "Good morning!" What unspeakable happiness to pour out his coffee and hand him the newspaper! And mademoiselle will not appreciate the happiness or the privileges in any great degree.

"No, indeed, cherie!" mademoiselle says, laughing heartily as she sees the wistful frown and the tear-filled eyes. "Not until you have no further need of me! Viscount Glynne is a gentleman, dearest. He only said, 'How I wish you were disengaged, mademoiselle! I should have confidence in you. Perhaps some day, when Miss Yolande will have something nicer to think of than French lessons"—here mademoiselle permits herself a knowing giggle and has great difficulty to keep from passing into the vernacular of her native Camberwell—"and, from what I hear, I think she soon will be—"

"Oh, mademoiselle, did he say that?" interrupts Yolande, amazed and flushing.

"He did," Miss Glover declares positively. "'Then, mademoiselle,' he said, 'when your dear pupil no longer requires you, I trust you will let Lady Glynne or myself know your address before you engage yourself elsewhere.' Was it not kind of him, chere Yolande, to be so truly considerate to a poor governess?"

"Very kind," agrees Yolande, rather bewildered in her ideas.

"Now, I think I've cut the ground from under your feet, Mrs. Sarjent!" mademoiselle says to herself—a key-hole or a half-opened door is always a legitimate channel of information to this young woman. "And, so far from Miss Yolande, the little love-sick fool, being unwilling to have me in her house, perhaps I will be unwilling to have her in mine! All things come round to you while you wait," the quondam Miss Glover says, with an idea that she is quoting Tennyson. "I can stay on here now until it suits me to go; and I think it'll suit me when I have the satisfaction of seeing my fastidious, haughty, fine gentleman, Captain Dallas Glynne, married in among the Dormers and Sarjents and 'the butchers and bakers and candlestick-makers'! Then I'll go to Pentreath Place and see if I can't make myself very useful and valuable in some other little schemes of my Lord Viscount's! I wonder how much of Miss Yolande's grand fortune will Captain Dallas have the handling of? Not much, I think, when the Viscount and the Pacific Salvage Company have done with it! I don't think—all things considered, and Miss Joyce Murray into the bargain," she says, with a smile at herself in the glass—"that our rich little heiress, Miss Yolande, will have exactly a bed of roses, even with the incomparable gentleman, Dallas Glynne!"

She hates him—the cold, proud man who has disdained to bestow on her a crumb of flattery or a glance of admiration. She hates Yolande too, because Yolande is truthful, innocent, trustful, because she is rich and generous and kind, because she is her friend, because she is far above her mentally and morally as an angel.

CHAPTER X.

The days glide on into weeks—so long to look forward to, so short to look back upon. The fresh golden brightness of the autumn mornings, the frosty calm of the autumn afternoons, with their low yellow sunshine and rosy evening skies, are now merged in the short dark winter days—the dark days before Christmas, dull, silent, and bitterly cold, with "the smell of snow in the air" which mountain-bred people can detect.

It is bitterly cold, depressing, unseasonable weather in which to set about selecting a new residence, furnishing the same, and removing into it. Yet this is what poor old Miss Dormer has recently done, and well-nigh succumbed between bronchitis and "lowness," as with plaintive helplessness she describes her state.

Mr. Dormer does not seem much happier for the change. He has escaped from all the grandeur at home and gone into the City, where, however, nowadays he has grander places of business to call at and much grander acquaintances than in the old days—titled chairmen of companies with grandly-sounding foreign names, "ornamental directors" fresh from the Peerage, the very brightest and most sparkling gilding and glitter of this business world.

All this has come about through and by his acquaintance with his noble and enterprising friend, the Viscount Lyulph Glynne, through him and his influence and his introductions, and the sixty thousand pounds which have been bequeathed to Silas Dormer and his sister Keren by the will of their eldest brother Michael, now ten months deceased. Their niece Yolande's money is settled on herself, to be hers absolutely when she attains the age of twenty-one, or if she marries before that age with their consent, but held in trust for her now by her guardians, uncle Silas, aunt Keren, and her cousin Wilmot Sarjent.

But poor old Miss Keren Dormer, having a perfect and unwavering faith in her brother and his "business head," as she calls it, and pleasantly acknowledging the fact that she has no "head" for speculations or money-making intricacies, has given him free permission to speculate with and invest her money as he thinks best.

"We shall always have enough for our needs, Silas," she says cheerfully—"of that I'm sure. Our mother and father were righteous people, and their seed will never be forsaken nor have to beg their bread—that's the blessed promise in the blessed Book. So do what you think best, brother—do what you think best!"

And so it comes to pass that Silas Dormer has dipped into the Pacific Salvage Company to the extent of a few thousand shares, and dipped into some gold-mines with mellifluous Mexican names, and some Cornish tin mines with enormous powers of money-suction in their cavernous depths, and a few other "concerns," forming as pretty a fireful of irons as an elderly merchant could desire wherewith to burn his fingers.

And, to be in keeping with all this present and prospective wealth, Silas Dormer has thought fit, and his sister has meekly acquiesced, and Yolande has been excited and delighted, and glad and sorry, after the manner of a young girl who sees new and wonderful possibilities dawning before her, and mademoiselle has graciously approved, that they should leave the old, quiet, out-of-the-way home at Fair View and remove to a "more suitable residence," as "ma'm'selle" says, with an air of toleration.

And this is the "suitable residence," this imposing-looking mansion, with its deep portico, and broad pearl-gray doorsteps, and huge plate-glass windows and conservatories, and reception-rooms and butler's pantries, and the various appurtenances of the "first-class family mansion" No. 9, Rutland Gardens, Hyde Park—in reality, Bayswater. The house is full of brand-new furniture which has cost a fabulous sum of money, as poor Miss Dormer secretly thinks; and she is not a whit soothed by "ma'm'selle's" accounts of the very much more gorgeous and costly furniture she has seen in other houses of "friends" of hers.

There is an odor of a furniture warehouse from attic to cellar, and an unnatural brilliancy about the chairs and tables and the dyes of the Brussels carpets; and Yolande thinks of "Mr. and Mrs. Veneering" every day of her life as she comes up or goes down stairs, and is nervously conscious of the tall supercilious footman sitting in the hall, or assisting the severe stately butler to lay the dinner-table. Both these gentlemen—below the salt — become however more mild and affable as time goes on. They cannot be very haughty and strict with their amiable, timid, fussy, but kind-hearted old mistress, or the gentle and polite young mistress, both of whom venture to ring the bells only under the pressure of extreme circumstances. But, when Viscount Glynne has dined at the house once, and when Lady Nora comes in to afternoon-tea one day just before Christmas, the "liveried retainers" become respectful to a remarkable degree.

"I shouldn't wonder if we ain't goin' to 'ave a marriage in 'igh life here before long Mr. Lord," the footman remarks to the butler who rejoices in that stately name.

For a delicious bit of gossip has crept down the back stairs concerning Miss Yolande—"such a quiet, plain sort of young lady too!" as the maids say rather enviously — that there is "somebody" very dashing in the background as Miss Yolande's lover—"an officer"—"an Honorable" — "Lord Glynne's brother" — and so on through a host of surmises, which all receive abundant confirmation on the afternoon when Lady Nora comes, and the servants hear how her ladyship kissed Miss Yolande on both cheeks, and said, "Good-bye, dear! How sweet it would be if you were coming to spend Christmas at Pentreath with us!" — and how Miss Yolande "blushed up as red as a rose-bud," as the footman says sentimentally, at her ladyship's words.

They do not, however, suspect that the pretty "gush" of Lady Nora's parting speech has been rather in the nature of a salve which she feels it politic to offer. For this second visit of Lady Nora has not been a much pleasanter one than her first, when she called one afternoon at Fair View with her maid and stayed to dinner. Now, as then, she has been perfectly civil and gracious; but it has been the condescension of the patrician to the plebeian. She has said kind and complimentary things; but in every smile and tone there is the idea conveyed that the society in which she finds herself is far removed from the sphere of her "friends."

This afternoon her manner has been more coldly, frigidly gracious, with a decided flavor of condescension in her prettiest speeches. She has put up her eye-glass to note the dimensions of the large drawing-room, and asked them if they really do prefer a room like this for afternoon-tea.

"I always prefer the tiniest room of the suite, where one can have one's pet china and books and little tables and brackets close at hand," she says, with another smiling stare of cool disparagement at the grand drawing-room, thirty-six by thirty, as the carpet planner measured it. "But the house looks nice and comfortable," Lady Nora is good enough to add. "I should think you find yourselves far more comfortable here than in that lonely little place down in the country."

She has spoken of her son once or twice, but only in the most formal and distant manner as "Captain Glynne," and of his continued stay at Pentreath.

"The Earl, his uncle, wishes to have him with him," she says, in her soft maternal tone, "and Captain Glynne wishes to stay. Pentreath has a great many attractions for him, I believe," she adds, with a serene smile, playing carelessly with her teaspoon, noting at the same time that Yolande's pale face, with its great dark eyes, purple-black in the lamplight, has changed as though a shadow had fallen over it at her words.

Lady Nora notes too at the same time that the teaspoon, with which she plays is solid silver of the last fashionable pattern, modern antique, and that all the appointments of the tea-table, the drawing-room, and the house itself are "very creditable."

• • • • • • • • • • •

Two days later Lady Nora is at Pentreath, and again drinking her afternoon-tea — in her own dressing-room this time—and telling herself, as she does so, that it is not such good tea as the Dormers,' nor is it served in such dainty cups as theirs.

She talks long and earnestly with her son, and she tells him everything. Lady Nora is never troubled by delicacy when it goes against her interests; so now she gives for Captain Glynne's benefit a description of the house and furniture, plate and servants, of the Dormers, their money - investments and prospects so far as she can learn them, old Miss Dormer's amiability and humble-mindedness, and meek-spirited Yolande's blushes and pallor at the mention of his name.

"And now, Dallas, my dear boy, you must lose no more time here!" his mother says, in an imperiously-entreating manner—she dares use no other with him. "Lyulph Glynne is getting a hold over these people, and, worse still, a hold over their money, and it is the only chance I see for you. I have felt that always; but I did hope for something from that election; however, as he lost it—and nobody who knows Viscount Glynne can be surprised at that," Lady Nora says bitterly — "there is an end of everything in that direction."

Her ladyship pauses for a moment; then, as her son makes no response, she goes on—

"And now he has plunged into money-making schemes in the City, and has completely wormed himself into old Dormer's confidence—and we know what that means with a covetous, grasping, money-loving miser like Glynne!" Lady Nora declares, with a significant glance at her son. "And he has a spy in the camp—a sort of private-intelligence office — that English-Frenchwoman, Miss Bella Glover, I feel quite certain; and—and—Dallas dearest, you had better make up your mind at once!" her ladyship urges imploringly, with tears in her bright eyes—she can shed maternal tears upon occasion. "It is really a very fair prospect for you; and you know Joyce and you can be nothing to each other now."

"Why?" Dallas demands, with a smouldering fire of defiance, and resolve breaking out in a flame in his eyes and voice. "Why should I not marry the girl I love and the girl who loves me, and go and earn a living for her like an honest man, no matter what I have to do?"

TO LIONIZE BOER LEADERS

Botha, Dewet and Delarey to Be Received by King Edward.

Distinguished Colonial Office Authorities Including Mr. Chamberlain, With Gen. Lord Kitchener, to Meet Them—A Round of Fetes Promised—Kruger and His Party Said to Be Trying to Dissuade Them From Accepting.

London, Aug. 13.—The arrival next Saturday from South Africa, whence they sailed July 30, of Generals Botha, Dewet and Delarey, promises to be the occasion of another struggle between Boer and Briton.

The Colonial Office has made special arrangements for the reception of the visiting Boers at Southampton. The naval review will be in progress when the Boers arrive, and after their reception by distinguished Colonial Office authorities, Lord Kitchener and other prominent persons, they will be conducted on board the steamer chartered for the use of the Colonial Premiers to witness the naval review.

It is expected that Mr. Chamberlain, the Colonial Secretary, will be on board the steamer. The Boer leaders will spend Saturday night on board this vessel, and on Sunday they will be received by King Edward on board the royal yacht, and in the presence of a number of distinguished personages.

The arrival in England of the Boer generals will doubtless be the prelude to another round of lionizing like that experienced by the late General Lucas Meyer should the generals decide to stay in England, but, according to The Hague correspondent of The Daily Mail, former President Kruger of the Transvaal and his party are equally anxious to prevent Generals Botha, Dewet and Delarey from landing in England.

Members of the Kruger party have sent urgent letters and cablegrams to Madeira in an effort to dissuade the generals from accepting British hospitality. It is proposed to send a Dutch vessel to intercept them, according to the correspondent, and in any case Messrs. Wolmarans, Fischer and Wessels will go to Southampton with that intention.

Kruger Leaves Steyn.

The Hague, Aug. 13.—Ex-President Kruger of the former Transvaal Republic left Scheveningen yesterday, after a cordial farewell to ex-President Steyn of the former Orange Free State. Mr. Steyn is improving in health.

In the Grip of Trusts.

Cape Town, Aug. 12.—The British Trade Commissioners who have been investigating trade conditions in South Africa will sail for home on Aug. 13 and publish their report in England. In an interview to-day, one of the Commissioners said:

"Our revelations will come as a surprise to the British public. The situation here is far more serious than any one imagines. There are fine openings in South Africa for energetic and up to date manufacturers but trade is hampered by trusts and combinations, which threaten to cripple the development of the country."

ELECTION PETITIONS ALL IN.

Forty-Eight Filed at Osgoode Hall—Some Old Dominion Protests.

Toronto, Aug. 13.—It is thought that all the petitions and cross-petitions arising from the recent Provincial elections have now been filed, and both sides are now busy getting their material and evidence into shape. Arrangements for the examinations will be made in a couple of weeks. There are altogether 33 straight and 15 cross petitions, a total of 48. This number is rather smaller than usual for at the previous Provincial elections there were no less than 73 petitions, 65 straight and 8 cross petitions.

After the last Dominion general elections there were fourteen protests filed in Osgoode Hall; of these seven were disposed of by the courts, and there are still seven, about which nothing has been done. These are as follows:

South Ontario, William Smith against William Ross, Liberal.

North Wellington, Henry Jelly against Edward Tolton, Conservative.

Cornwall, C. F. McRae against R. A. Pringle, Conservative.

West Durham, James McCormick against Robert Beith, Liberal.

West York, R. L. Burrows against Archibald Campbell, Liberal.

West Hastings, C. Mullens against E. Gus Porter, Conservative.

Addington, S. W. Davey against Melzar Avery, Conservative.

Largest in the World.

Stettin, Germany, Aug. 13.— The new North German Lloyd steamship Kaiser Wilhelm II., was successfully launched at the Vulcan shipyard yesterday, in the presence of Emperor William. The Kaiser Wilhelm II. will be the largest and is designed to be the fastest ship in the world. Her length is 707 feet and her displacement is 19,500. She is to be of 39,000 horse-power and will have accommodation for 1,000 cabin passengers.

Results of Being a Prince.

St. Petersburg, Aug 13. — Prince Obolensky, Governor of Kharkow, was fired at four times Monday night while he was in the main avenue of the Trivoli gardens at Kharkow. One bullet struck the prince in the neck, producing a slight wound. Another bullet wounded Besennet, chief of police, in the foot. The culprit was arrested.

Mr. Borden's Plans.

Ottawa, Aug. 13.—A private letter received in the city states that Sir Frederick Borden, Minister of Militia, will visit Switzerland and other places on the Continent before returning to Canada. He will not likely reach here before the end of September.

A meeting of the congregation of St. Thomas' church will be held on Thursday evening, 14th August, at 8 o'clock, in the church hall, to consider matters connected with the repairs and improvements to the Rectory. A large attendance is desired.

Picton Gazette:—On her trip down the river to Quebec last week, the Str. Alexandria had a full load of passengers, indeed, every nook and corner was filled, and a number of cots had to be provided for sleeping accommodation. This shows the popularity of the trip, as well as the popularity of the vessel and the officers.

The burial of Mrs. Willoughby, wife of the Rev. N. R. Willoughby, D. D., formerly of Belleville, took place at the necropolis, Toronto, on Friday. Mrs. Willoughby was a native of Cobourg. For some time she has been in failing health, and in hope of an improvement, she visited her son, a practising physician at Saskatoon, N. W.T. This was not realized and she sank under the effects of the disease by which she had been attacked. At the grave, Dr. Willoughby received a telegram from his two sons in South Africa expressive of their grief and condolence.

A "HEROE'S" TONIC

For soldier or civilian South American Nervine proves itself the greatest of system toners, nerve healers and blood cleansers.

A battle-scarred veteran just home from the war in South Africa, who was all run down and weak, the aftermath of that dread veldt fever, says: "I found South American Nervine a remarkable medicine and heartily recommend it to everybody in need of a good tonic." It's a grand remedy for all "run down" people. One bottle gives great relief. A few bottles never fail to cure. 50

GREAT ALTERATION SALE

For the last year we have been inconvenienced considerably for want of space to show our goods, that our business has grown no one will doubt, and in order to keep pace with its rapid growth we must have more room.

To-day the carpenters will remove our rear store and begin work in earnest. The plumbers are with us busy at their part of the job. We have had to remove all our goods in the rear of the cellar and the front part of our store is also to receive special up-to-date touches. What we ask is that the people of Belleville and vicinity will aid us in getting rid of our crowded stock, and for this end we will hold two weeks sale, goods will be sold so cheap that it will startle the whole community.

Come early. Goods sold out will not be replaced during alterations.

NOTES ALONG THE WHARVES

THERE WAS A BUSY SCENE ALONG THE WATER FRONT THIS MORNING.

With the arrival and departure of steamers at the wharf this morning that section of the city presented an animated appearance.

The steamer Hamilton, of the Richelieu & Ontario Navigation Company, called here on her downward trip, and the Spartan, belonging to the same company, was in port at the same time, bound westward. Both had on board a large number of passengers and considerable freight.

The Sunday School excursion of St. John's church to 12 O'Clock Point, per steamer Aletha, was well patronized.

CELEBRATED THE RELIEF OF DERRY

'PRENTICE BOYS HELD A BIG DEMONSTRATION AT KINGSTON YESTERDAY.

Kingston, Ont., Aug. 12.—Kingston 'Prentice Boys' had a gala day on this the 213th anniversary of the Relief of Derry. Bright weather favored their demonstration, and hundreds of visitors from river and bay ports and the inland districts came to the city, to view the procession, hear the speeches and attend the field events. The procession formed on the Market Square at 2.45 o'clock, with fully 1,000 in line. It was headed by the Lady True Blues of Kingston and Gananoque. The other lodges were from Kingston, Harlem, Portsmouth, Perth, Gananoque, Verona, Petworth, Strathcona, Belleville, Deseronto, and Stella. The bands in attendance were the 47th Regimental and Fifes and Drums, Kingston; Oddfellows, Belleville; 41st Regiment, Brockville; True Blues, Gananoque, and Stella.

On arriving in Macdonald Park the procession halted around the Pavilion. In the absence of Mayor Shaw Ald. White acted as chairman. Speeches were also made by Capt. Gaskin and others. Then the sports were begun in the cricket field, consisting of a baseball match and races.

SPLENDID CAFE AND DINING CAR SERVICE.

Much has been said in praise of the excellent service given patrons of the Grand Trunk by the many Cafe and Dining cars, which are now run on all principal day trains serving meals, "A la carte" at any hour during the day. The best of everything at reasonable rates. Tickets, Parlor Car reservations, etc., at city office.

The only way some people could take a tumble to themselves would be to walk in their sleep.

Young White Still Missing

Whereabouts of Evans' Employee Still a Mystery.

Relatives Are Much Worried—Warehousemen Say the Remark About Poison, Attributed to White, is a Common One—What Does Doherty Know?

Toronto, August 14. — The young man, Arnott White, who disappeared on Monday night, is still missing, and there is absolutely no clue as to where he has gone. Although the parents of the absent youth have not requested the police to endeavor to trace his movements, detectives are working on the case in connection with the other mysteries of the Evans warehouse, which they have thus far not been successful in fathoming.

Charles Doherty, the man with whom White worked at the warehouse and with whom he walked a few blocks the last day he worked, declared Wednesday evening to Fred White, brother of the missing boy, that if nothing had been heard of Arnott by 6 o'clock this evening, he would tell him something that Arnott said to him on parting Monday evening. Fred White urged Doherty to tell him then, but he refused. "I will tell you Thursday night if you do not learn anything by that time. Come down to the warehouse at 6 o'clock, and I will tell you then what your brother said to me."

Not Victim of Foul Play.

The young man could not be induced to say a word further on the subject. This is about the only light that has been cast on the case during the day, as far as the White family know. They were relieved to know that the boy had been seen Monday evening at Toronto Junction, as reported in The World, though they could not understand what he was doing there with Ryan and Mulhall at that time of night. It indicated at least that the boy was not the victim of foul play, and they were much relieved on learning that he had been seen after leaving the office, even though it indicated that he had probably gone away. Fred White located Ryan, and he denies, however, having been with the missing boy Monday evening. It is suspected, however, that the friends of the boy are not telling what they know about his disappearance, and that they are aware that he has gone away from Toronto to remain some time. It is certain that Doherty and White had a long talk Monday evening, and it is the substance of this conversation probably which he desired to tell Fred White this evening.

At the warehouse not much attention is paid to the statement White is alleged to have made respecting poison. That same statement, it is said, has been commonly made, jocularly, by different employes ever since the finding of Whalley's body.

Arnott Was Worried.

Little significance would be attached to the boy's movements except in connection with other recent events at the Evans warehouse. It is known that the death of Geen and Whalley, with whom Arnott White worked at the warehouse, disturbed him a good deal. The robbery also bothered the boy some. This was the attempt on the safe in the quarters of the firm the night of May 30. Young White was at home that night, and his family does not think he thought he was suspected of complicity in wrongdoing around the warehouse.

The mother is in a pitiful condition of distress. With the rumors that her son has committed suicide, has left to avoid arrest, and has run away simply because he did not want to remain at home, the poor woman is nearly frantic. Arnott White was much of a mother's boy, and seldom left home except to go to work. The fact, now clearly known to the mother, that Arnott did deceive her when he told her on Saturday that he had not received his salary as usual, is accepted at home as indicating that the boy really contemplated last Friday leaving the city. Just why he should desire to go away without notifying his parents, they are unable to say.

What Does Doherty Know?

Fred White attaches considerable importance to the remarks of Chas. Doherty, the employe who was last seen with his brother. "I begged him to tell me what he knew, for my mother's sake," explained the young man, "but he said 'No; see me Thursday evening at 6 o'clock; then, if Arnott has not returned, I will tell you what he said to me when we parted.' That was all I could get out of him. It seems to me that he and my brother must have had a talk of importance just before they parted."

The police are making no effort to locate White. He is not wanted by them, but they will do what they can to find him, for the parents' sake. The parents do not insist on the boy being brought back. They only wish to be assured that he is safe. They will send his clothes to him, wherever he may desire to stay. They are, however, much disturbed.

In answer to a query sent to Chicago, ex-Manager Alban Ragg telegraphed that he had received no communication from White and did not know he intended going to Chicago.

DIED AT KINGSTON

REV. J. W. MUIRHEAD, WELL-KNOWN HERE, PASSED AWAY THIS MORNING.

Ald. Chown this morning received a telegram announcing the death of his brother-in-law, Rev. J. W. Muirhead, which sad event occurred in Kingston this morning. The cause of death was diabetes. Deceased was formerly pastor of the Whitewood, Assa., Presbyterian church, but had been incapacitated for service since November last. For the last eight weeks he had been in Kingston. Rev. Mr. Muirhead was a native of Brockville, a graduate of Queen's about 43 years of age, and leaves, in addition to his surviving widow, two children, one by a former wife and one by the present Mrs. Muirhead. The deceased gentleman preached in John St. Presbyterian church, this city, last summer. His mother and two sisters are now living in Brockville. The funeral will take place at Kingston on Saturday.

STRIKE AT BOWMANVILLE.

EMPLOYES OF DOMINION ORGAN AND PIANO COMPANY GO OUT.

Bowmanville, Aug. 13.—This morning the employes of the Dominion Organ and Piano Co.'s shops here went out on strike. Some time ago a branch of the union was formed here by an organizer, and since that time a number of the employes have become dissatisfied with the wages they were getting and also with the way the shop has been run. The principal grievance being with the contract system, which has been adopted here. Some of the men thought that the contractors were making too much money, while the rest were not getting enough, and matters reached a climax last night, when at a meeting a strike was decided on this morning.

THE BRIDGE ST. SEWER

WAS THE CAUSE OF A HURRY CALL TO THE ALDERMEN YESTERDAY AFTERNOON.

A meeting of the Public Works Committee of the City Council was called for yesterday afternoon at 3 o'clock. The members who responded to the call were: Ald. Panter, Galbraith, Chown, Price and Sinclair.

The object of the meeting was to take some steps in reference to cleaning the Bridge St. sewer, from Pinnacle street to the mouth of the river. An opening in the sewer was made on Bridge street and upon examination there was found to be some 12 or 14 inches of sand upon the bottom, and this could not be flushed out.

The Surveyor recommended that a scraper be made and the sewer cleaned out at a cost of about $40.

Although there was not a quorum of the Committee it was deemed necessary to go on with the work immediately, especially as the excavation had been made. The Surveyor was instructed to get the scraper he desired and do the work.

KING EDWARD TO INDIANS

His Majesty Makes Another Speech That Will Live.

Thirteen Hundred Coronation Troops Reviewed by His Majesty at Buckingham Palace—He Recognizes Many Regiments That He Saw at Delhi—Wishes Them a Safe Return to Their Homes—Marvelous Spectacle Presented.

London, Aug. 14.—The Indian coronation troops, to the number of 1,300, were reviewed by King Edward yesterday. The arrangements were similar to those when a body of colonials was reviewed. The Prince of Wales presented medals to the men, who are all picked troops, including Lord Curzon's bodyguard. They presented a fine spectacle in their handsome vari-colored uniforms. The Princess Victoria and other royal persons took snap-shot pictures while the ceremony was in progress. Queen Alexandra and many notables were present. The King wore a jeweled sword that cost $50,000, which was presented to His Majesty by the Maharajah of Jaipur.

The scene on the terrace was a very brilliant one, the European military and levee dress being quite outshone by the splendid apparel of the Indian princes. The Queen received a greater ovation than the King as both passed down a line of notables, bowing and shaking hands. The young sons of the Prince of Wales, the Princes Edward and Albert, constituted themselves aides to the King and fetched several general officers, who smilingly obeyed their summons to an audience with their grandfather.

The great lawn below the terrace was a marvelous sight in red, yellow, green and blue. The Bengalese, Sikhs, Gurkhas and Punjab cavalry made a strong contrast to a single khaki spot where the British regulars from India stood. At the word of command fluttering lances, rifles and carbines were grounded and the contingents one by one filed past the royal canopy, saluting Their Majesties and receiving medals at the hands of the Prince of Wales.

At the close of the review the troops were drawn up in front of the King, who addressed the officers as follows: "I wish to convey to all ranks the high satisfaction it has given me to see this splendid contingent from India. I almost feared, owing to my serious illness, that I would be prevented from having the advantage of seeing you, but I am glad to say that by God's mercy I am well again. I recognize among you many of the regiments I had the advantage of seeing at Delhi during my tour of India.

"I hope the contingent has enjoyed its stay in England and that all may return in safety to their homes. I wish you to convey these sentiments from me to all ranks of your command."

Medals From the King.

London, Aug. 14. — The medals which the King yesterday presented to the colonial premiers bore portraits of the King and Queen on one side; on the other side was the simple monogram E. R. VII., and the date, 26 June, 1902.

Members of the Coronation contingent were also presented with coronation medals yesterday. Members of the contingent who came for June 26 and returned home will not receive medals.

Bees in the Barricades.

Brest, France, Aug 14.—Soldiers have been requisitioned in several places in Finistere during the past two or three days, to protect police commissioners, engaged in closing religious schools, from threatening crowds. A battalion of infantry and a strong body of mounted gendarmes were expected at St. Meen, Folgoet, and Ploudaniel yesterday to overawe the excited population of these towns. The inhabitants of Folgoet are engaged in building a wall of masonry behind the principal door of the church school. At St. Meen scouts on horses, bicycles and even automobiles are reconnoitering in order to give alarm of the coming of the police. The peasants declare they will throw beehives among the gendarmes and will put beehives in the barricades.

Sir Oliver Grateful.

Toronto, Government House, Aug. 12, 1902.—The Lieutenant-Governor returns thanks for the kind and friendly congratulations which he has received on the occasion of his recent birthday. The communications received are too numerous to be answered separately. He returns thanks also for the good wishes which correspondents have been kind enough to express.

Student a Suspected Assassin.

Berlin, Aug. 14.—A Russian student named Katlajeff, who was recently released from a Silesian prison, has been surrendered to the Russian police, it being suspected that he was an accomplice, in the murder of M. Sipiaguine, the Russian Minister of the Interior, who was shot and killed on April 15 last.

JOSHUA SANFORD'S SAVIORS

Fittingly Honored For Their Bravery at Paris Wednesday.

Five Men Decorated With the Medal of the Royal Humane Association—Others Entitled to It Will Also Get It, Says President Brown of Hamilton—Sanford, Himself, Was Not Present at the Interesting Function.

Paris, Aug. 14.—The people of Paris took a half holiday Wednesday afternoon to witness the distribution of medals to the heroes of the well. Five of the men who helped dig Joshua Sanford out of the 80 foot well were decorated with the medal of the Royal Canadian Humane Association, and President Adam Brown of that organization declared that there was a number of others who would later receive this evidence of the people's esteem and appreciation of their extraordinary bravery. Those upon whom medals were conferred are: George Carney, George Blanchard, George Wentworth, Richard Hamilton and David Mott.

The weather was so propitious and the prospects of a large attendance so good that the committee concluded to hold the exercises in the pretty little park in the western part of the town. When the populace discovered that Sanford was not to be present, that he had been sent only the night before to Toronto to prevent his being excited over the demonstration, the interest in the medal awarding dwindled perceptibly and fewer than three hundred people participated in the exercises. What they lacked in numbers made up in point of enthusiasm. It was really a kind of family gathering, and those present enjoyed themselves hugely.

John Carney First.

After President Adam Brown had made an appropriate speech, John Carney was the first man decorated. As the handsome medal was pinned to his coat, the good-natured fellow blushed like a schoolboy. He was pushed forward by the president and told to say something. Then the crowd cheered and that seemed to bring him back to earth.

"I only did my duty," he faltered, "and I want to say that these other men did as much, if not more. I appreciate this gift, but I can't express my feelings as well as I would like," and then the man who spent the two days and two nights in the bottom of the well trying to extricate a human being from imminent death seated himself, while the cheers were renewed.

George Wentworth, Richard Hamilton, David Mott and George Blanchard were then presented with medals and made a few modest remarks in reply.

Then President Brown asked for three cheers for the five heroes, and the crowd responded with a will and added a tiger, as an evidence of good faith. Three cheers were called for Mr. Penman, Dr. Dunton, Mayor Brown, and, finally, for "Our King," and each was heartily given. Mayor Brown then called for three cheers and a tiger for President Brown, and the meeting broke up in a kind of love feast.

Sanford Pretty Weak.

Mr. Penman decided Thursday to send Joshua Sanford to Toronto, where he would have a change of surroundings. The people very much desired to see the man they had saved and shake his hand, but his extraordinary mental weakness was not thought to be such as would permit any such exciting experience. Though the man who was dug out of an 80-foot well was able to walk out in the street and take the hack for the depot, he is in pretty bad shape. The nurse says that after a person mentions the well incident to her patient, she cannot control him for days thereafter, and he constantly broods over the terrible experience he had in the well for four or five days and nights. Dr. Dunton said Sanford would probably require six months more before he would be himself again. It is mental trouble now as much as physical. One arm is practically useless but he is expected to recover his full mental and physical faculties.

It was shortly after noon Tuesday June 24, that the old well on the Skelly farm, three miles east of Paris, caved in and buried Joshua Sanford, the well-digger.

Sanford in Toronto.

Toronto, Aug. 14.—Joshua Sanford of Paris well fame is at present undergoing treatment at Dr. Meyers' private hospital, in Deer Park, for the treatment of nervous diseases. His ultimate recovery is confidently expected.

A REVISION OF THE TARIFF

What the Canadian Manufacturers in Session Urge.

The Association Passes a Resolution Which Invites the Government to Make Such Tariff Revision Immediate and Thorough in Order to Transfer to the Domestic Workshop the Manufacture of the Goods We Now Import.

Halifax, N.S., Aug. 14.—The Canadian Manufacturers' Association yesterday, without a dissenting vote, adopted the following resolution on tariff revision:

Resolved: That in the opinion of this association the changed conditions which now obtain in Canada demand the immediate and thoro revision of the tariff upon lines which will more effectually transfer to the workshops of the Dominion the manufacture of many of the goods which we now import from other countries.

That in any such revision the interests to all sections of the community whether of agricultural, mining, fishing, or manufacturing, should be fully considered, with a view not only to the preservation but to the further development of all these great national industries.

That while such tariff shall be primarily framed for Canadian interests it should, nevertheless, give a substantial preference to the mother country, and also to any other part of the British Empire, with which reciprocal preferential trade can be arranged to our mutual advantage, recognizing always that under any conditions the minimum tariff must afford adequate protection to all Canadian producers.

Canada to South Africa.

The following cable from Sir William Mulock, London, to R. J. Young, secretary of the association, was read:

"London, Aug. 13.—Pleased to inform you Government has completed contract with syndicate composed of Allan, Elder-Dempster and Furness lines for service between Canada and South Africa. Sailings at least monthly with provision for increased frequency. Summer sailings, Montreal and Quebec; winter, St. John and Halifax; African port, Cape Town and two other ports. First sailing first week in October from Montreal. Ships will carry mail, also supplies with cold storage. Contract five years."

Over a Thousand Members.

After the communication had been disposed of the report of the Reception and Membership Committee was presented by the chairman, James P. Murphy. The report showed a membership of 1,021, an increase of 226 over the previous year. Pleasure was expressed at the establishment of the new branch at Halifax and the establishment of one at Quebec was also recommended. The holding of the monthly lectures and dinners was stamped as a most advisable policy, and the local branches were urged to adopt it.

An All-Canadian Exhibition.

A resolution favoring the holding of an all-Canadian Exhibition in 1902 was also passed.

E. B. Eddy submitted a resolution calling upon the Government to place a prohibitory export duty of $4 per ton on all Canadian pulp wood. The resolution was passed.

The delegates were tendered an excursion around the harbors by the local branch, when the afternoon session adjourned, which proved both enjoyable and profitable to all. At an open meeting in the evening which was largely attended, President Robert Munro delivered his annual address, a splendid exposition of the year's work.

With Capital of $120,000,000.

New York, Aug. 14.—The incorporators of the International Harvesters' Company, articles of incorporation for which were filed Tuesday in Jersey City, made public a statement yesterday which says the the capital stock is $120,000,000. It has purchased the property and business of the McCormick Harvesting Machine Company, Deering Harvester Company, Piano Manufacturing Company and Warder, Bushnell & Glessner Company (champion), Milwaukee Harvesting Company. The president of the new company is Cyrus H. McCormick and the chairman of the Executive Committee, Charles Deering.

Fire in London.

London, Aug. 14. —At 2 o'clock yesterday morning fire destroyed the manufacturing plant of the Pond Mills Cheese Factory. Much of the contents were saved and the insurance will likely cover the full loss, which is hardly known as yet. The place is owned by the Thames Cheese Company.

GAYNOR AND GREEN GO FREE.

Absence of Dates in Warrants Fatal to Prosecution.

Quebec, Aug. 14. — Gaynor and Greene were liberated yesterday by Judge Caron. His Honor, in giving judgment, said the case was one of great importance, if only by reason of the unusual proceedings employed. He only reviewed his last two writs of habeas corpus. With regard to the attacks made upon himself, he was sure that The American Government authorities and their agents could have had no hand in them. The absence of dates in the warrant, he held to be distinctly fatal to the latter and he therefore upheld the prisoners' claims and their objections to the warrant, maintained the writ of habeas corpus and ordered the release of the prisoners. The prisoners were accordingly released, and received the congratulations of their friends. Mr. McMaster was asked whether the prosecution intended to take any further action in the matter, but declined that he was unable to speak positively on the subject until after a conference with Messrs. Erwin and Stuart.

THE BALDWIN EXPEDITION.

Captain Johanssen Refused to Obey Orders and Was Removed.

Tromsoe, Norway, Aug. 14.—Evelyn B. Baldwin and several members of the crew of the America have made statements before a notary public regarding the dispute between Mr. Baldwin and Captain Johanssen of the America. According to Baldwin's statement, Captain Johanssen refused to obey the orders of the ice pilot, and that necessitated his removal from the command. Baldwin says also that Captain Johanssen left the vessel at Honingsvaag without Baldwin's knowledge or consent. The relations between Baldwin and the ice pilot were always of the best, the statement asserts, and it is added that, while the death of half the dogs from worms, hindered the party from reaching as far north as intended. Baldwin is confident that within twelve months the America will reach the intended latitude en route to the north pole. The Consulate at Christiania, to which Captain Johanssen complained, has referred him to the Consulate at Bergen.

Facts re. Canada's Crime.

Ottawa, Aug. 14.—The report of criminal statistics for the year ending Sept. 30, 1901, just issued, shows a decrease of charges for indictable offences. Convictions were not so frequent, in ratio to population throughout Canada, but there was a decrease in acquittals, which were 2,532. Detentions for lunacy were more. In the Yukon, the decrease is from 35 to 14 per cent. Crime has decreased among agricultural, commercial and domestic classes, and increased in industrial classes. Professional and laboring classes also show a decrease, while female criminals are diminishing. There was an increase of 1.7 per cent. in summary convictions, as compared with 1900.

Anarchist Commits Suicide.

Rome, Aug. 14.—The Italian steamer, Citta di Milano, from New York, July 22, which arrived at Genoa, Aug. 9, reports that Sganza, a New York anarchist, committed suicide by jumping overboard while the vessel was off Gibraltar. It is alleged that Sganza had been commissioned to murder a European royal personage, and that he was on his way to Europe for this purpose, but weakened at the last moment and killed himself. Two of his companions disappeared upon the arrival of the Citta di Milano at Genoa.

Oil Fuel Test a Success.

San Francisco, Aug. 14. — The Oceanic Steamship Company's oil burning liner Mariposa arrived Tuesday from Tahiti, and the record of her voyage is a tribute to the wisdom of the step taken in deposing King Coal and substituting liquid fuel as food for her furnace. She reached port with her paint work fresh and bright and her decks clean as those of a yacht. Officers and crew were jubilant over the success of the new fuel.

Gigantic Killing Order.

Vienna, Aug. 14.—The "Arbeiter Zeitung" declares the recent assassination of officials in Russia to be the work of a vast secret revolutionary society, which embraces the whole of the Empire and numbers twelve thousand members, who are drawn from every class of society. The society has ample funds and is well organized, and every member of it has sworn to give his life, if required, for the cause.

Lava Streams.

It is scientifically reported that the lava streams from Vesuvius in 1858 were so hot twelve years later that steam was issuing from the cracks and crevices, while the lava beds from the eruption of Etna in 1787 were found to be steaming hot just below the top crust as late as 1840. But still more remarkable are the scientific reports of the volcano Jorullo, in Mexico. This sent forth immense streams of lava in 1759. In 1780 the lava beds were examined by a party of scientists, and it was found that a stick thrust into the crevices instantly ignited, although there was no discomfort experienced in walking on the hardened crust. Again some forty years after the eruption it was visited by scientists and reported to be steaming in many places, and even eighty-seven years after the eruption two columns of steaming vapor were found to be issuing from the crevices. Sometimes the upper crust of such a stream of lava cools so that plants and lichens find precarious growth on the surface, while a few feet beneath the lava is almost redhot.

Her Mistake.

Two elderly women and an old man, evident strangers in the city and who were carefully guarding a huge telescope between them, stood in front of the Grand for an hour the other day, waiting for some kind soul to direct them to the residence of a friend they had come to visit. The noise and bustle of the city evidently confused them, and they stood bewildered, not knowing which way to turn. Finally one of the women plucked up courage to address a man who was passing, saying, "Could you tell me where Will Blank lives?"

"Who?" inquired the man.

"Why, Will Blank. He used to live next door to us at Linton, and we have come in to see him."

The man had to acknowledge he had never even heard of Will Blank, and the old lady turned away with a scornful smile, saying, "Oh, I thought perhaps you lived here."

Baths In Finland.

One of the greatest trials a visitor in Finland has to endure is a Finnish bath. The method of procedure is unique. Divested of outer clothing and attired in a light and airy cotton garment, you are slung in a sort of hammock composed of cord above a large receptacle like the boilers in public laundries. This is almost filled with cold water, into which at the right moment is flung a large redhot brick or piece of iron, which of course causes an overwhelming rush of steam to ascend and almost choke you. Then when that process has gone on sufficiently long you are shaken out of your hammock, immersed in cold water, and after very drastic treatment you resume your raiment, sadder and wiser than before your novel experience.

No Sunset For Five Days.

At the head of the gulf of Bothnia there is a mountain on the summit of which the sun shines perpetually during the five days of June 19, 20, 21, 22 and 23. Every six hours during this season of continual sunshine a steamer leaves Stockholm crowded with visitors anxious to witness the phenomenon. At the same place during winter the sun disappears and is not seen for weeks. Then it comes in sight again for ten, fifteen or twenty minutes, gradually lengthening its stay until finally it stays in sight continuously for upward of 120 hours.

A Question of Color.

Benjamin Constant when painting the portrait of Queen Victoria made the grand ribbon of the Garter, which was part of his illustrious sitter's costume, a certain tone of blue. The queen criticised this part of the picture, but Constant stuck to his color. One day he received from Windsor a little parcel containing the order of the Garter. The queen, fully convinced that she was right, had sent him the ribbon to prove his color sense was wrong. She did not confer the Garter upon him, however.

Albumenized Milk.

Albumenized milk is a most nourishing drink for an invalid, and in hot weather, taken at intervals of three hours between breakfast and a 6 o'clock dinner, would be all the nourishment required by a person in health. Drop the white of one egg in a glass, add two-thirds of a cupful of milk, cover and shake until thoroughly mixed. Strain into another glass and serve.

Both Blunt.

"I'm too practical to do as heroes do in books, Miss Slight, so I'll just ask you bluntly, will you be my wife?"

"No, thank you, Mr. Terse. I myself don't believe in those silly bookish notions, and as the silly heroines always say yes, why, I'll tell you bluntly, no, sir, I won't!"

Just Cries.

"What makes the baby cry?" asked the little visitor.

"Oh," explained Ethel, "our baby doesn't have to have anything to make it cry."

Fair Warning.

He (nervously)—Who is that tramping around overhead?

She—That's papa. He always gets restless toward morning.

Affects One's Imagination.

"When a man gits good an' mad," said Uncle Eben, "he's li'ble to 'magine he's a volcano when he ain' nuffin but a firecracker."

The hide of the hippopotamus in some parts is fully two inches thick.

When Moore Sang.

In singing his own songs Moore altered the arrangement of the airs and sang the first part of each verse twice over at the beginning instead of as a refrain at the end. In that glorious song of his, "Oh, the Light Entrancing!" Moore's own singing of it was a matchless treat. With head upraised, he seemed almost to revel in the fresh morning light as he gazed on the "sight entrancing," and his eye sparkled as "files arrayed with helm and blade" seemed to pass before him, while a deeper feeling awoke as the passion of the song came upon him.

His voice, one of infinite modulation, but of small compass, rose clear and thrilling to its highest pitch as he sang:

> Go ask yon despot whether
>   His armed bands could bring such hands
> And hearts as ours together.

His song was an inspired recitative, and he seemed to improvise as he ran his fingers over the notes, and as the tide of thought came over him it was poured forth in harmonious cadences of exquisite variety. Had he been tied to a chair, with the added doom of a prosy companion, he would have exploded and gone off like a rocket or a bottle of sparkling champagne.

Moorish Slavery.

It would do those good who write passionate articles on Moorish slavery to see the well fed, lazy slave of Wazan lounging in the sun, kiff pipe in mouth and scarcely doing a stroke of work from week's end to week's end. The most ordinary English kitchenmaid would accomplish in a couple of hours what a Wazan slave does in a week. All are free to come and go as they please, but none avails himself of this freedom. The reason is not far to seek. In Wazan they are fed and clothed by the shereefs and on holidays and feast days receive presents of money.

Thus all the necessities of life are found them without their having to work for them, which otherwise they would be obliged to do. Nor is it only the necessities of life that are thus supplied to them free, but they are given each his room to live in and married at the expense of the shereefs to slave women. Their children, by law slaves, are not necessarily so and are often apprenticed to workmen to learn some trade or if they wish are free to seek their fortune in other lands.

A Lucky Escape.

An elephant hunt on the Muar river is described in the Straits Times of Singapore. The beast turned hunter, and the man, fleeing, caught his foot in a rattan creeper and fell. He discharged his rifle, however, and that fortunately frightened the animal away. The Times continues: "It is not every man who has the good luck when pursued by an elephant to be crossing a swamp, so that when the animal has carefully kneaded his prostrate foe and passed along thinking him completely pulverized the said man should come up smiling behind the elephant none the worse for his massage treatment. This actually happened to a well known man in the Straits Settlements."

A Unique Home.

In Sweden and Norway there are several homes for spinsters. One of these at least is as attractive as it is unique. It is a monument to the memory of an exceedingly wealthy old man, who, dying more than 200 years ago, left the major part of his fortune to the old maids among his descendants. A superb home was built, furnished and managed by salaried trustees. It flourished and has continued. Any unmarried woman who can prove blood relationship to the founder of the institution is entitled to admission to the home. She is given a suit of rooms, a servant, private meals and is subject to no rules save such as ordinary good behavior demands.

Music's Power.

Grimes—Yes, I'm fond of music. There's Tinnerman, for instance—

Brady—You don't call his horn blowing music?

Grimes—It has been very enjoyable to me. I got Tinnerman to keep at it night and day, and the result was that I bought the house next door for a thousand dollars less than the man who lived in it asked a week or two before.

Two Sinners.

"It is very wrong to tell a falsehood," said his mother to little Jimmie, who had caught him in one.

"Then we're both offul sinners, ain't we, maw?" queried Jimmie.

"Both! What do you mean?"

"Why, you told Missus Smith yesterday that you hoped she'd call again, an' after she wuz gone you said you wished she'd never come again."

A Money Saver.

"But you are taking considerable risk in letting your young men owe two or three weeks' board."

"Yes, there is some risk," answered the boarding house keeper. "But then, you see, they worry over it so that they lose their appetites, so I save money in the long run."

Earned.

She—He was desperately in love with her. Why, he sent her costly flowers and presents nearly every day for two years.

He—Did he finally win her?

She—No; he earned her.

The Truth Too Much.

"Jedge," said the colored prisoner, "is I expected ter tell de truth?"

"Of course you are."

"Well, then, des go ahead en sentence me fust."

WHAT TO WEAR IN BELTS.

The Shaped Kind Are Most Becoming to the Average Person.

High belts are still popular, but experience teaches that they must be made with care if they are to be worn with the straight front corset. The prettiest belts are made high at the back. The material is cut on the cross and is mounted on the bodice. The belt slopes gradually toward the front. Often the belt does not meet in front by a couple of inches, the intervening space being hidden by a tie of lace or a portion of the vest. For wearing with shirt waists a useful belt is made of crosscut glace or soft satin matching the color of the skirt. It is folded and stitched to a bone about four inches long at the back, and thence on either side the material slopes away to a point. The belt may be tied in a knot and the ends pinned up to the blouse, or it may be fixed with a buckle.

PONGEE DRIVING COAT.

The shaped belt is far more becoming to the figure than the ordinary straight kind. The object of employing crosscut material rather than ribbons is that the former when pulled tight fits so much closer to the figure.

The three-quarter driving cloak shown is of pongee, with a double caped collar and rounded revers of red silk outlined with ecru applique. The cuffs are of the crimson silk, also outlined with the applique.

JUDIC CHOLLET.

THE CRAZE FOR WHITE.

Even Heavy Gowns Are Made of It. Some Novel Ideas.

The fondness for white this season extends even to tennis and outing suits. The white mohair ones are extremely smart and are accompanied by white shoes and white straw or taffeta hats. White storm serge is a favorite material with yachtswomen and trims up well with gold or silver braid and marine buttons. Anchors embroidered on the cuffs or collars add a bit to the jauntiness.

Touches of black velvet to set off a hat or gown are becoming almost indispensable. A bow tied loosely and set on the side of a hat of the palest blue or pink, with the ends hanging slightly over the brim, is extremely effective. Another pretty and novel idea is to wear one of these velvet knots at the nape of the neck on the slightly low neck dresses used for day wear.

OF WHITE LINEN.

JUDIC CHOLLET.

Quite Likely.

Tarantula Jim—What killed Stingaree Bill?

Alkali Ike—Acute pistolitis, I reckon that's what the doctors called it.—Judge.

The Holland Primrose.

There is a plant in Holland, known as the evening primrose, which grows to a height of five or six feet and bears a profusion of large yellow flowers so brilliant that they attract immediate attention, even at a great distance, but the chief peculiarity about the plant is the fact that the flowers, which open just before sunset, burst into bloom so suddenly that they give one the impression of some magical agency. A man who has seen this sudden blooming says it is just as if some one had touched the land with a wand and thus covered it all at once with a golden sheet.

The Man In the Moon.

Life, whether vegetable or animal as we know it, certainly cannot exist under lunar conditions, says the London Mail. The alternations of a long day of considerably over 300 hours' duration, with a night of similar length, accompanied by changes from excessive heat to its antipodes of cold, would alone render all earthly life impossible, but experience has taught even here the adaptability of life to most extreme conditions, and it may be believed that, after all, organic life may have found a congenial home in our "lamp of night."

Money Talks.

Parvenu—I was raised as genteel as you was, an' I'll bet you a hundred on it. Come on now; money talks.

Kostique—If your money talked the way you do, you'd be bankrupt pretty soon.

"What do you mean?"

"It would give itself away."

Stumbled on a Fact.

A minister went recently to preach in a chapel unfamiliar to him. "You must do your best to keep your voice up, sir," said the chapel keeper, "for our church is very unfortunate in its 'agnostic' effects." Whether he meant it or not, it was quite true.

Her Reward.

Other Bridesmaid (sister to the bride)—No; she sent only a pickle fork

A New Theory.

"Papa, were we descended from monkeys?"

"Not all of us, my boy. Some were ascended."

Enthusiasm gives life to what is invisible and interest to what has no immediate action on our comfort in this world.—Mme. de Stael.

Pale, Nervous,
Wild With Pain

FROM A SKELETON OF SKIN AND BONE MRS. EDWARDS WAS BUILT UP TO HEALTH AND STRENGTH BY.

Mrs. R. W. Edwards, 33 McMurray street, Brantford, Ont., describes her case as follows:

"For five years I have suffered more than words can tell from nervous headache, nervous dyspepsia and exhaustion. The pains in my head would at times almost drive me crazy. I could not sleep nights, but would walk the floor in agony, until I fell exhausted and unconscious, and my husband would have to carry me back to bed.

"Sometimes I could take no food for four days, and experienced terrible gnawing sensations in the stomach, had bad taste in the mouth and coated tongue. I was pale, nervous, irritable, easily exhausted, was reduced to a mere skeleton of skin and bone, and my heart would palpitate as though it was about to stop beating. My greatest suffering was caused by the dreadful pains in my head, neck and back, and all this was in spite of the best efforts of three leading doctors of this city.

"For the past nine months I have used Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and for a considerable time I have not experienced a headache or any of the symptoms mentioned above. From a mere skeleton this medicine has built me up in flesh and weight, until now I am strong and well, do my own housework, walk out for two hours without feeling tired and am thoroughly restored to health. Is it any wonder that words fail to express my gratitude for this remarkable cure? You can use this testimonial for the benefit of other sufferers."

It would be impossible, we believe, to produce stronger evidence to prove the wonderful power of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food as a system-builder. It contains the very essence of the most potent restoratives of nature, and is certain to be of benefit to you. 50 cents a box, 6 boxes for $2.50, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

THEY DROVE PIMPLES AWAY.—A face covered with pimples is unsightly. It tells of internal irregularities which should long since have been corrected. The liver and the kidneys are not performing their functions in the healthy way they should, and these pimples are to let you know that the blood protests. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will drive them all away, and will leave the skin clear and clean. Try them, and there will be another witness to their excellence.

HAD LA GRIPPE.—Mr. A. Nickerson, farmer, Dutton, writes; "Last winter I had La Grippe and it left me with a severe pain in the small of my back and hip that used to catch me whenever I tried to climb a fence. This lasted for about two months, when I bought a bottle of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil and used it both internally and externally, morning and evening, for three days, at the expiration of which time I was completely cured."

Their gentle action and good effect on the system really make them a perfect little pill. They please those who use them. Carter's Little Liver Pills may well be termed 'Perfection.'

A good illustration unconsciously conveys the idea that the article advertised is a good one.

AT DEATH'S DOOR.—DYSPEPSIA CONQUERED.—A GREAT MEDICAL TRIUMPH.—Gentlemen,—My medical adviser and others told me I could not possibly live when I commenced to use Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery for Dyspepsia. My case was one of the worst of its kind. For three years I could not eat meat and my weight decreased from 219 to 119 lbs. All the food I took for thirteen months previous to taking the Vegetable Discovery consisted of milk. I am now entirely cured and have regained my usual weight, can eat anything with a keen relish and feel like a new man. I have sold over thirty dozen Vegetable Discovery since it cured me, as I am well-known and people in this section know how low I was, and thought I could not possibly be cured. They are eager to try this grand medicine. It certainly saved my life as I never expected to recover when first I commenced using it. I am not exaggerating anything, but feel glad to be able to contribute this testimonial and trust it may be the means of convincing others of its merit as a certain cure for Dyspepsia.

Signed, JEAN VALCOURT,

Very many persons die annually from cholera and kindred summer complaints, who might have been saved if proper remedies had been used. If attacked do not delay in getting a bottle of Dr. J. D. FOR INFLAMMATION OF THE EYES.—Among the many good qualities which Parmelee's Vegetable Pills possess, besides regulating the digestive organs, is their efficacy in reducing inflammation of the eyes. It has called forth many letters of recommendation from those who were afflicted with this complaint and found a cure in the pills. They affect the nerve centres and the blood in a surprisingly active way, and the result is almost immediately seen.

If you have a cough or cold do not neglect it; many without a trace of that hereditary disease have drifted into a consumptive's grave by neglecting what was only a slight cold. Had they used Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup before it was too late, their lives would have been saved. Mr. A. W. Levy, Mitchell, writes; "I think Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup the best preparation on the market for coughs and severe colds. About six years ago I caught a severe cold which settled on my lungs, and for three months I had a cough. I had a physician attending me, but gradually grew worse until I was on the verge of Consumption, and had given up hopes of being cured, when I was induced to try Bickle's Syrup. Before I had taken one bottle I found myself greatly relieved, and by the time I had finished the second bottle I was completely cured. I always recommend it for severe colds and consumption."

Our Sentiments.

The following, taken from the "Clothier & Haberdasher," are our sentiments exactly. This store will not handle one dollar's worth of "sweat-shop" clothing.

Too many retailers buy a certain quantity of well-made clothing from a reputable manufacturer and then purchase a large quantity of "sweat-shop" goods, simply thrown together. They ask as much for these "sweat-shop" goods as for the genuine tailor-made goods, and even go so far as to claim they are tailor-made. They make a large profit for the time being, but such clothing is sure to harm their business and their reputation. This "sweat-shop" clothing looks well on the surface. It appears sightly as far as the "shell" is concerned, but the "oyster" is wanting. It has neither fit, finish or wear, and no clothier who caters to the better classes can build up a business by selling such stuff.

Daily Intelligencer.

CANADA'S POPULATION

SOME INTERESTING FIGURES FROM THE MONTREAL GAZETTE.

According to the figures of the last census bulletin, there are more men than women in Canada, there is an increase in the number of those living in the marriage state, and a falling off in the number of children.

Of the 5,371,315 people in Canada in April, 1901, 2,751,706 were males and 2,619,609 females, showing an excess of males over females of 132,097, or rather over 5 per cent. By this one woman in every twenty is destined to a life of single blessedness, even if all the men were willing to become the heads of families.

There is a marked difference in the proportion the sexes bear to each other in the different provinces, due to conditions that are well understood. From the west eastward the following shows the division by geographical arrangement:—

	Male.	Female.	Total.
Unorganized territory..	36,272	16,437	52,709
British Columbia....	114,160	64,479	178,657
North west Territories	87,438	71,502	158,940
Manitoba ..	138,504	116,707	255,211
Ontario	1,096,638	1,086,304	2,182,947
Quebec	824,454	824,444	1,648,898
New Brunswick	168,639	162,481	331,120
P. E. Island	51,959	51,300	103,259
	2,751,706	2,619,609	5,371,315

In the Yukon and like regions the men are more than two to one compared with the women; in British Columbia the proportion is almost two to one. In the Territories and Manitoba there is an approach to the normal, which may be said to be reached in Ontario, where the excess of males over females is only about 10,000. Quebec and Prince Edward Island come near to equality, the former showing an excess of only 10, and the latter of 659 males.

The figures of the bulletin relating to marriage give only the number married per 1,000 of the population. Omitting the fractions, this was 341 in 1901, compared with 328 in 1891, 319 in 1881, and 311 in 1871. Apparently there were thirty more married people in every thousand in the country in 1901 than in 1871, and the greatest increase took place in the last decade of the three. By geographical divisions the proportion of married people per thousand is:—

Unorganized territories	294.52
British Columbia	349.93
Northwest Territories	347.88
Manitoba	331.33
Ontario	353.39
Quebec	334.08
New Brunswick	329.35
P. E. Island	303.10
Nova Scotia	331.79

There are variations in these figures that would not be expected, having in regard the proportions of the sexes. It would look for one thing as if the pioneers in the western country included many married men who had left their spouses in the East.

Coming to the ages of the people, they are given in the bulletin as follows:—

0—1	131,580
1—2	123,587
2—3	129,427
3—4	128,906
4—5	129,485
5—9	615,899
10—14	580,339
15—19	552,503
20—24	508,804
25—29	423,385
30—34	363,067
35—39	331,226
40—44	289,858
45—49	239,186
50—54	203,964
55—59	160,671
60—64	140,963
65—69	105,673
70—74	76,380
75—79	47,796
80—84	25,830
85—89	9,838
90—94	2,910
95—over	961
Not given	49,077

In this regard again there are wide differences between the provinces. The country over, 24 persons in each thousand are under one year of age. In the unorganized territories, however, this proportion falls to 3 in each thousand. There are evidently places in the north where it would need Bret Harte's pen to do justice to the communal feelings that might justly be raised by the arrival of a baby in the camp. But even in the more normal surroundings of the East there are distinctions which will create comment. Taking the bulletin's divisions by years the following gives the number per 1,000 of population up to 5 years:—

	0-1 yr.	4-5 yrs
British Columbia	14	17
Manitoba	28	28
New Brunswick	24	24
Nova Scotia	21	23
Ontario	21	21
P. E. Island	19	22
Quebec	30	27
N. W. Territories	29	28
Unorganized territories	3	10

The fractions are omitted from the tabulation, but they do not practically affect the inferences. These are that Quebec's birth rate is the highest among those of the provinces, and that the large mortality noted at times in Montreal and others of the larger centres of population has less effect than some uninformed critics have assumed. Only in Manitoba and the Territories, which seem to be peculiarly favored places for the rearing of children, does the ratio of children of five years of age exceed that in Quebec. Starting with 30 persons to the thousand of one year of age or under in this province, the proportion living between 4 and 5 years falls to 27. In Manitoba and the Territories it is 28. In the eastern provinces, it is 24 in New Brunswick, 23 in Nova Scotia, 22 in Prince Edward Island and 21 in Ontario. Taking the classes up to 9 years of age Quebec leads all the eastern provinces, and it is only when the higher ages are reached, and the people become liable to emigration fever, that Quebec's figures show less satisfactory results. The fuller figures of the completed census should throw further light on the peculiarities here drawn attention to. What is shown so far is interesting enough to give food for reflection to those who are concerned in the movement of population.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Did it ever strike anybody that there was room in Belleville for an agricultural implement factory? The quantity of agricultural implements sold to people who come to Belleville to buy them is problematical, but it is a fact that no less than five companies have agencies in this city, which maintain the paid agents of the company and must do a lucrative business or they would not be continued.

Some people, in some places, would think that a trade which was catered to by five companies must be a fairly good one for local people to look after. Why should not Belleville have an agricultural implement factory, as well as Smith's Falls, Oshawa and other places. Probably because her own people have not the faith in their own city that the people of other places have.

Mr. O. C. Greenleaf, of this city, has received an invitation to attend a "Fairbanks' gathering" at Dedham, Mass., on August 2, 1902. Jonathan Fairebanke, one of the old Pilgrim Fathers, had six children, all coming with him from England in 1633. Mr. Greenleaf is a descendant of old Jonathan Fairebanke, and there are 3,000 other families in America who claim the same distinction. If all the families in full membership, go to the reunion there will be a great crowd and it will be an interesting occasion.

Hamilton Times: The prophets of woe to the King should be given a rear bench along with the Canadian Tory fakirs who used to prophesy that the country would go to the bow-wows if the Liberals were returned to power.

For unblushing effrontery and unadulterated gall that sentence certainly takes the rag off the bush. How were the Tories to know that the Grits, if elected, would cheerfully violate every promise they had made before the 1896 election and steal the Conservative policy, body and bones? If the Grits had lived up to their ante-election promises there would have been misery a-plenty in Canada. Let us be thankful they had not the courage to put these promises in practice. But it is not often one sees a newspaper which glories in the fact that the party it supports is composed of self-confessed prevaricators and spineless cowards, who told a glittering tale to the electors of Canada and then lacked the bravery to carry out their agreement.

Once in a while that much-abused scapegoat of public men and politicians, the newspaper reporter, rises in his might and hits back at his traducers, though as a general thing he is too busy to pay any attention to them. Here is a case where the reporter neatly retaliated, republished from the Japan Weekly Mail:—

"The shorthand reporters of Sydney, N. S. W., having been found fault with for their method of reporting the speeches in the Legislative Council, retaliated by giving the speech of one of the councillors exactly as it was spoken, as follows:—'The reporters—ought not to—the reporters ought not to be the ones to judge of what is important—not to say what should be left out—but—the member can only judge of what is important. As I—as my speeches—as the reports—as the reports—as what I say is reported sometimes, no one—nobody can understand from the reports—what it is—what I mean. So —it strikes me—it has struck me certain matters—things that appear of importance—are sometimes left out—omitted. The reporters — the papers—points are reported—I mean —to make a brief statement—what the paper thinks of interest—is reported.'"

"What about the proposed assessment commission?" said the Timely Topics man to Ald. Chown this morning.

"Well," said the Chairman of the Executive, "I think we ought to do something about it before long. I would like to see the Council take it up. Of course it would cost a little, and the cost would lie at the door of the present Council, while next year's Council would reap the benefit, if there were any, but I don't think we should sidestep it on that account. I would like to see a commission appointed and a proper assessment made, just to see how the city does stand."

Among coronations the most remarkable on record was that of Inez de Castro, the wife of Don Pedro, who succeeded to the throne of Portugal in 1355. Two years before his accession he had privately espoused the lady in question. His father, Alfonso IV., was so indignant that he caused her to be put to death. In 1361, after she had been six years dead and buried, Don Pedro, then King, caused Inez to be exhumed and crowned Queen of Portugal. It must have been a gruesome coronation, but it vindicated Don Pedro's loyalty to his late lamented spouse.

FISHING.

Many Bold Fishermen.

Fishing has almost become a craze in the city and daily large numbers are out in search of the finny tribe. Yesterday afternoon the bay was dotted with fishing craft, and some good catches were reported. Messrs. A. Mott and Hy. Leavens got some beauties at Nigger Island.

The Doctor Had Good Sport.

Dr. Geo. C. Mathison, of Winnipeg, son of Principal Mathison of the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, was at Hastings for a day or two this week. On Wednesday forenoon he caught three maskinonge and four large bass, in less than an hour; one of the former weighed a little over eleven pounds, the others six and three pounds respectively. The large fish was hooked on a light steel rod, fine silk line and small bass hook, and landed on the shore after a struggle over a half-mile run. The Doctor is enjoying over again the pleasures to be had on the Bay of Quinte waters, and on which he revelled as a boy. He goes with Principal Milburn this afternoon, on his sailing yacht down the St. Lawrence for a couple of days, and will have some good fish stories (true ones) to tell his friends in Winnipeg when he goes back.

The final cricket match between Australia and England was won by the latter by one wicket, after an exciting finish. The scores were: Australia 324 and 121; England 183 and 263 for nine wickets.

The Trident, which successfully defended the Seawanhaka Cup, will be placed under the auctioneer's hammer in the near future. Only members of the Royal St. Lawrence Yacht Club are privileged to bid, however.

CHERRY'S BAD HEART

Put him "down and out" so far as working was concerned, but Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart made a man of him again.

Heart weakness and fainting spells were so acute that Wm. Cherry, of Owen Sound, Ont., had to quit work. His sufferings were very great. One day a druggist said: "Cherry, try Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart; it must be a good thing for it has a large sale." He did so, and took five bottles. To-day he takes his place beside the other workmen, and does as big a day's work as any of them, thanks to this great remedy. 52

HARD

TIMES

Come again no more, that's our wish, yours, too. But really times ARE GOOD, they have been improving for some years until now they are real good. Farmers have plenty and a full purse, and they are spending it helping to make times better for us all. It's a common thing nowadays for a farmer to pull out a wallett of ten dollar bills when paying for his wall paper, proud he has the good money to pay for equally good wall papers.

YOU MIGHT NOT BELIEVE US

If we told you our business for July, 1902, just doubled that for July, 1901 — the only time in our history a month doubled that of the preceding year.

IT'S NOT ALTOGETHER

And alone the times that caused it. Our excellent stock and our low prices figured largely in the advance.

WE STARTED

This year to divide our profits with our customers and doubling sales, thereby doubling profits. It keeps us busy every hour, makes us feel good and our customers better. It pays us, and we mean to keep at it. We mean to sell our goods at small advances on cost and make this store noted for low prices and abundant selections.

IN OUR DECORATING OUR PAPER HANGING,

You will find our ability of a very high order—by far the best here, and our prices very modest. We can hang your wall paper away lower in price than others, and we will do the very best work. You cannot imagine our doing you a poor job. I fancy it's not like us or our business. Our motto is always the very best at the very lowest prices. In competition we will gladly run up against anything. Bring in your departmental store samples. You will find we are not afraid of anything you can show—don't blame you for getting goods where you can get cheapest and right here is

A SUBSTANTIAL GRIEVANCE

YUKON TELEGRAPH EMPLOYES DID NOT RECEIVE THE PAY PROMISED.

Montreal, Aug. 13.—Ex-Mayor Prefontaine, M. P., of Montreal, who has just returned from the Yukon, in an interview to-night, being asked regarding the telegraph operators' grievances, said: "The men have certainly some serious grievances, and I hope they will be attended to at once. They were engaged in the East at $100 a month, and at the end of the first year they had not been paid, and the unfortunate part of the business is that they had to borrow money at 2 per cent. a month to send to their families, or to meet other expenses.

"I think these are wrongs that would have evoked high-handed action on the part of the men, had the telegraph line been in the American Yukon instead of in Canada."

Mr. Prefontaine was asked if there was any truth in the report that the was to be elevated to the Senate in place of Hon. R. Masson. He said: "Well, I suppose I would be consulted about the matter. No appointment can be made until the Senate declares the seat vacant, and this cannot take place before next session."

Japan's Fine Navy

Japan is at present showing extreme activity in preparations to prove herself an effective ally of England. The Japanese naval programme of 1896, which is now virtually complete, provided for the construction of four battleships, six large armored cruisers, six protected cruisers, and a large number of torpedo craft. This augmentation of her fleet would have assured for Japan predominance at sea in the Far East had not Russia replied with a still larger programme. And now Japan is evidencing a determination to "go her big rival one better," for she has given orders for the immediate building of four more battleships, two armored cruisers, four other modern cruisers, and a host of torpedo boats and other similar fighting craft. The fulfilment of this extensive programme should fit the island Empire of the east to live up to all the responsibilities she has assumed in her new pact with Britain. The combined navies of Great Britain and Japan are stronger than the navies of Russia, France and Germany combined.

Would a merchant, or a farmer, or a mechanic, say that by putting his Fire Insurance premiums in a bank he would do as well in the event of a fire? But, though he may not burn out he is sure to die, then how much more important that he should have one of those liberal policies of the Imperial Life. Would your family be as comfortable if you were called away and your premiums were in the bank instead of with the Imperial Life. Consult Hunt & Jeffers, opposite the Post Office, and rest better nights.

VIEWS DICKENS'S SUCCESS WITH WONDER.

The publishers of Household Words, the magazine founded by Charles Dickens, have recently issued a special Dickens number of that famous periodical. Various popular authors have contributed their opinions of Dickens. Here are two presenting a curious contrast. Cutcliffe Hyne, author of Captain Kettle and The Lost Continent, expresses his view, says the Critic, as follows: "I cannot manage to read any of Dickens's novels that have come in my way, and as for their success I can only regard it with polite wonder." On the contrary, Anthony Hope says: "I am no critic, and therefore avoid attempting criticism. What I feel and what I think many writers would feel about Dickens, is that his greatness lies primarily not in his humor or his pathos—great as both are in their own kind, though neither is, perhaps, impeccable—but in his enormous creative faculty, the richness of his invention, and the breadth of his observation. Thus he seems to me to have 'size' beyond almost any English novelist. Your appeal must excuse this rough attempt to put a label on the cause of a man's greatness." It would seem that Dickens is doomed to be the subject of an eternal controversy among literary men. As for the public, it simply reads and loves him.

SELECTIONS

BIG LIGHTNING BUGS.

Washington Will Try the South American Cocoyos as Pets.

Cocoyos, the large lightning bugs of Brazil, Cuba and tropical South America that emit a continuous double light of efficient strength and intensity for one to read the time on a watch eighteen inches distant and which the Botocudo Indians of Brazil use for illuminating purposes by confining a number of them in small wicker cages, are soon to be a novelty in the pet line in Washington. Some fifty-eight of these bugs are now on their way from Cuba to this city and on their arrival will be the first ever seen in the capital.

This is one of the results of a demand for something new that is constant on the part of the public and competition among bird and pet animal dealers. The cocoyos are very large, though perfectly harmless, and in many of the South American cities and in Havana the young girls and married ladies wear them in their hair at night, the effect of which is singularly striking and beautiful, especially when the lady wearing them happens to be blessed with more than the usual share of feminine pulchritude.

The cocoyos thus worn illuminate the wearer's countenance and hair in a perfect halo of light. Whether they will be used in this way by local belles remains to be seen. The cocoyos are very hardy and will live for months with little or no attention. Local pet dealers are of the opinion that if kept indoors and in warm places during the winter in the same manner that parrots and canaries are kept the cocoyos can be domesticated and made to increase and multiply in this country. This has proved successful in the case of the little green chameleon lizards of Florida that lay eggs and hatch out breeds as long as they are properly attended to.

Turning of the Year.

The birds cease their song in July. By the end of the first week one misses some voices in the woodland choir, and by the middle of the month most of the leading soloists are silent, the veery, the oriole, the bobolink, the red winged blackbird, the brown thrasher and others. Instead of the sweet melodies of June the orchard rings with the fretful cry of young orioles and the pine grove is noisy with the ceaseless squawk of young crows. The grackles and blackbirds and swallows are gathering in flocks. The first flock of grackles streaming down toward the marshes of a July afternoon for the night roost seems always to trail behind it the semblance of a shadow. It is your first intimation that the tide of the year has turned. One-brooded birds are molting, while a few, like the song sparrow, are still busy with second or third families, and many of the old birds are leading their young forth into the world to complete their education in travel.—Country Life in America.

Marriage by Proxy.

The curious custom of marriage by proxy still exists in Holland. A Dutch gentleman residing in Batavia was recently united by proxy to a young lady residing with her parents at Amsterdam, and, incongruous as it seems to our ideas, the bridegroom's sister represented him and took the young lady in his name "for better or worse." It seems that the young man was tired of waiting for his love any longer, but found that she would not be married unless her mother was present. Her parents would not go to Batavia, and he could not go home. A compromise was happily possible, as they were both Dutch subjects, by the lady being married with her relations around her, and she has now sailed for Java.—Sheffield Globe.

Rome's Birthday.

On April 21, 2,655 years ago, Romulus completed the inclosure on the Palatine hill which was named "Roma." The birthday of the Eternal City has been solemnly commemorated from ancient times. Augustus instituted the secular games—three days of rejoicing concluding with the rendering by a chorus of Roman lads and maids on the capital of the "Carmen Seculare" of Horace. At that time the city counted 1,336,000 inhabitants. This year Rome's birthday was celebrated Sunday, April 27, with an outdoor festival on the ruined Palatine and a general illumination in the evening.

General Sherman's Sharp Retort.

General Sherman could say the most pleasing and tactful things and yet no one could be more sarcastic. He was attending a large reception at Fort Leavenworth once when a youth approached him and said familiarly, "What a great bore these things must be to you, general." "What's that?" asked General Sherman quickly. "I say," repeated the other, "it must be such a bore to you, meeting a lot of people you don't know and making them feel you do remember them." "Yes, yes," replied the general. "Now, for instance, "I don't know who you are."—Leslie's Weekly.

An Odd Wager.

An Austrian is now traversing Switzerland on return from a tour which he undertook for a wager of $4,000. The terms are that he was to wheel before him from one end of Europe to the other a perambulator containing his wife and child. He has been absent twenty months, wearing out thirty-seven pairs of boots.

POWERFUL MECHANISM.

The Picking Up Machine Used In Grappling Ocean Cables.

A truly wonderful piece of mechanism is the "picking up" machine used in all grappling and cable hoisting operations. It is a powerful variety of the steam winch family, but also a most aristocratic and elaborate member, fitted with gear changing clutches, patent brakes and other ingenious appliances. To give some idea of its capabilities in dry figures it can at slow speed lift twenty-five tons at the rate of one mile an hour or at fast speed ten tons at the rate of four miles an hour. Moreover, it can be quickly altered and adapted to changing circumstances in speed or lifting weight.

All being made ready, the big grapnel, attached to 700 or 800 fathoms of chain and rope, is passed over the bow sheave, or pulley, and as soon as it reaches bottom the ship is sent slowly ahead. Back and forward across the path of the cable, as pointed out by the friendly marking buoys, we steam. Several times the grapnel catches something, only to lose its hold again, probably an inequality upon the bottom, although a bosun's mate mumbles "mermaids' grottoes," but at last comes a steady strain. Every soul on board hangs over the bow, watching the grimy grapnel rope come steadily up and over the well oiled pulley. At length the grapnel itself appears, holding tight on to the truant.

May Day Custom In Belgium.

The most honored month of the year in Belgium is the month of May, known as the Virgin's month and consecrated to the Virgin Mary. In the province of Liege young maidens have a quaint way of predicting their love affairs this month. A group of girls arrange to meet at sunrise and start to walk through the fields until they come to a hedge, quite unobserved from the highway, where they generally choose a honeysuckle bush beneath the protecting branches of which to perform their mystic operations. Each maiden selects three blades of dew laden grass, the tops of which she cuts to equal length and to each of which she attaches a colored silken thread. Black represents a bachelor, red an unknown lover and green the secret desires of the maiden's heart. Ten days afterward they return to the same spot where they left the blades growing, and that blade of the three chosen which has surpassed the others in height reveals the lover the maiden is destined to have.

The Old Way of Passing Bills.

A document found among the Duke of Rutland's papers at Belvoir castle throws a curious light upon the mode of getting private bills through the house of commons in the days of King Charles II. The case in hand was the divorce bill of John, Lord de Roos, an affair that caused a great deal of gossip in its day. One of his lordship's agents wrote in January, 1667: "On Wednesday last I got six and forty of the house of commons to the Dog tavern, in the palace yard at Westminster, when were present Mr. Attorney General and Mr. George Montagu. As soon as they had dined we carried them all to the house of commons, and they passed the bill, as the committee, without any amendments, and ordered it to be reported the next day."

Shakes That Were Shakes.

Over on the eastern shore of Maryland there was a man who was suffering from a severe case of "shakes," as they call fever and ague in that country. One morning the local physician called on the patient and asked him how he felt.

"N—n—not a bit b—b—etter," was the shaking man's reply.

"Your case is a very peculiar one and hard to take hold of," remarked the doctor sympathetically.

"Yes, th—that's so," remarked the patient, trying to smile. "The c—case sh—sh—shakes so I don't w—wonder you c—c—can't get hold of it."

Their Words Stuck.

When Mark Twain was in Egypt, he one day arranged with a friend to meet him at one of the pyramids. The latter engaged two old but experienced Arabs to guide him to the place. He afterward complained that, although he had some knowledge of their native language, he could not understand anything that his guides had said to him.

"You should have hired younger men," Mr. Clemens told him. "These toothless old fellows talk only gum Arabic."

Captured.

Mabel—I suppose you have heard of sister Lou's marriage. She's taken a flat in Kensington.

Miss Jellus—Yes, I heard she had a flat, but I didn't hear where she had taken him.

The Pleasanter Route to Ruin.

"Prosperity has ruined many a man."

"No doubt, but if I'm given any choice in the matter I'd rather be ruined by prosperity than by adversity. The process is more enjoyable."

Stationary.

"There's no progress about him."

"No? But he's still doing business at the old stand, isn't he?"

"Say, rather, he is doing business at the old stand-still."

His Title.

"If it were customary in this country to confer titles upon men who go in for literature, what would I be?" asked a conceited journalist of his senior.

"Baron of Ideas," was the terse reply.

Some Very Old Pronunciations.

"Laylock," the pronunciation of lilac once very common, has now almost entirely passed away. It is hardly likely to be found in dictionaries or glossaries except such as profess to give provincial variations of spelling. Sixty years ago, however, it was by no means a provincialism or a mark of the uneducated. I well remember that Walter Savage Landor always spoke of "laylocks," as did my own mother and most people of that generation. It belonged to the age, now almost entirely passed away, which called Rome "Room," gold "goold," St. James "St. Jeames," with other variations of sound now deemed vulgar. I have heard my father say that George IV. always spoke of "my loyal city of Lunnon," while "obleeged" and "cowcumber" were heard from the most refined mouths.

I can distinctly remember on the first Sunday in Advent, 1825, hearing the officiating clergyman at St. Mary Woolnoth give out sonorously when reading the first lesson "like a lodge in a garden of cowcumbers," and my dear old rector, Julius Charles Hare, twenty years later adopted the same pronunciation, saying at table, "Obleege by passing the cowcumber." "Vilets," as a dissyllable for violets, was equally common among people of good education.

Merely Symptoms.

"Life is a failure," said the tired looking passenger in a grave and far-away voice. "Man is a fraud, woman a bore, happiness a delusion, friendship a humbug; love is a disease, beauty a deception, marriage a mistake, a wife a trial, a child a nuisance; good is merely hypocrisy; evil is detection. The whole system of existence—life, morality, society, humanity and all that—is a hollow sham. Our boasted wisdom is egotism; generosity is imbecility. There is nothing of any importance but money. Money is everything, and, after all, what is everything? Nothing. Ar-r-r-r-r!"

"Glad to meet you, sir," said the thin little man with the ginger hued whiskers, extending his hand cordially to the speaker. "I have the dyspepsia pretty bad at times myself."

Australia's Stony Desert.

The great stony desert of north Australia was discovered by Captain Sturt, an Australian explorer, in 1845-46. It is north of the river Darling and is about 300 miles long and 100 broad, consisting of sandy dunes or ridges. Its want of trees, except along the creeks, gives the country a sterile appearance. These ridges were probably formed by the joint effect of winds and a gradually retiring sea.

According to Captain Sturt, these waters were gradually lost by evaporation or carried to some undiscovered sea. The only vegetation, growing scantily, are prickly acacias in full bloom, all of stunted growth. Water is scarce except in the creeks which are sheltered, and this is generally brackish. Few travelers care to traverse this inhospitable desert.

Sucking Poisonous Wounds.

Among all people the sucking of the wound has ever been considered the most effective remedy of immediate application for snake bites. In Africa a cupping instrument is employed in emergencies of the kind to draw out the poisoned blood. The ancients followed the same methods, and when Cato made his famous expedition through the serpent infested African deserts he employed many savage snake charmers, called "psylli," to follow the army. They performed many mysterious rites over men who were bitten, but the efficacy of their treatment appears to have consisted in sucking the wounds.

A Musical Beat.

The Courrier de Paris relates that a party of men, sitting in front of a boulevard cafe, were recently approached by a man who had a clarinet in his hand and who said: "Gentlemen, excuse me. I have to make my living, but I suppose you would rather give me a sou not to hear me." They took the hint. He repeated this performance several times till one day one of the men said he felt like hearing a tune and asked him to play. "I am sorry," said the man with the clarinet, "but I cannot play a note."

Not Work to Preach.

A minister who used to preach in Somerville had a little boy. A few days before his father left the city to go to his new parish one of his neighbors said to the little boy, "So your father is going to work in New Bedford, is he?"

The little boy looked up, wondering. "Oh, no," he said, "only preach."

The Dead Sea.

The daily average of 6,500,000 tons of water is received into the Dead sea from the Jordan. There is no outlet, and the level is kept down by evaporation only, which is very rapid because of the intense heat, the dry atmosphere and the dry winds which are constantly blowing down from the gorges between the mountains.

Good Reason.

"I wonder," began the man with the investigating mania, "what makes babies cry?"

"Probably," butted in the practical fellow, "contemplation of some of the things they're in danger of being like when they grow up."

Must Be Good.

Young Husband—My dear Melanie, I must say that this pudding tastes very bad.

Wife—All imagination, dear; it says in the cookery book that it tastes excellent!

FAIRY GOLD

BY BERTHA M. CLAY

—Author of—

"A Woman's Vengeance," "Between Two Loves,"
"Her Second Love," "A Fatal Wedding," Etc.

He paces up and down the room with that flame of excitement and desperate hope thrilling him through, lighting up his handsome weary face into noble beauty, making him appear stronger, taller, comelier, even to his mother's admiring eyes.

"I'll go out to Texas!" he declares. "A fellow I know is going; and in three years or so I can make money enough on a cattle-ranch to be able to give her a home—a humble one, I dare say — in some Western town in the States. That's what Daylesforde—one of our fellows—is going to do. And I believe Joyce will be faithful to me."

He speaks with passionate determination, for there is a look of half-alarm, half-compassion in Lady Nora's eyes as she gazes at him.

"For three or four years?" she questions coldly, though she is cowering in her chair before the bright, hopeful, handsome face. "No, Dallas, nor for three or four months. Joyce Murray is engaged to Lord Dunavon. He proposed to her only last night, and she accepted him; so her mother told me this very morning."

Dallas says never a word for a few minutes. His hand pauses in caressing Lady Nora's little pug, which is perched on the end scroll of the daintily-covered sofa, but that is all.

"I must have that story from Joyce herself," he says at last, in a low hard voice. "I know both you and Mrs. Murray are apt to believe a thing true when you wish it to be so. No offence to either of you!"

He leaves the room without a word more, though he hears Lady Nora saying something to him in anxious pleading tones. Had she gone down upon her knees and implored him to stay, he would have passed her without a word at this moment. He walks down-stairs and into the library, where he waits, standing by the great black marble mantelpiece, until one of the servants brings Miss Murray's maid, who takes a pencilled note from him to her mistress.

He waits on, never stirring hand or foot, nor even uttering a sigh, until the door opens, and fair, false Joyce enters the room, with a smile on her lips and her heart beating very fast.

She is dressed for dinner already in a charming demi-toilette of "wall-flower colored velvet and silk—Mrs. Murray and her daughter are always elegantly dressed, though they are poor—and with her bright hair and fair skin the warm colored velvet contrasts to perfection.

"What is the matter, Dallas?" she asks lightly, though her voice is not steady. "Really, you do send one such imperious messages!"

Dallas Glynne looks her straight in the face, and then, taking her left hand in his — such a dainty, warm little white hand it is!—he points to it.

"Where is your engagement ring, Miss Murray?" he asks quietly; and Joyce reddens—an angry frightened blush.

"What do you mean?" she falters, knowing quite well that she left the splendid half-hoop of diamonds and sapphires in her dressing-case ere she ran down-stairs to her discarded lover.

"I mean Lord Dunavon's ring." Dallas replies, with a faint smile, though his eyes are lurid and his lips dry. "I wanted to congratulate you and to see what is his lordship's taste in jewelry. Nothing hackneyed, I hope?"

"You have heard then?" she questions, hanging her head. "I could not help myself, Dallas," she adds, in a low, trembling voice.

"Of course not! We never can in these little matters," retorts Dallas sneeringly, his eyes blazing with anger, his face pale as death. "But don't you think, before your mamma and my mamma had time to discuss the news, you and I might have had a friendly chat about it—eh?"

"Oh, don't, Dallas!" Joyce bursts into bitter tears. "I know you hate me and despise me; but——"

"My dear child, not at all!" Dallas interrupts, smiling, though he really does both at this moment. "You are a most sensible girl! Dunavon isn't a brilliant sort of fellow exactly"—he is a huge, stupid, good-natured, red-faced man of fifty—"but he'll be a good solid sort of husband, just what you really require. I dare say, even if he doesn't quite satisfy the highest yearnings of your nature for a kindred soul."

"You needn't insult me, Dallas!" Joyce cries, with a little sob. "I am miserable enough without that. I can't help myself, I tell you, and yoy you know I canjt. I have no money—not a shilling, nor a prospect of one; and you have none, nor the prospect of any. There would be no use in our hoping to be anything to each other or waiting for each other. We should only grow poorer and older every day. And you have known that all along as well as I; so there is no use in your blaming me, Dallas!"

"My dear Joyce, don't cry out before you are hurt!" he says, cooly scoffing. "I quite agree with you in every word you have just said, and nobody is blaming anybody. But I sha'n't lare about Lady Dunavon very much, and I did care very much for Joyce Murray; so I will bid her good-bye. One kiss, Joyce—the last! Even Lord Dunavon would forgive me for poaching on his property so far."

She crimsons, casts a frightened glance around, but does not refuse. He puts his arm around her slim waist and draws her close to his heart for the last time. He is smiling, a strange cold smile, but she is weeping.

"When are you to be married, Joyce?" he asks. "Tell me the truth, if you can."

She feels herself humbled in his sight, and bears the taunt.

"At Whitsuntide, I believe," she answers huskily.

"Well, I've a little bit of news for you, Joyce," he says, laughing, with a little pain at his heart. "I don't think your mamma and my mamma have had the chance to discuss my news, and you are the first to hear it. You are to be married at Whitsuntide, Joyce," he says—and he stoops and kisses her as he speaks. "Well, I am to be married at Easter!"

CHAPTER XI.

She is sitting alone, her chamber door shut and locked against every one—sitting in a chair by the window, gazing out with hard, wistful, yearning, unseeing eyes, with the rich silken folds of ivory whiteness, and the filmy veil and frost-like laces of her splendid robe falling about her slender figure and half hiding the dark, girlish head, with its coiled-up wreaths of silky-brown hair, and the pale wistful young face. All about her are the fragrance of exquisite flowers and choice perfumes, the glitter of gold and the gleam of jewels, the glow of the rich hues of velvets and satins, and the snowy contrast of linens and laces.

She is sitting with cold trembling hands tightly clasped together—dreaming of the past two months. It is a dream, troublous, feverish, happy, miserable, bewildered, which has extended over the two months, and which has ended this morning—a dream which seems to begin on a misty, muggy day in December, the last day of the old year, when a girl, one Yolande Dormer, who has been out walking and shopping with her governess, comes home rather tired and depressed in the cold gray twilight, and is told by the butler that a gentleman called a few minutes ago and is in the small drawing-room with Miss Dormer. And then in her dream she hurries up-stairs to the drawing-room door—the little side-door which opens off the back corridor—and then pauses, with her heart beating madly, her limbs trembling, in the deep recess in which the doorway is placed, afraid to enter, afraid of the joy that is about to befall her, trifling with the rich draught of happiness that is sparkling to the brim at her lips. She pauses until mademoiselle's affected "mincing" voice in sarcastic tones startles her.

"What on earth are you waiting there for, ma cherie? You will change your dress of course before you let him see you. Besides, you know, ma cherie, what a dreadful fastidious gentleman is Captain Dallas Glynne!"—with a little sharp, thin laugh.

Without a word, Yolande opens the door and enters the room; and, as she stands in the radiance of the firelight and the lamplight, her face rose-flushed and sparkling, with her hand clasped in Captain Glynne's, she reads in his eyes nothing but pleased surprise and approbation of her—those eyes where most of all on earth she longs to read approval.

Before her mind passes the memory of the unreal, delirious, unsatisfying happiness of that evening and of other evenings, when Captain Glynne dines with them, goes with her and her uncle to the theatre or the English Opera, or with her and aunt Keren to picture-galleries in the afternoons, Miss Dormer's conscience objecting to go to theatres.

And then there comes one evening—the dream is vivid here in scraps which are indelibly burned in on memory's tablets in brightest gold and vividest colors—when there is one of the grand, formal, tiresome dinner-parties which Yolande hates and her aunt Keren dreads with dread unspeakable.

Mrs. Sarjent has been asked, of course, as all the efforts of her relatives, since her enrichment, have been directed towards preventing that good lady from feeling aggrieved or "huffy" on the score of what she calls their "grandeur" and their "titled people." But Mrs. Sarjent has a bad catarrh, and can not appear in a manner satisfactory to herself, her unkind relatives secretly blessing that opportune cold.

Late in the evening Captain Glynne and Yolande find themselves alone in the small drawing-room, which, as it is a bitterly cold, stormy night, has the heavy terra-cotta plush portieres dropped between it and the larger room. Just now, in the warm light of the lamp, with its big amber silk shade and the ruddy glow of the fire, it looks a nest of luxury and comfort.

Captain Glynne is standing by the fireplace, resting his elbow on the lower shelf of the overmantel and closely watching Yolande.

To "make conversation" — for there are sudden lapses which are becoming dreadfully embarrassing — Yolande takes up a little white porcelaine figure—a peasant maiden with a basket on her arm, in which are delicate ferns—and shows it to Captain Glynne, and asks him if he admires it.

For answer he puts his two strong arms over her shoulders and draws her towards him, and stoops down until his heavy moustache touches her cheek.

"Yes, I admire it very much," he replied, smilingly; "I should like to have it. Will you give it to me?"

"With pleasure," Yolande answers, with tremulous gladness of heart and soft swift blushes.

"And I want something else!" Captain Glynne whispers.

"What?" Yolande whispers back again.

"You!" he says, smiling. "Will you be my wife, Yolande?"

No answer comes from frightened, happy Yolande, who can only tremblingly cling to Captain Glynne's arm with both hands.

"Silence gives consent, I suppose, after the immemorial fashion!" he says, with a slight laugh; and he presses his lips to her cheek. And then, after a little pause, in a rather formal manner and deliberate tone, he continues, "I will be a good husband to you, Yolande. You are an amiable girl, and I know you will be an affectionate, faithful wife—you could not be anything else— and I will be a good, faithful husband to you—as Heaven hears me, I will!"

In the dead hour of the night she recollects that he did not once say he loved her—did not once ask if she loved him.

And thenceforward the dream is a troublous whirl of people and things—shops, dressmakers, lawyers, worry—the people not so pleasant as they might be—for old Miss Dormer is always ailing and fidgety and a little cross; uncle Silas, full of business and business cares, is also a little cross; mademoiselle is more than a little cross—indeed she is overbearingly tyrannical and imperious at times, which has to be endured for the sake of the valuable services which, with her cleverness and tact, she impresses upon her employers she alone can render.

There is one scene in which she is dressed in stiff white rustling robes, strangely pure and splendid-looking, such as she has never before worn — a vision of going in the carriage to church with the heavy fragrance of a great bouquet of lilies and white hyacinths almost making her swoon, while her heart beats heavily against her tight-laced satin bodice.

And there, in her dream, she is walking slowly up a long aisle, and seeing in a kaleidoscope, a series of faces and rich dresses, but noticing nobody except her aunt Sarjent, who is prominent in the foreground in emerald velvet and sables, until she sees Captain Glynne's face as he stands before the altar waiting for her, gazing at her with calm critical eyes, without a trace of emotion or embarrassment.

This is the dream that the girl in the white silk robe and the bridal veil has been dreaming; and now she awakes, in her own room in No. 9, Rutland Gardens, to know that the dream is all real, and that her wooing and her wedding, her six weeks' engagement and her bridal morning, are all deeds of the past—done, and never to be undone—and she who was Yolande Dormer, an unwedded girl three hours ago, is Yolande Glynne, a wedded bride, now.

Her maid has gone to fetch her some tea before she begins to change her costume, and Yolande has gladly locked the door against her bridesmaids, relatives, and every one for a few minutes' rest, and to give her time to think.

But now, as she rouses herself and looks at the clock, Yolande sees with dismay that she must hurry to be ready in time, and wishes earnestly she could see Captain Glynne and tell him that she has decided on his suggestion that they should go to Dover by a later train and cross over by the day service the next morning to Paris.

It is not by any means en regle, this reappearing of a bride in her wedding-dress after the breakfast — mademoiselle is sure to tell her of it again; but Yolande feels, in her present excited, overwrought state, as if she would rather like to defy her and her opinions; and, without giving herself time to hesitate, she opens her door, and glides softly down the thickly-carpeted stairs to the door of the small drawing-room where she has last seen Captain Glynne—she does not yet dare to say to herself "my husband."

She folds her rustling, shimmering white robes about her, and pauses irresolute in the deep narrow entry; for the door, though closed, is not shut, and, though Captain Glynne is there, he is not alone, for he is speaking in a low tone.

(To be continued.)

THE TORTURE OF NEW SHOES

A NORTH-WEST LADY TELLS HOW "FOOT ELM" GAVE HER RELIEF AND COMFORT.

It is difficult to get a pair of new shoes that fit the feet perfectly at the outset. Most times they pinch and squeeze the foot, and cause great discomfort until they are 'broken in.' "Foot Elm" shaken in new shoes makes them fit as comfortably as an old pair, prevents the 'drawing' of new leather, and prolongs the life of the shoe.

Here is the experience of Mrs. Francis M, Norrish, Nanton, Alta., N.W.T.: "I have for years suffered with tender feet and it has been perfect torture to wear a pair of new shoes, no matter how soft or easy. I am glad to say "Foot Elm" has given me relief and is a very valuable remedy for tired feet."

"Foot Elm" is 25 cents a box of 18 powders at all druggists, or by mail. Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

We are told that if a man remains all his life a common laborer it is because he was not good for anything else, but what would become of the country if everybody was too wise to work at common labor?

NEW ZEALAND TRACYS CAUGHT.

Outlaw Brothers Run to Earth After Three Months.

Victoria, B.C., Aug. 14.—The Kennifs, the New Zealand outlaws, have been captured after a chase of three months, which cost the Government $20,000.

These brothers, having committed a murder, took to the woods. Two police officers who had pursued them were killed, their bodies burned and the ashes placed in the saddlebags of their horses, with a note stating that other pursuers would be treated similarly.

The horses wandered back to the police camp and the hunt was continued with renewed energy.

The outlaws were surprised in their camp and their horses were shot. The men had to take to the woods on foot. One stumbled and fell as he was running, and was captured without difficulty. The other, being surrounded, surrendered.

Met Violent Death.

Toronto, Aug. 14.—Archibald Fulton, a structural ironworker, was instantly killed yesterday afternoon while working on a new stable for the Canadian Express Company at the corner of Front and Porter streets. With several others, he was engaged in hoisting to the top of the building a heavy iron support. This was being done by the aid of a derrick. When the iron bar was about at the required height, a cog wheel suddenly gave way, and the bar fell. Fulton tried to escape, and, in doing so, tripped and fell. The heavy support fell on his head, crushing it terribly, and killing him instantly. He came from Coldwater, where his mother lives.

Arms and Legs Paralyzed.

Toronto, Aug. 14.—Lying at the General Hospital is William Bentley, a northern Ontario man, suffering from injuries that will likely end in death. Bentley was brought to the city yesterday.

Last Thursday while at work on the farm of John Paget at Sunbridge, Muskoka, he met with the injuries. He was assisting to put up a barn and a heavy beam fell on him. When removed to the house it was found that his both arms and his lower limbs were paralyzed. Bentley is 17 years of age.

Found in Mill Pond.

Collingwood, Aug. 14.—On Thursday morning last a son of Mr. Robert Reid of this town disappeared and no trace of him could be found. He was a lad of about six years of age, and it was supposed that he had gone away with a circus that performed here, that day, but instead, he wandered down to the J. & T. Charlton's mill, where his body was found yesterday afternoon in the pond, floating amongst the saw logs.

Russia Falls Into Line.

London, Aug. 14.—In a despatch from Brussels the correspondent of The Daily Telegraph says it is affirmed there that negotiations with the powers are likely to result in a special treaty, under the terms of which Russia will recognize the Brussels sugar convention and modify her internal sugar legislation.

Unknown Man Killed.

Bothwell, Aug. 14.—An unknown man, about 45 years old, was killed by a train two miles from here yesterday morning. The dead man is of sandy complexion, and his left hand had been amputated at the wrist.

More Canadian Than Ever.

Montreal, Aug. 14.—Ex-Mayor Raymond Prefontaine, M. P., arrived home yesterday from the Yukon a better Canadian than ever as he expressed it. He believes the Canadian Yukon will in a few years justify the construction of a branch of the Canadian Northern from Edmonton to Dawson City.

Protest in Halton.

Toronto, Aug. 14.—The Conservatives of Halton have filed a protest against the election of John R. Barber, through Bristol, Cawthra & Bayly. They claim the seat for Dr. Nixon and the usual charges are made.

Moros Still Fight.

Manila, Aug. 14.—A small party of Moros surprised an outpost of the 27th Infantry at Camp Vicais Tuesday. Sergeant Foley and Private Carey were killed and Private Vandorn was severely wounded.

DR. PARKIN'S NEW WORK.

He Has Been Selected to Organize the Rhodes Scholarships.

Toronto, Aug. 14.—A cable from London announces that the trustees of the Rhodes scholarships have honored Canada by selecting Mr. G. R. Parkin, C.M.G., head master of Upper Canada College, to organize the scheme and to visit the countries to be benefitted by this educational bequest, under which two hundred picked men are annually to receive a British education.

Dr. Parkin has made it a condition of his acceptance that he shall be given time in which to put Upper Canada College on the best working basis before undertaking his new work. He believes that he will be able to benefit the college greatly in his new sphere.

Dr. Parkin Sails.

GREAT ALTERATION SALE

For the last year we have been inconvenienced considerably for want of space to show our goods, that our business has grown no one will doubt, and in order to keep pace with its rapid growth we must have more room.

To-day the carpenters will remove our rear store and begin work in earnest. The plumbers are with us busy at their part of the job. We have had to remove all our goods in the rear of the cellar and the front part of our store is also to receive special up-to-date touches. What we ask is that the people of Belleville and vicinity will aid us in getting rid of our crowded stock, and for this end we will hold two weeks sale, goods will be sold so cheap that it will startle the whole community.

Come early. Goods sold out will not be replaced during alterations.

McINTOSH BROS.

CELEBRATING DERRY DAY

'PRENTICE BOYS AND BAND WON PRIZES AT KINGSTON.

Kingston, Aug. 13.—The demonstration held in this city on Tuesday last will be remembered as one of the most successful ever held. The addresses at Macdonald Park had to be cut short, because of the field sports. Acting-Mayor White extended a hearty welcome to the visiting lodges, on behalf of the city. He stated that he had been identified with the Orange Order for forty-four years, having become a member in the County of Peterboro.

Ex-Mayor Gaskin, County Master of the Orange Order, also welcomed the visitors to the city. He reiterated what he had said a month ago—that the Roman Catholics were more true to themselves and to the almighty dollar than were the Orangemen. The speaker never went back on Orangeism—he was an Orangemen first, and a party politician afterwards. You don't now hear the question asked, who the Orange Order is going to support, said the Captain. It's how is the Roman Catholic vote going. Capt. Gaskin remarked that there was a dispute as to who was the oldest 'Prentice Boy in Kingston. He himself claimed that honor. In conclusion, the speaker announced that on next July 12th, the Kingston Orangemen would have a monster demonstration here and bring 25,000 outsiders to the city, and show the people of Ontario that they were alive as of yore. A few remarks were also made by Bro. L. A. Cobet.

Brockville, No. 8, P. B., $15, for bringing the largest excursion to the city.

Kingston, 316 L.O.L., box of cigars, for the largest lodge in line.

Bandmaster of Belleville, I.O.O.F. band, a $2 hat, for the best band in line. The 47th Regimental band, of Kingston, which headed the procession, did not compete.

The demonstration was one of the most orderly held in Kingston. Every lodge seemed to be composed of a fine lot of men, young and old. Such demonstrations are welcomed by Roman Catholics as well as Protestants, as they're good for trade.

There's a body of loyal Orangemen at Stella. The steamer Caspian did not call there on Tuesday morning, and the uniformed Orangemen were disappointed. They were not to be beaten, however, and eight or ten of them secured a scow and came down to join in the celebration.

FELL DOWN THE HOLD

LITTLE MISS EVALYN McCARTHY HAD A NARROW ESCAPE.

Miss Evalyn McCarthy, granddaughter of Sir Mackenzie Bowell, was last evening the victim of a painful accident. The little girl was on board the steamer Aletha which was on route home from 12 O'Clock Point, when she became interested in watching the fireman in the boiler room, who was attending to his duties. There is an iron rail about the hold, but the little one's head and body was beneath the rail and she was leaning over when some boy, who was running about, accidentally went against her and she was pitched headlong into the hold, falling a distance of 6 or 7 feet. Master Stanley Newton, son of Chief Newton, jumped down and picked her up and carried her to the cabin. She was in an unconscious condition and remained so for some time. Upon the arrival of the steamer at the wharf the unfortunate victim was placed in a carriage and taken to the family residence, when medical aid was summoned.

An examination revealed the fact that no bones were broken, but the little one passed a very restless night, and this morning the doctor in attendance found indications of slight concussion of the brain. It is hoped, however, that a few days of care and quietness will restore Miss Evalyn to her usual health.

BARRED TWO IMMIGRANTS

UNITED STATES INSPECTOR AT KINGSTON KEEPING EYES OPEN.

Kingston, Ont., Aug. 13.—The United States Government has placed a special immigration agent at this point, and he closely scans all steamers bound for United States ports, for aliens and undesirable emigrants. To-day he stopped two Jews who had purchased tickets for New York. He said that he had information that they had endeavored to enter the United States at other points, but were prevented.

QUESTION ANSWERED.

Yes, August Flower still has the largest sale of any medicine in the civilized world. Your mothers and grandmothers never thought of using anything else for Indigestion or Biliousness. Doctors were scarce, and they seldom heard of Appendicitis, Nervous Prostration or Heart Failure, etc. They used August Flower to clean out the system and stop fermentation of undigested food, regulate the action of the liver, stimulate the nervous and organic action of the system, and that is all they took when feeling dull and bad with headaches and other aches. You only need a few doses of Green's August Flower, in liquid form, to make you satisfied there is nothing serious the matter with you. You can get this reliable remedy at R. Templeton & Co.'s.

Young White Heard From

A Companion With Whom He Left Toronto Returns.

White Had Spent His Wages and Says He Was Afraid to Meet His Father—Remarks About Poison Were Said Jokingly—Could Not Tell on His Friends, So Fled.

Toronto, August 14.—The Evans warehouse mystery is still the theme of conversation, and the hearing from the lad White does not throw any more light upon it.

"Something terrible is going on at the warehouse. I won't tell on my friends; won't make trouble for the boys, but I will never go back to Toronto. I don't know what I will do, but I will get as far away from these parts as I can."

This was the statement of Arnott White, the missing employe of Evans & Sons, who is supposed to hold the key to the mystery surrounding the Front street warehouse, when he parted with William Ridley, the Toronto boy, with whom he fled Monday evening. The two boys had at that time reached Thornton.

Section Man Saw White.

This statement of his companion, coupled with the fact that a section man had stopped them and asked them where they were from and if his name was not Arnott White, and showed them White's picture in The World, so alarmed Ridley that he declared he would go no further and that he was coming back to Toronto. White continued his flight via Hamilton, and declared that he would cross into the States, via Niagara. The boys parted yesterday and White is probably some distance away in the States, if he continued his flight in the direction he intended to go. The young drug clerk shrewdly kept from his companions his route after reaching the States, when he discovered the boy was not going with him.

"Terrible" Things Going On.

William Ridley lives at 35 Huron street and has worked during the past six years at Boeckh's brush factory, on Adelaide street. He quit there a month ago, and declares that he went away with Arnott White with the intention of looking for work. He did not know where they were going. The route was picked out by Arnott White. Ridley declares that when he saw White's picture in the paper and his name in big black type he got scared and asked White what was wrong. Then when White grew moody and finally in a burst of confidence told him that "terrible" things were going on at the warehouse, he recalled what had been said about two of the employes having been murdered and the house robbed and fired, and he became very much frightened and thought the best thing he could do would be to get away from a companion who seemed to be the custodian of such dreadful secrets.

Plans for Flight Arranged.

The plans for their flight had been arranged partially Sunday evening. This was the evening White told his mother he was going to church. The following night the plan was put into execution. Four of the boys were to leave together, though they assert that White planned the movement and said he would supply the money. Two of the gang failed to get away because of the watchfulness of Constable Hodges, who was on duty that evening at Strachan avenue. He saw the four young men acting in a suspicious manner, and just as the freight train was approaching, which the boys intended to spring on, the officer rushed at them. The train was going fast, but White said he was desperate and dived in between the moving cars and grasped the "bumpers." Ridley followed him, but "Rusty" Mulhall and John Ryan were either frightened away by the officers or were afraid to attempt to board a train moving so rapidly, and ran away in the darkness.

Their Plan For Getting Away.

The freight the boys got on was en route to Allandale. Ridley says White thought they would be traced toward the north if they took a train in that direction. Then they could get on a southbound train at Allandale, go to Georgetown and then make the States via Hamilton if they wished. So this was the plan they started to carry out. At the Junction the boys changed their dangerous position on the "bumpers" for a more dangerous but less uncomfortable position on the trucks beneath the train.

Sunday night Ridley told the boys to meet him at the foot of Simcoe street the following evening, and he would have the money for the trip. He told the boys at this time that he had spent this two weeks' salary, and was afraid to tell his folks about it, but that he would get more for the trip.

Allandale is due north on the Grand Trunk. Here a through train for Hamilton was caught by the boys, but they were put off at Thornton, after they had gone 15 miles. Here, too, it was that the rupture occurred and they parted.

Gang Known as "Hornets."

The other two boys in the party, John Ryan and "Rusty" Mulhall are members of the gang of tough youngsters known to the people around Denison Park as the "Hornets." Some of the members are rapidly learning a criminal career, but a number of the lads are of good families, and not bad, but associated with the "Hornets" because they can have a good time. Ryan and Mulhall vigorously denied that they were at Strachan avenue Monday evening. They asserted that they had not seen White for weeks. At the same time they knew all about White's plans to leave the city, and were recognized by Constable Hodges when they were trying to board the train with Ridley and White. Ryan and Mulhall are what is termed in street parlance very "wise" and suspected that if they told about being with White Monday night the police would arrest them for they have collided with the officers before.

William Ridley's Story.

After an extended search, Ridley was located at his home, 35 Huron St., in the afternoon. Though Mulhall and Ryan live but two blocks away, and their homes were visited, their families denied all knowledge of Ridley. William Ridley is 17 years old and a bright lad, and has rather a respectable air. He told his story frankly, and seemed anxious to tell al he knew. Further, he was apprehensive that the police wanted to arrest him for being with White.

"I just got home from trip with White," he explained. "We left here Monday evening, about 10.30, and I got back this morning. White seemed to be scared about something, though he did not talk to me much. I have not known White long. Sunday night I was at Denison Park, and John Ryan and White was there. White said he had spent his two weeks' salary and was afraid to go home and tell 'em. He said he thought he could get some more money. If he could not he would have to leave town. Nothing much was said about our going with him, but he asked us to meet him Monday evening at the foot of Simcoe street. We went there about 7.30 and we four—White, Mulhall, Ryan and I—started for Strachan avenue. White said he did not get but $1 and was going away. We then decided to go with him. I don't know what he thought of doing, but I wanted to look for work.

Chased, But Caught Train.

"When we got down to the tracks the train we wanted was passing. Some fellow chased us, but White and I jumped on. Mulhall and Ryan skipped out and we did not see them again.

"I asked him what was going on at the warehouse that was so terrible.

"Oh! don't talk to me about that; that's what I want to get away from!

"That was all. He told me nothing, and after that I didn't want to know. My train came along first and I left White on the side of the railroad looking blue."

White's Knowledge of Crime.

The suspicion is growing hourly in police circles that White knows a great deal about the mystery. Next month the inquest on George Whalley will be taken up again. White knew he was likely to be called, and that the inquest had been adjourned purposely to give the officers an opportunity to look up matters pertaining to certain employes. It is plausible that he anticipated that the information he possessed would get to the ears of the authorities and he would be asked again to tell what he knew, and possibly forced to do so. This affords the strong motive that is necessary to explain his sudden departure for remote points.

AGED PIONEER DEAD

MR. JAS. C. MULLETT, OF MOIRA, DIED AT THE ADVANCED AGE OF 94 YEARS.

Another aged pilgrim has been called from patient suffering on earth to rest and joy in heaven in the death of James C Mullett, of Moira, Hastings County, Ont., who passed away July 26, 1902, aged 94 years and 28 days. He was born at Franton Cotterell, in the County of Gloucester, England, June 28, 1808, and came to Canada with his parents, Wm. and Mary Mullett, in 1821. In 1836 he was married to Hannah, daughter of Samuel and Sarah Baker, who emigrated to Canada from Ireland in 1819. Eight children survive him: Joseph, of Portland, Ore.; William, of Edmonton, Alberta; John L., of Castleton; E. B. and Henry, of Moira, and three daughters: Rachel Denike, of Northam; Mrs. A. P. Ellsworth and Mrs. May Kerr, of Frank Street, Belleville.

The leader of the orchestra may face the music and still be talked about behind his back.

PULLED DOWN YUKON RATES

Canadian Manufacturers Protest to Government.

Association Approves Proposed Railway Commission—Reasonable Subsidy to Steel Shipbuilding Enterprise Advocated—Resolves That Government Be Asked to Appoint Only Practical Men to Foreign Countries as Representatives

Halifax, N.S., Aug. 15.—The Canadian Manufacturers' Association opened their business meeting with the reception of the report of the Railway and Transportation Committee, which contained important recommendations touching the steamship service between Canada and Great Britain, South Africa, Australia, the West Indies and Japan.

Among the things the report said: "A schedule of rates to be charged on the White Pass and Yukon Railway, submitted to the Department of Railways and Canals, was examined carefully by your committee. The rates were very excessive and after carefully considering the circumstances surrounding the carrying of freight to the Yukon district, we could not see that they were justifiable in any particular. The Department of Railways and Canals was communicated with and they were asked to insist upon a very considerable reduction in the rates as submitted. We are pleased to note that the rates were considerably lowered before being ratified by the Government."

Proposed Railway Commission.

Your committee beg to note with satisfaction the action taken by the Dominion Government during the last session in introducing an Act providing for the appointment of a Railway Commission. This bill is the result of a detailed report made to the Department of Railways and Canals by Dr. S. J. McLean, and is a direct response to the needs of the case as pointed out by our association and embodied in a resolution passed at the last annual meeting. The Act, which is a very comprehensive one, is under consideration by your committee, who may have some suggestions to make to the Government and hope that the bill will receive attention at the next session of Parliament.

Continuing the report dealt at length with the importance of fast steamship service between Canada and other countries, and in conclusion urged upon the Government the necessity for further efforts to perfect the different harbors and waterways of Canada, with special reference to the St. Lawrence route, which, as pointed out, was discriminated against by insurance and steamship companies.

Reasonable Subsidy Urged.

Resolutions were adopted asking the Dominion Government to aid the establishment of steel shipbuilding by granting a reasonable subsidy and asking for improvement of Canadian waterways, with special reference to the St. Lawrence.

After a private session of one hour the following resolution was adopted: "That only practical men should be appointed by the Government as commercial representatives to foreign countries and that they should be given an opportunity to get into close touch with Canadian manufacturers."

It was decided that the association should send a representative to South Africa as soon as possible; that a special committee be appointed to consider the Copyright Act, and that a special committee be appointed to take up the labor question and the effect of combinations upon Canadian industries.

The Metric System.

A resolution in favor of adoption of the metric system of weights and measures was adopted and a resolution was passed asking the Dominion Government to appoint a commission to report on technical education.

The association will make efforts to extend the lumber trade in the West Indies.

The following cable was sent to Sir Wm. Mulock: "Canadian Manufacturers in session convey thanks for South African steamship arrangements."

A Watch on Legislation.

The report of the Parliamentary Committee points out that a vigilant watch was made over all legislation introduced into the Federal Parliament and provincial Legislatures during the year, and reviewed the action taken in regard to such proposed acts as affected the manufacturing interests.

In regard to the Alien Labor Act, the report said: "The present Alien Labor Act prohibits the importation of skilled labor into Canada by manufacturers except to perform labor in or upon any new industry not at present established in Canada, provided that skilled labor cannot otherwise be obtained.

No Canadian organizations is more patriotic in the employment of labor than this association, yet cases have arisen where the interests of manufacturers have suffered under the existing law because they were unable to import skilled labor which was absolutely unavailable in Canada. An effort was made by your committee to have this act amended so that skilled labor for any industry, new or already established, might be procured if the labor was not obtainable in Canada. At the suggestion of your committee a bill was introduced by Mr. John Charlton providing to strike out the words "in or upon any new industry not at present established in Canada."
